GREAT BOOKS OF THE WESTERN WORLD

ROBERT MAYNARD HUTCHINS, EDITOR IN CHIEF

37.

HENRY FIELDING

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

The Great Books is published with the editorial advice of the faculties of The University of Chicago

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

Henry Fielding, 1707–1754

Henry Fielding was the eldest of six children born to General Edmund Fielding and Sarah Gould daughter of a judge of the Kings Bench A year after the death of Henrys mother in 1718 Edmund Fielding married again The Goulds were concerned about the estate and care of the children of their line There was much quarreling and finally a long process of litigation The boy Henry was in school at Eton and escaped much of the con fusion but it is recorded that during one of the crises he ran away from Eton to his grand mother s house and that several times while he was staying there he was threatened with sei zure by his father s servants

Fielding left Eton when he was eighteen and for a year or more appears to have roamed about accompanied by a valet In the latter part of 1725 he was living in Lyme and mak ing every effort including an attempt at ab duction to marry a Miss Sarah Andrew a fifteen year-old heiress The young woman s

by an Injured Lover

When he came down to London Fielding improved his acquaintance with his cousin Lady Mary Wortley Montagu and solicited her aid for his first comedy Love in Several Masques It was produced in February 1728 but had no chance of a run because The Beg gar's Opera had opened some two weeks be fore Fielding published it with a dedication to his famous cousin and a preface boasting "that none ever appeared so early upon the stage

Within a month after the adventure of his first play Fielding was enrolled as a student at the University of Leyden where he appears to have pursued his interest in classical litera ture His studies were ended after a year and a half because though his father had promised an allowance as Fielding put it any man might pay it who would Back in London as against being a hackney coachman he chose being a hackney writer Within five years he turned out some fifteen plays in every kind of comic vein They brought him a lively fame one of them Tom Thumb won renown for having made Swift laugh for the second time in his life friends commented on the extraordinary in tensity of his grief on the occasion of her death

pany of comedians enacted his political satires These plays attacking the Walpole ministry were too successful Walpole secured the pas sage of the Licensing Act of 1737 which closed the Haymarket Theatre Fielding did not con test the ordinance he merely commented I left off writing for the stage when I ought to have begun

At the age of thirty and with a family de pendent upon him Fielding enrolled as a law student in the Middle Temple His applica tion to study was so unusual that he was called to the Bar in less than half the ordinary period of probation During the period of his legal studies he met some of his financial obliga tions by editing a newspaper The Champion in which he renewed his quarrel with Walpole

Fielding s life in the nine years after his ad mission to the Bar was harassed by debts and ill health and complicated by his return to ac tive journalism on the occasion of the Jacobite

ern Circuit attend sessions of court and es tablish himself as a lawyer It was in this period that he published three of his four novels Joseph Andrews (1742) Jonathan Wild (1743) and Tom Jones (1749)

In 1749 Fielding was appointed Ju the Peace for Middlesex and Westminster The office had fallen into considerable disre pute the justice received his fees from the litigants whose cases he heard Fielding had to defend himself against charges of venality even though on the contrary by composing instead of inflaming the quarrels of porters and beggars and by refusing to take a shilling from a man who most undoubtedly would not have another I reduced an income of about five hundred pounds of the dirtiest money upon earth to little more than three hundred pounds a considerable portion of which re mained with my clerk Fielding discharged the many and tiresome duties of magistrate with great conscientiousness He deepened the conception of the office by his long investiga tions into riots and robberies and by his de termination to effect reforms in the penal code in crime prevention and in police ef ficiency Returning to writing in this r of legal and social reformer he painstaking legal pamphlets and as a agitating for social reconstruction other newspaper The Covent Gard nal His final novel Amelia was wr vehicle for exposing some of the most evils which at present infect the co

By 1753 Fielding s health was re the last extremity He resigned h tracy tried various specifics including Berkeley s famous tar water and fin sorted to a warmer climate as his only life The protracted discomforts of and curious voyage to Portugal are n ing died He was buried in the tery at Lisbon

CONTENTS

To the Honourable

GEORGE LYTTLETON, Esq.;

One of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury

SIR,

NOTWITHSTANDING your constant refusal when I have asked leave to prefix your name to this dedication, I must still insist on my right to desire your protection of this work

To you, sir, it is owing that this history was ever begun It was by your desire that I first thought of such a composition So many years have since past, that you may have, perhaps forgotten this circumstance but your desires are to me in the nature of commands, and the impression of them is never to be erased from my memory

Again sir, without your assistance this history had never been completed Be not startled at the assertion I do not intend to draw on you the suspicion of being a romance writer I mean no more than that I partly owe to you my existence during great part of the time which I have employed in composing it another matter which it may be necessary to remind you of, since there are certain actions of which you are apt to be extremely forgetful, but of these I hope I shall always have a better memory than yourself

Lastly it is owing to you that the history appears what it now is If there be in this work as some have been pleased to say, a stronger picture of a truly benevolent mind than is to be found in any other, who that knows you and a particular acquaintance of yours will doubt whence that benevolence hath been copied? The world will not, I believe, make me the compliment of thinking I took it from myself I care not this they shall own that the two persons from whom I have taken it, that is to say two of the best and worthiest men in the world, are strongly and zealously my friends I might be contented with this and yet my vanity will add a third to the number, and him one of the greatest and noblest, not only in his rank, but in every public and private virtue But here, whilst my gratitude for the princely benefactions of the Duke of Bedford bursts from my heart, you must forgive my reminding you that it was you who first recommended me to the notice of my benefactor

And what are your objections to the allowance of the honour which I have solicited? Why, you have commended the book so warmly, that you should be ashamed of reading your name before the dedication Indeed, sir, if the book itself doth not make you ashamed of your commendations, nothing that I can here write will, or share since that can neither biass your judgment, nor pervert your integrity An enemy may at any time obtain your commendation by only deserving it, and the utmost which the faults of your friends can hope for, is your silence, or, perhaps, if too severely accused, your gentle palliation

In short sir I suspect that your dislike of public praise is your true objection to granting my request I have observed that you have in common with my two other friends an unwillingness to hear the least mention of your own virtues that as a great poet says of one of you (he might justly have said it of all three) you

Do good by stealth and blush to find it fame

If men of this disposition are as careful to shun applause as others are to escape censure how just must be your apprehension of your character falling into my hands since what would not a man have reason to dread, if attacked by an author who had received from him injuries equal to my obligations to you!

And will not this dread of censure increase in proportion to the matter which a man is conscious of having afforded for it? If his whole life for instance, should have been one continued subject of satire he may well tremble when an incensed satirist takes him in hand Now sir if we apply this to your modest aversion to panegyric how reasonable will your fears of me appear!

Yet surely you might have gratified my ambition from this single confidence, that I shall always prefer the indulgence of your inclinations to the satisfaction of my own A very strong instance of which I shall give you in this address in which I am determined to follow the example of all other dedicators and will consider not what my patron really deserves to have written but what he will be best pleased to read

Without further preface then I here present you with the labours of some years of my life What merit these labours have is already known to yourself If from your favourable judgment I have conceived some esteem for them it cannot be imputed to vanity since I should have agreed as implicitly to your opinion had it been given in favour of any other man s production Negatively at least I may be allowed to say that had I been sensible of any great demerit in the work you are the last person to whose protection I would have ventured to recommend it

From the name of my patron indeed I hope my reader will be convinced at his very entrance on this work that he will find in the whole course of it nothing prejudicial to the cause of religion and virtue nothing inconsistent with the strictest rules of decency nor which can offend even the chastest eye in the perusal On the contrary I declare that to recommend goodness and innocence hath been my sincere endeavour in this history This honest purpose you have been pleased to think I have attained and to say the truth it is likeliest to be attained in books of this kind for an example is a kind of picture in which virtue becomes as it were an object of sight and strikes us with an idea of that loveliness which Plato asserts there is in her naked charms

Besides displaying that beauty of virtue which may attract the admiration of mankind I have attempted to engage a stronger motive to human action in her favour by convincing men that their true interest directs them to a pursuit of her For this purpose I have shown that no acquisitions of guilt can compensate the loss of that solid inward comfort of mind which is the sure companion of innocence and virtue nor can in the least balance the evil of that horror and anxiety which in their room guilt introduces into our bosoms And again that as these acquisitions are in themselves generally worthless so are the means to attain them not only base and infamous but at best incertain and always full of danger Lastly I have endeavoured strongly to inculcate that virtue and innocence can scarce ever be injured but by indiscretion and that it is this alone which often betrays them into the snares that deceit and villainy spread for them A moral which I have the more industriously laboured, as the teaching it is, of all others, the likeliest to be attended with success, since, I believe, it is much easier to make good men wise, than to make bad men good.

For these purposes I have employed all the wit and humour of which I am master in the following history, wherein I have endeavoured to laugh mankind out of their favourite follies and vices. How far I have succeeded in this good attempt, I shall submit to the candid reader, with only two requests: First, that he will not expect to find perfection in this work; and Secondly, that he will excuse some parts of it, if they fall short of that little merit which I hope may appear in others.

I will detain you, sir, no longer. Indeed I have run into a preface, while I professed to write a dedication. But how can it be otherwise? I dare not praise you; and the only means I know of to avoid it, when you are in my thoughts, are either to be entirely silent, or to turn my thoughts to some other subject.

Pardon, therefore, what I have said in this epistle, not only without your consent, but absolutely against it; and give me at least leave, in this public manner, to declare that I am, with the highest respect and gratitude,

Sir,

Your most obliged,

Obedient, humble servant,

HENRY FIELDING

best cook which the present age or perhaps that of Heliogabalus hath produced This great man as is well known to all lovers of polite eating begins at first by setting plain things before his hungry guests rising afterwards by degrees as their stomachs may be supposed to decrease to the very quintessence of sauce and spices In like manner we shall represent human nature at first to the keen appetite of our reader in that more plain and simple manner in which it is found in the country and shall hereafter hash and ragoo it with all the high French and Italian seasoning of affectation and vice which courts and cities afford By these means we doubt not but our reader may be rendered desirous to read on for ever as the great person just abovementioned is supposed to have made some persons eat serve up the first course of our history for their entertainment

Chapter 2

A short description of Squire Allworthy and a fuller account of Miss Bridget Allworthy his sister

In that part of the western division of this kingdom which is commonly called Somersetshire there lately lived and perhaps lives still a gentleman whose name was Allworthy and who might well be called the favourite of both nature and fortune for both of these seem to have contended which should bless and enrich him most In this contention nature may seem to some to have come off victorious, as she bestowed on him many gifts, while fortune had only one gift in her power but in pouring forth this she was so very profuse that others perhaps may think this single endowment to have been more than equivalent to all the various blessings which he enjoyed from nature From the former of these he derived an agreeable person a sound constitution a solid understanding and a benevolent heart by the latter he was decreed to the inheritance of one of the largest estates in the county

This gentleman had in his youth married a very worthy and beautiful woman of whom he had been extremely fond by her he had three children all of whom died in their infancy He had likewise had the misfortune of

burying this beloved wife herself years before the time in which chuses to set out This loss bore like a man of sense and it must be confest he would whimsically on this head and he looked on himself as considered his wife as only him a journey which he should sooner or later, take after her not the least doubt of place where he should never more—sentiments for which raigned by one part of his gion by a second and his He now lived for the most the country with one sister a very tender affection. This somewhat past the age of which in the opinion of the title of old maid may with no assumed She was of that whom you commend rather than beauty, and who are their own sex very good sort good a sort of woman wish to know Indeed she was greeting want of beauty that tioned that perfection if it without contempt and God she was not as handsome one whom perhaps beauty had which she might have otherwise Bridget Allworthy (for that was this lady) very rightly conceived person in a woman to be no better for herself as well as for others discreet was she in her conduct dence was as much on the guard all the snares to apprehend which laid for her whole sex Indeed, I though it may seem reader that this guard of prudence trained bands is always ready where there is the least danger and cowardly deserts those the men are all wishing spreading every net in their stantly attends at the heels of that of women for whom the other sex distant and awful respect and despair, I suppose of success) ture to attack Reader I think proper before any farther together to acquaint intend to digress through this

the more industriously laboured as the teaching it is, of all others, the likeliest to be attended with success, since I believe, it is much easier to make good men wise than to make bad men good

For these purposes I have employed all the wit and humour of which I am master in the following history, wherein I have endeavoured to laugh mankind out of their favourite follies and vices How far I have succeeded in this good attempt, I shall submit to the candid reader, with only two requests First, that he will not expect to find perfection in this work and Secondly, that he will excuse some parts of it, if they fall short of that little merit which I hope may appear in others

I will detain you sir, no longer Indeed I have run into a preface, while I professed to write a dedication But how can it be otherwise? I dare not praise you and the only means I know of to avoid it, when you are in my thoughts, are either to be entirely silent, or to turn my thoughts to some other subject

Pardon, therefore, what I have said in this epistle not only without your consent, but absolutely against it and give me at least leave in this public manner, to declare that I am, with the highest respect and gratitude,

Sir,

Your most obliged,

Obedient, humble servant,

HENRY FIELDING

BOOK I

Containing as much of the birth of the foundling as is necessary or proper to acquaint the reader with in the beginning of this history

Chapter 1

The introduction to the work or bill of fare to the feast

An author ought to consider himself not as a gentleman who gives a private or eleemosynary treat but rather as one who keeps a public ordinary at which all persons are welcome for their money In the former case it is well known that the entertainer provides what fare he pleases and though this should be very indifferent and utterly disagreeable to the taste of his company they must not find any fault nay on the contrary good breeding forces them outwardly to approve and to commend whatever is set before them Now the contrary of this happens to the master of an ordinary Men who p y for what they eat will insist on gratifying their palates however nice and whimsical these may prove and if every thing is not agreeable to their taste will challenge a right to censure to abuse and to d—n their dinner without controul

To prevent therefore giving offence to their customers by any such disappointment it hath been usual with the honest and well meaning host to provide a bill of fare which all persons may peruse at their first entrance into the house and having thence acquainted themselves with the entertainment which they may expect may either stay and regale with what is provided for them or may depart to some other ordinary better accommodated to their taste

As we do not disdain to borrow wit or wis*dom from any man who is capable of lending* us either we have condescended to take a hint from these honest victuallers and shall prefix not only a general bill of fare to our whole entertainment but shall likewise give the reader particular bills to every course which is to be served up in this and the ensuing volumes

The provision then which we have here made is no other than Human Nature Nor do I fear that my sensible reader though most luxurious in his taste will start cavil or be offended because I have named but one article The tortise—as the alderman of Bristol well learned in eating knows by much experience—besides the delicious calipash and calipee contains many different kinds of food nor can the learned reader be ignorant that in human nature though here collected under to exhaust so extensive a subject

An objection may perhaps be apprehended from the more delicate that this dish is too common and vulgar for what else is the subject of all the romances novels plays and poems with which the stalls abound? Many exquisite viands might be rejected by the epicure if it was a sufficient cause for his con as the Bayonne ham or Bologna sausage is to be found in the shops

But the whole to continue the same metaphor consists in the cookery of the author for as Mr Pope tells us—

True wit is nature to advantage drest
What oft was thought but ne'er so well exprest

The same animal which hath the honour to have some part of his flesh eaten at the table of a duke may perhaps be degraded in another part and some of his limbs gibbeted as it were in the vilest stall in town Where then lies the difference between the food of the nobleman and the porter if both are at dinner on the same ox or calf but in the seasoning the dressing the garnishing and the setting forth? Hence the one provokes and incites the most languid appetite and the other turns and palls that which is the sharpest and keenest

In like manner the excellence of the mental entertainment consists less in the subject than in the author s skill in well dressing pleased therefore will the reader that we have in the following closely to one of the highest

best cook which the present age or perhaps that of Heliogabalus hath produced This great man as is well known to all lovers of polite eating begins at first by setting plain things before his hungry guests, rising afterwards by degrees as their stomachs may be supposed to decrease to the very quintessence of sauce and spices In like manner we shall represent human nature at first to the keen appetite of our reader in that more plain and simple manner in which it is found in the country and shall hereafter hash and ragoo it with all the high French and Italian seasoning of affectation and vice which courts and cities afford By these means we doubt not but our reader may be rendered desirous to read on for ever as the great person just abovementioned is supposed to have made some persons eat

Having premised thus much we will now detain those who like our bill of fare no longer from their diet and shall proceed directly to serve up the first course of our history for their entertainment

Chapter 2

A short description of Squire Allworthy and a fuller account of Miss Bridget Allworthy his sister

In that part of the western division of this kingdom which is commonly called Somersetshire there lately lived and perhaps lives still a gentleman whose name was Allworthy and who might well be called the favourite of both nature and fortune for both of these seem to have contended which should bless and enrich him most In this contention nature may seem to some to have come off victorious as she bestowed on him many gifts while fortune had only one gift in her power but in pouring forth this she was so very profuse that others perhaps may think this single endowment to have been more than equivalent to all the various blessings which he enjoyed from nature From the former of these he derived an agreeable person a sound constitution a solid understanding and a benevolent heart by the latter he was decreed to the inheritance of one of the largest estates in the county

This gentleman had in his youth married a very worthy and beautiful woman of whom he had been extremely fond by her he had three children all of whom died in their infancy He had likewise had the misfortune of burying this beloved wife herself about five years before the time in which this history chuses to set out This loss however great he bore like a man of sense and constancy, though it must be confest he would often talk a little whimsically on this head for he sometimes said he looked on himself as still married and considered his wife as only gone a little before him a journey which he should most certainly sooner or later take after her and that he had not the least doubt of meeting her again in a place where he should never part with her more—sentiments for which his sense was arraigned by one part of his neighbours his religion by a second and his sincerity by a third

He now lived for the most part retired in the country with one sister for whom he had a very tender affection This lady was now somewhat past the age of thirty an æra at which in the opinion of the malicious the title of old maid may with no impropriety be assumed She was of that species of women whom you commend rather for good qualities than beauty and who are generally called by their own sex very good sort of women—as good a sort of woman madam as you would wish to know Indeed she was so far from regretting want of beauty that she never mentioned that perfection if it can be called one without contempt and would often thank God she was not as handsome as Miss Such a one whom perhaps beauty had led into errors which she might have otherwise avoided Miss Bridget Allworthy (for that was the name of this lady) very rightly conceived the charms of person in a woman to be no better than snares for herself as well as for others and yet so discreet was she in her conduct that her prudence was as much on the guard as if she had all the snares to apprehend which were ever laid for her whole sex Indeed I have observed though it may seem unaccountable to the reader that this guard of prudence like the trained bands is always readiest to go on duty where there is the least danger It often basely and cowardly deserts those paragons for whom the men are all wishing sighing dying and spreading every net in their power and constantly attends at the heels of that higher order of women for whom the other sex have a more distant and awful respect and whom (from despair I suppose of success) they never venture to attack

Reader I think proper before we proceed any farther together to acquaint thee that I intend to digress through this whole history as often as I see occasion of which I am myself a better judge than any pitiful critic whatever and here I must desire all those critics to mind their own business and not to intermeddle with affairs or works which no ways concern them for till they produce the authority by which they are constituted judges I shall not plead to their jurisdiction

Chapter 3

An odd accident which befel Mr Allworthy at his return home The decent behaviour of Mrs Deborah Wilkins with some proper animadversions on bastards

many that he lived like an honest man owed and was charitable to the poor i e to those who had rather beg than work by giving them the offals from it that he died immensely rich and built an hospital

And true it is that he did many of these things but had he done nothing more I should have left him to have recorded his own merit on some fair freestone over the door of that hospital Matters of a much more extraordinary kind are to be the subject of this history or I should grossly mis-spend my time in writ

droll authors have been facetiously pleased to call The History of England

Mr Allworthy had been absent a full quarter of a year in London on some very particular business though I know not what it was but judge of its importance by its having detained him so long from home whence he had not been absent a month at a time during the space of many years He came to his house very late in the evening and after a short supper with his sister retired much fatigued to his chamber Here having spent some minutes on his knees—a custom which he never broke through on any account—he was preparing to step into bed when upon opening the cloathes to his great surprize he beheld an infant wrapt up in some coarse linen in a sweet and profound sleep between his sheets He stood some time lost in astonishment at this sight but as good nature had always the ascendant in his mind he soon began to be touched with sentiments of compassion for the little wretch before him He then rang his bell and ordered an elderly woman servant to rise immediately and come to him and in the meantime was so eager in contemplating the beauty of innocence appearing in those lively colours with which infancy and sleep always display it that his thoughts were too much engaged to reflect that he was in his shirt when the matron came in She had indeed given her master sufficient time to dress himself for out the servant and though her master for aught she knew lay expiring in an apoplexy or in some other fit

It will not be wondered at that a creature who had so strict a regard to decency in her own person should be shocked at the least deviation from it in another She therefore no sooner opened the door and saw her master standing by the bedside in his shirt with a candle in his hand than she started back in a most terrible fright and might perhaps have swooned away had he not now recollected his being undrest and put an end to her terrors by desiring her to stay without the door till he had thrown some cloathes over his back and was become incapable of shocking the pure eyes of Mrs Deborah Wilkins who though in the fifty second year of her age vowed she had never beheld a man without his coat Sneerers and prophane wits may perhaps laugh at her first fright yet my graver reader when he considers the time of night the summons from her bed and the situation in which she found her master will highly justify and applaud her conduct unless the prudence which must be supposed to attend maidens at that period of life at which Mrs Deborah had arrived should a little lessen his admiration

When Mrs Deborah returned into the room and was acquainted by her master with the finding the little infant her consternation was rather greater than his had been nor could she refrain from crying out with great horror of accent as well as look My good sir! what s to be done? Mr Allworthy answered she must take care of the child that evening and in the morning he would give orders to provide it a nurse "Yes sir" says she hope your worship will send out your w

to take up the hussy its mother, for she must be one of the neighbourhood, and I should be glad to see her committed to Bridewell, and whipt at the cart's tail Indeed such wicked sluts cannot be too severely punished I'll warrant 'tis not her first, by her impudence in laying it to your worship" "In laying it to me, Deborah!" answered Allworthy "I can't think she hath any such design I suppose she hath only taken this method to provide for her child, and truly I am glad she hath not done worse" "I don't know what is worse," cries Deborah, "than for such wicked strumpets to lay their sins at honest men's doors, and though your worship knows your own innocence, yet the world is censorious, and it hath been many an honest man's hap to pass for the father of children he never begot, and if your worship should provide for the child, it may make the people the apter to believe, besides, why should your worship provide for what the parish is obliged to maintain? For my own part, if it was an honest man's child indeed—but for my own part it goes against me to touch these misbegotten wretches, whom I don't look upon as my fellow-creatures Faugh! how it stinks! It doth not smell like a Christian If I might be so bold to give my advice I would have it put in a basket and sent out and laid at the churchwarden's door It is a good night only a little rainy and windy, and if it was well wrapt up and put in a warm basket it is two to one but it lives till it is found in the morning But if it should not, we have discharged our duty in taking proper care of it, and it is, perhaps, better for such creatures to die in a state of innocence than to grow up and imitate their mothers, for nothing better can be expected of them"

There were some strokes in this speech which perhaps would have offended Mr Allworthy, had he strictly attended to it, but he had now got one of his fingers into the infant's hand, which, by its gentle pressure, seeming to implore his assistance had certainly outpleaded the eloquence of Mrs Deborah had it been ten times greater than it was He now gave Mrs Deborah positive orders to take the child to her own bed, and to call up a maid servant to provide it pap, and other things, against it waked He likewise ordered that proper cloathes should be procured for it early in the morning, and that it should be brought to himself as soon as he was stirring

Such was the discernment of Mrs Wilkins, and such the respect she bore her master, under whom she enjoyed a most excellent place, that her scruples gave way to his peremptory commands and she took the child under her arms, without any apparent disgust at the illegality of its birth and declaring it was a sweet little infant, walked off with it to her own chamber

Allworthy here betook himself to those pleasing slumbers which a heart that hungers after goodness is apt to enjoy when thoroughly satisfied As these are possibly sweeter than what are occasioned by any other hearty meal, I should take more pains to display them to the reader, if I knew any air to recommend him to for the procuring such an appetite.

Chapter 4

The reader's neck brought into danger by a description, his escape, and the great condescension of Miss Bridget Allworthy

THE Gothic stile of building could produce nothing nobler than Mr Allworthy's house There was an air of grandeur in it that struck you with awe, and rivalled the beauties of the best Grecian architecture, and it was as commodious within as venerable without

It stood on the south east side of a hill, but nearer the bottom than the top of it, so as to be sheltered from the north east by a grove of old oaks which rose above it in a gradual ascent of near half a mile, and yet high enough to enjoy a most charming prospect of the valley beneath

In the midst of the grove was a fine lawn, sloping down towards the house, near the summit of which rose a plentiful spring, gushing out of a rock covered with firs, and forming a constant cascade of about thirty feet, not carried down a regular flight of steps, but tumbling in a natural fall over the broken and mossy stones till it came to the bottom of the rock then running off in a pebly channel, that with many lesser falls winded along, till it fell into a lake at the foot of the hill about a quarter of a mile below the house on the south side, and which was seen from every room in the front Out of this lake, which filled the center of a beautiful plain, embellished with groups of beeches and elms, and fed with sheep, issued a river, that for several miles was seen to meander through an amazing variety of meadows and woods till it emptied itself into the sea, with a large arm of which and an island beyond it the prospect was closed

On the right of this valley opened another of less extent adorned with several villages and terminated by one of the towers of an old ruined abby grown over with ivy and part of the front which remained still entire

The left hand scene presented the view of a very fine park composed of very unequal ground and agreeably varied with all the diversity that hills lawns wood and water laid out with admirable taste but owing less to art than to nature could give Beyond this the country gradually rose into a ridge of wild mountains the tops of which were above the clouds

It was now the middle of May and the morning was remarkably serene when Mr Allworthy walked forth on the terrace where the dawn opened every minute that lovely prospect we have before described to his eye and now having sent forth streams of light which ascended the blue firmament before him as harbingers preceding his pomp in the full blaze of his majesty rose the sun than which one object alone in this lower creation could be more glorious and that Mr Allworthy himself presented—a human being replete with benevolence meditating in what manner he might render himself most acceptable to his Creator by doing most good to his creatures

Reader take care I have unadvisedly led thee to the top of as high a hill as Mr Allworthy s and how to get thee down without breaking thy neck I do not well know However let us even venture to slide down together for Miss Bridget rings her bell and Mr Allworthy is summoned to breakfast where I must attend and if you please shall be glad of your company

The usual compliments having past between Mr Allworthy and Miss Bridget and the tea being poured out he summoned Mrs Wilkins and told his sister he had a present for her for which she thanked him—imagining I suppose it had been a gown or some ornament for her person Indeed he very often made her such presents and she in complacence to him spent much time in adorning herself I say in complacence to him because she always exprest the greatest contempt for dress and for those ladies who made it their study

But if such was her expectation how was she disappointed when Mrs Wilkins according to the order she had received from her master produced the little infant? Great surprizes as hath been observed are apt to be silent and so was Miss Bridget till her brother began and told her the whole story which as the reader knows it already we shall not repeat

Miss Bridget had always exprest so great a regard for what the ladies are pleased to call virtue and had herself maintained such a severity of character that it was expected especially by Wilkins that she would have vented much bitterness on this occasion and would have voted for sending the child as a kind of noxious animal immediately out of the house but on the contrary she rather took the good natured side of the question intimated some compassion for the helpless little creature and commended her brother s charity in what he had done

Perhaps the reader may account for this behaviour from her condescension to Mr Allworthy when we have informed him that the good man had ended his narrative with owning a resolution to take care of the child and to breed him up as his own for to acknowledge the truth she was always ready to oblige her brother and very seldom if ever contradicted his sentiments She would indeed sometimes make a few observations as that men were headstrong and must have their own way and would wish she had been blest with an independent fortune but these were always vented in a low voice and at the most amounted only to what is called muttering

However what she withheld from the infant she bestowed with the utmost profuseness on the poor unknown mother whom she called an impudent slut a wanton hussy an audacious harlot a wicked jade a vile strumpet with every other appellation with which the tongue of virtue never fails to lash those who bring a disgrace on the sex

A consultation was now entered into how to proceed in order to discover the mother A scrutiny was first made into the characters of the female servants of the house who were all acquitted by Mrs. Wilkins and with apparent merit for she had collected them herself and perhaps it would be difficult to find such another set of scarecrows

The next step was to examine among the inhabitants of the parish and this was referred to Mrs Wilkins who was to enquire with all imaginable diligence and to make her report in the afternoon

Matters being thus settled Mr Allworthy withdrew to his study as was his custom, and left the child to his sister who at his desire had undertaken the care of it

Chapter 5

Containing a few common matters with a very uncommon observation upon them

When her master was departed Mrs Deborah stood silent expecting her cue from Miss Bridget for as to what had past before her master the prudent housekeeper by no means relied upon it as she had often known the sentiments of the lady in her brother s absence to differ greatly from those which she had expressed in his presence Miss Bridget did not however suffer her to continue long in this doubtful situation for having looked some time earnestly at the child as it lay asleep in the lap of Mrs Deborah the good lady could not forbear giving it a hearty kiss at the same time declaring herself wonderfully pleased with its beauty and innocence Mrs Deborah no sooner observed this than she fell to squeezing and kissing with as great raptures as sometimes inspire the sage dame of forty and five towards a youthful and vigorous bridegroom crying out in a shrill voice O the dear little creature!—The dear sweet pretty creature! Well I vow it is as fine a boy as ever was seen!

These exclamations continued till they were interrupted by the lady who now proceeded to execute the commission given her by her brother and gave orders for providing all necessaries for the child appointing a very good room in the house for his nursery Her orders were indeed so liberal that had it been a child of her own she could not have exceeded them but lest the virtuous reader may condemn her for showing too great regard to a base born infant to which all charity is condemned by law as irreligious we think proper to observe that she concluded the whole with saying Since it was her brother s whim to adopt the little brat she supposed little master must be treated with great tenderness For her part she could not help thinking it was an encouragement to vice but that she knew too much of the obstinacy of mankind to oppose any of their ridiculous humours

With reflections of this nature she usually as has been hinted accompanied every act of compliance with her brother s inclinations and surely nothing could more contribute to heighten the merit of this compliance than a declaration that she knew at the same time the folly and unreasonableness of those inclinations to which she submitted Tacit obedience implies no force upon the will and consequently may be easily and without any pains preserved but when a wife a child a relation or a friend performs what we desire with grumbling and reluctance with expressions of dislike and dissatisfaction the manifest difficulty which they undergo must greatly enhance the obligation

As this is one of those deep observations which very few readers can be supposed capable of making themselves I have thought proper to lend them my assistance but this is a favour rarely to be expected in the course of my work Indeed I shall seldom or never so indulge him unless in such instances as this where nothing but the inspiration with which we writers are gifted can possibly enable any one to make the discovery

Chapter 6

Mrs Deborah is introduced into the parish with a simile A short account of Jenny Jones with the difficulties and discouragements which may attend young women in the pursuit of learning

Mrs Deborah having disposed of the child according to the will of her master now prepared to visit those habitations which were supposed to conceal its mother

Not otherwise than when a kite tremendous bird is beheld by the feathered generation soaring aloft and hovering over their heads the amorous dove and every innocent little bird spread wide the alarm and fly trembling to their hiding places He proudly beats the air conscious of his dignity and meditates intended mischief

So when the approach of Mrs Deborah was proclaimed through the street all the inhabitants ran trembling into their houses each matron dreading lest the visit should fall to her lot She with stately steps proudly advances over the field aloft she bears her towering head filled with conceit of her own preeminence and schemes to effect her intended discovery

The sagacious reader will not from this simile imagine these poor people had any apprehension of the design with which Mrs Wilkins was now coming towards them but as the great beauty of the simile may possibly sleep these hundred years till some future commentator shall take this work in hand I think proper to lend the reader a little assistance in this place

It is my intention therefore to signify that as it is the nature of a kite to devour little birds so is it the nature of such persons as Mrs Wilkins to insult and tyrannize over little people This being indeed the means which they use to recompense to themselves their extreme servility and condescension to their superiors for nothing can be more reasonable than that slaves and flatterers should exact the same taxes on all below them which they themselves pay to all above them

Whenever Mrs Deborah had occasion to exert any extraordinary condescension to Miss Bridget and by that means had a little soured her natural disposition it was usual with her to walk forth among these people in order to refine her temper by venting and as it were purging off all ill humours on which account she was by no means a welcome visitant to say the truth she was universally dreaded and hated by them all

On her arrival in this place she went immediately to the habitation of an elderly matron to whom as this matron had the good fortune to resemble herself in the comeliness of her person as well as in her age she had generally been more favourable than to any of the rest To this woman she imparted what had happened and the design upon which she was come thither that morning These two began presently to scrutinize the characters of the several young girls who lived in any of those houses and at last fixed their strongest susp cion on one Jenny Jones who they both agreed was the likeliest person to have committed this fact

This Jenny Jones was no very comely girl either in her face or person but nature had somewhat compensated the want of beauty with what is generally more esteemed by those ladies whose judgment is arrived at years of [illegible] schoolmaster who discovering a great quickness of parts in the girl and an extraordinary desire of learning—for every leisure hour she was always found reading in the books of the scholars—had the good nature or folly—just as the reader pleases to call it—to instruct her so far that she obtained a competent skill in the Latin language and was perhaps as good a scholar as most of the young men of quality of the age This advantage however like most others of an extraordinary kind was attended with some small inconveniences for as it is not to be wondered at that a young woman so well accomplished should have little relish for the society of those whom fortune had made her equals but whom education had rendered so much her inferiors so it is matter of no greater astonishment that this superiority in Jenny together with that behaviour which is its certain consequence should produce among the rest some little envy and ill will towards her and these had perhaps secretly burnt in the bosoms of her neighbours ever since her return from her service

Their envy did not however display itself openly till poor Jenny to the surprize of everybody and to the vexation of all the young women in these parts had publickly shone forth on a Sunday in a new silk gown with a laced cap and other proper appendages to these

The flame which had before lain in embryo now burst forth Jenny had by her learning increased her own pride which none of her neighbours were kind enough to feed with the honour she seemed to demand and now instead of respect and adoration she gained nothing but hatred and abuse by her finery The whole parish declared she could not come honestly by such things and parents instead of wishing their daughters the same felicitated themselves that their children had them not

Hence perhaps it was that the good woman first mentioned the name of this poor girl to Mrs Wilkins but there was another circumstance that confirmed the latter in her suspicion for Jenny had lately been often at Mr Allworthy s house She had officiated as nurse to Miss Bridget in a violent fit of illness and had sat up many nights with that lady besides which she had been seen there the very day before Mr Allworthy s return by Mrs Wilkins herself though that sagacious person had not at first conceived any suspicion of her on that account for as she herself said

She had always esteemed Jenny as a very sober girl (though indeed she knew very little of her) and had rather suspected some of those wanton trollops who gave themselves airs because forsooth they thought themselves hand some

Jenny was now summoned to appear in person before Mrs Deborah which she im mediately did When Mrs Deborah putting on the gravity of a judge with somewhat more than his austerity began an oration with the words You audacious strumpet! in which she proceeded rather to pass sentence on the prisoner than to accuse her

Though Mrs Deborah was fully satisfied of the guilt of Jenny from the reasons above shown it is possible Mr Allworthy might have required some stronger evidence to have convicted her but she saved her accusers any such trouble by freely confessing the whole fact with which she was charged

This confession though delivered rather in terms of contrition as it appeared did not at all mollify Mrs Deborah who now pronounced a second judgment against her in more opprobrious language than before nor had it any better success with the bystanders who were now grown very numerous Many of them cried out, They thought what madam s silk gown would end in others spoke sarcastically of her learning Not a single female was present but found some means of expressing her abhorrence of poor Jenny who bore all very patiently except the malice of one woman who reflected upon her person and tossing up her nose said The man must have a good stomach who would give silk gowns for such sort of trumpery! Jenny replied to this with a bitterness which might have surprized a judicious person who had observed the tranquillity with which she bore all the affronts to her chastity but her patience was perhaps tired out for this is a virtue which is very apt to be fatigued by exercise

Mrs Deborah having succeeded beyond her hopes in her inquiry returned with much triumph and at the appointed hour made a faithful report to Mr Allworthy who was much surprized at the relation for he had heard of the extraordinary parts and improvements of this girl whom he intended to have given in marriage together with a small living to a neighbouring curate His concern therefore on this occasion was at least equal to the satisfaction which appeared in Mrs Deborah and to many readers may seem much more reasonable

Miss Bridget blessed herself and said For her part she should never hereafter entertain a good opinion of any woman For Jenny before this had the happiness of being much in her good graces also

The prudent housekeeper was again dispatched to bring the unhappy culprit before Mr Allworthy in order, not as it was hoped by some and expected by all to be sent to the House of Correction but to receive wholesome admonition and reproof which those who relish that kind of instructive writing may peruse in the next chapter

Chapter 7

Containing such grave matter, that the reader cannot laugh once through the whole chapter, unless peradventure he should laugh at the author

When Jenny appeared Mr Allworthy took her into his study and spoke to her as follows 'You know child it is in my power as a magistrate to punish you very rigorously for what you have done and you will perhaps be the more apt to fear I should execute that power because you have in a manner laid your sins at my door

But perhaps this is one reason which hath determined me to act in a milder manner with you for as no private resentment should ever influence a magistrate I will be so far from considering your having deposited the infant in my house as an aggravation of your offence that I will suppose, in your favour this to have proceeded from a natural affection to your child since you might have some hopes to see it thus better provided for than was in the power of yourself or its wicked father to provide for it I should indeed have been highly offended with you had you exposed the little wretch in the manner of some inhuman mothers who seem no less to have abandoned their humanity than to have parted with their chastity It is the other part of your offence therefore upon which I intend to admonish you I mean the violation of your chastity — a crime however lightly it may be treated by debauched persons very heinous in itself and very dreadful in its consequences

The heinous nature of this offence must be sufficiently apparent to every Christian inasmuch as it is committed in defiance of the laws of our religion and of the express commands of Him who founded that religion

And here its consequences may well be argued to be dreadful for what can be more so than to incur the divine displeasure by the breach of the divine commands and that in an instance against which the highest vengeance is specifically denounced?

But these things though too little I am afraid regarded are so plain that mankind

however they may want to be reminded, can never need information on this head A hint, therefore, to awaken your sense of this matter, shall suffice, for I would inspire you with repentance, and not drive you to desperation

"There are other consequences not indeed so dreadful or replete with horror as this, and yet such, as, if attentively considered must, one would think, deter all of your sex at least from the commission of this crime

'For by it you are rendered infamous and driven, like lepers of old, out of society, at least, from the society of all but wicked and reprobate persons, for no others will associate with you

'If you have fortunes, you are hereby rendered incapable of enjoying them if you have none, you are disabled from acquiring any, nay almost of procuring your sustenance, for no persons of character will receive you into their houses Thus you are often driven by necessity itself into a state of shame and misery, which unavoidably ends in the destruction of both body and soul

'Can any pleasure compensate these evils? Can any temptation have sophistry and delusion strong enough to persuade you to so simple a bargain? Or can any carnal appetite so overpower your reason or so totally lay it asleep, as to prevent your flying with affright and terror from a crime which carries such punishment always with it?

"How base and mean must that woman be, how void of that dignity of mind and decent pride, without which we are not worthy the name of human creatures, who can bear to level herself with the lowest animal and to sacrifice all that is great and noble in her, to own herself the mere tool and bubble of the man Love, however barbarously we may corrupt and pervert its meaning as it is a laudable, is a rational passion and can never be violent but when reciprocal for though the Scripture bids us love our enemies, it means not with that fervent love which we naturally bear towards our friends much less that we should sacrifice to them our lives, and what himself a short trivial, contemptible pleasure, so greatly at her expense! For by the laws of custom, the whole shame with all its dreadful consequences, falls intirely upon her Can love, which always seeks the good of its object, attempt to betray a woman into a bargain where she is so greatly to be the loser? If such corrupter, therefore, should have the impudence to pretend a real affection for her, ought not the woman to regard him not only as an enemy, but as the worst of all enemies, a false, designing treacherous, pretended friend who intends not only to debauch her body, but her understanding at the same time?'

Here Jenny expressing great concern, Allworthy paused a moment, and then proceeded I have talked thus to you, child not to insult you for what is past and irrevocable, but to caution and strengthen you for the future Nor should I have taken this trouble, but from some opinion of your good sense, notwithstanding the dreadful slip you have made, and from some hopes of your hearty repentance, which are founded on the openness and sincerity of your confession If these do not deceive me, I will take care to convey you from this scene of your shame, where you shall by being unknown avoid the punishment which as I have said, is allotted to your crime in this world and I hope, by repentance, you will avoid the much heavier sentence denounced against it in the other Be a good girl the rest of your days, and want shall be no motive to your going astray and believe me, there is more pleasure even in this world in an innocent and virtuous life than in one debauched and vicious

"As to your child, let no thoughts concerning it molest you, I will provide for it in a better manner than you can ever hope And now nothing remains but that you inform me who was the wicked man that seduced you, for my anger against him will be much greater than you have experienced on this occasion"

Jenny now lifted her eyes from the ground and with a modest look and decent voice thus began —

'To know you, sir, and not love your goodness, would be an argument of total want of sense or goodness in any one In me it would amount to the highest ingratitude, not to feel in the most sensible manner, the great degree of goodness you have been pleased to exert on this occasion As to my concern for what is past I know you will spare my blushes repetition My future conduct will

better declare my sentiments than any profes sions I can now make I beg leave to assure you sir, that I take your advice much kinder than your generous offer with which you con cluded it for as you are pleased to say sir, it is an instance of your opinion of my under standing —Here her tears flowing apace she stopped a few moments and then proceeded thus — Indeed sir, your kindness overcomes me but I will endeavour to deserve this good opinion for if I have the understanding you are so kindly pleased to allow me such advice cannot be thrown away upon me I thank you sir heartily for your intended kindness to my poor helpless child he is innocent and I hope will live to be grateful for all the favours you shall show him But now sir, I must on my knees entreat you not to persist in asking me to declare the father of my infant I promise you faithfully you shall one day know but I am under the most solemn ties and engage ments of honour as well as the most religious vows and protestations to conceal his name at this time And I know you too well to think you would desire I should sacrifice either my honour or my religion

Mr Allworthy whom the least mention of those sacred words was sufficient to stagger hesitated a moment before he replied and

)

vain curiosity he had inquired but in order to punish the fellow at least that he might not ignorantly confer favours on the unde serving

As to these points Jenny satisfied him by the most solemn assurances that the man was entirely out of his reach and was neither sub ject to his power nor in any probability of becoming an object of his goodness

The ingenuity of this behaviour had gained Jenny so much credit with this worthy man that he easily believed what she told him for as she had disdained to excuse herself by a lie and had hazarded his further displeasure in her present situation rather than she would forfeit her honour or integrity by betraying another he had but little apprehensions that she would be guilty of falsehood towards him self

He therefore dismissed her with assurances that he would very soon remove her out of the reach of that obloquy she had incurred concluding with some additional documents in which he recommended repentance saying, Consider, child there is One still to reconcile yourself to whose favour is of much greater importance to you than mine

Chapter 8

A dialogue between Mesdames Bridget and Deborah containing more amusement, but less instruction than the former

When Mr Allworthy had retired to his study with Jenny Jones as hath been seen Mrs Bridget with the good housekeeper had betaken themselves to a post next adjoining to the said study whence through the con veyance of a keyhole they sucked in at their ears the instructive lecture delivered by Mr Allworthy together with the answers of Jenny and indeed every other particular which passed in the last chapter

This hole in her brother s study-door was indeed as well known to Mrs Bridget and had been as frequently applied to by her, as the famous hole in the wall was by Thisbe of old This served to many good purposes For by such means Mrs Bridget became often ac quainted with her brother s inclinations with out giving him the trouble of repeating them to her It is true some inconveniences at tended this intercourse and she had some times reason to cry out with Thisbe in Shak spear O wicked wicked wall! For as Mr Allworthy was a justice of peace certain things occurred in examinations concerning bastards, and such like which are apt to give great of fence to the chaste ears of virgins especially *apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio—in English When a woman is not seen to blush she doth not blush at all

Both the good women kept strict silence during the whole scene between Mr Allworthy

clemency of her master and especially against his suffering her to conceal the father of the child which she swore she would have out of her before the sun set

At these words Miss Bridget discomposed her features with a smile (a thing very unusual

* Things which do not appear are to be treated the same as those which do not exist —Coke to her) Not that I would have my reader imagine, that this was one of those wanton smiles which Homer would have you conceive came from Venus, when he calls her the laughter loving goddess, nor was it one of those smiles which Lady Seraphina shoots from the stage box, and which Venus would quit her immortality to be able to equal No, this was rather one of those smiles which might be supposed to have come from the dimpled cheeks of the august Tisiphone, or from one of the misses, her sisters.

With such a smile then, and with a voice sweet as the evening breeze of Boreas in the pleasant month of November, Miss Bridget gently reproved the curiosity of Mrs Deborah, a vice with which it seems the latter was too

She then proceeded to commend the honour and spirit with which Jenny had acted She said, she could not help agreeing with her brother, that there was some merit in the sincerity of her confession, and in her integrity to her lover that she had always thought her a very good girl, and doubted not but she had been seduced by some rascal, who had been infinitely more to blame than herself and very probably had prevailed with her by a promise of marriage, or some other treacherous proceeding

This behaviour of Miss Bridget greatly surprised Mrs Deborah, for this well bred woman seldom opened her lips, either to her master or his sister, till she had first sounded their inclinations, with which her sentiments were always consonant Here, however, she thought she might have launched forth with safety; and the sagacious reader will not perhaps accuse her of want of sufficient forecast in so *doing but will rather admire with what won*derful celerity she tacked about, when she found herself steering a wrong course

'Nay, madam," said this able woman, and truly great politician, 'I must own I cannot help admiring the girl s spirit, as well as your ladyship And as your ladyship says, if she was bourhood are"

'You say true, Deborah," said Miss Bridget. "If the girl had been one of those vain trollops, of which we have too many in the parish, I should have condemned my brother for his lenity towards her. I saw two farmers' daughters at church, the other day, with bare necks I protest they shocked me If wenches will hang out lures for fellows, it is no matter what they suffer I detest such creatures, and it would be much better for them that their faces had been seamed with the smallpox, but I must confess, I never saw any of this wanton behaviour in poor Jenny some artful villain, I am convinced, hath betrayed, nay perhaps forced her, and I pity the poor wretch with all my heart."

Mrs Deborah approved all these sentiments, and the dialogue concluded with a general and bitter invective against beauty, and with many compassionate considerations for all honest plain girls who are deluded by the wicked arts of deceitful men

Chapter 9

Containing matters which will surprize the reader

Jenny returned home well pleased with the reception she had met with from Mr Allworthy whose indulgence to her she industriously made public, partly perhaps as a sacrifice to her own pride, and partly from the more prudent motive of reconciling her neigh when she was convened before the justice, and it was universally apprehended that the House of Correction would have been her fate, though some of the young women cryed out "It was good enough for her," and diverted themselves with the thoughts of her beating hemp in a silk gown, yet there were many others who began to pity her condition but when it was known in what manner Mr Allworthy had behaved, the tide turned against her One said, 'I ll assure you madam hath had good luck" A second cryed, "See what it is to be a favourite!" A third, "Ay, this comes of her learning" Every person made some malicious comment or other on the occasion, and reflected on the partiality of the justice

The behaviour of these people may appear impolitic and ungrateful to the reader, who considers the power and benevolence of Mr.

Allworthy But as to his power he never used it and as to his benevolence he exerted so much that he had thereby disobliged all his neighbours for it is a secret well known to great men that by conferring an obligation they do not always procure a friend but are certain of creating many enemies

Jenny was however by the care and goodness of Mr Allworthy soon removed out of the reach of reproach when malice being no longer able to vent its rage on her began to seek another object of its bitterness and this was no less than Mr Allworthy himself for a whisper soon went abroad that he himself was the father of the foundling child

This supposition so well reconciled his conduct to the general opinion that it met with universal assent and the outcry against his lenity soon began to take another turn and was changed into an invective against his cruelty to the poor girl Very grave and good women exclaimed against men who begot children and then disowned them Nor were there wanting some who after the departure of Jenny insinuated that she was spirited away with a design too black to be mentioned and who gave frequent hints that a legal inquiry ought to be made into the whole matter and that some people should be forced to produce the girl

These calumnies might have probably produced ill consequences at the least might have occasioned some trouble to a person of a more doubtful and suspicious character than Mr Allworthy was blessed with but in his case they had no such effect and being heartily despised by him they served only to afford an innocent amusement to the good gossips of the neighbourhood

But as we cannot possibly divine what complection our reader may be of and as it will be some time before he will hear any more of Jenny we think proper to give him a very early intimation that Mr Allworthy was and will hereafter appear to be absolutely innocent of any criminal intention whatever He had indeed committed no other than an error in politics by tempering justice with mercy and by refusing to gratify the good natured disposition of the mob * with an object for their compassion to work on in the person of poor Jenny whom in order to pity they desired to have seen sacrificed to ruin and infamy by a shameful correction in Bridewell

So far from complying with this their inclination by which all hopes of reformation would have been abolished and even the gate shut against her if her own inclinations should ever hereafter lead her to chuse the road of virtue Mr Allworthy rather chose to encourage the girl to return thither by the only possible means for too true I am afraid it is that many women have become abandoned and have sunk to the last degree of vice by being unable to retrieve the first slip This will be I am afraid always the case while they remain among their former acquaintance it was therefore wisely done by Mr Allworthy to remove Jenny to a place where she might enjoy the pleasure of reputation after having tasted the ill consequences of losing it

To this place therefore wherever it was we will wish her a good journey and for the present take leave of her and of the little foundling her child having matters of much higher importance to communicate to the reader

Chapter 10

The hospitality of Allworthy with a short sketch of the characters of two brothers a doctor and a captain, who were entertained by that gentleman

Neither Mr Allworthy s house nor his heart were shut against any part of mankind but they were both more particularly open to men of merit To say the truth this was the [illegible]

and in these he had much discernment for though he had missed the advantage of a learned education yet being blest with vast natural abilities he had so well profited by a vigorous though late application to letters and by much conversation with men of eminence in this way that he was himself a very competent judge in most kinds of literature

It is no wonder that in an age when this kind of merit is so little in fashion and so slenderly provided for persons possessed of it should very eagerly flock to a place where they were sure of being received with great complaisance indeed where they might enjoy almost the same advantages of a liberal fortune as if they were entitled to it in their own right for Mr Allworthy was not one of those generous persons who are ready most bountifully to bestow meat drink and lodging on men of wit and learning for which they expect no other return but entertainment instruction flattery and subserviency in a word that such persons should be enrolled in the number of domestics without wearing their master's cloathes or receiving wages

* Whenever this word occurs in our writings it intends persons without virtue or sense in all stations and many of the highest rank are often meant by it

On the contrary every person in this house was perfect master of his own time and as he might at his pleasure satisfy all his appetites within the restrictions only of law virtue and religion so he might if his health required or his inclination prompted him to temperance or even to abstinence absent himself from any meals or retire from them whenever he was so disposed without even a sollicitation to the contrary for indeed such sollicitations from superiors always savour very strongly of commands But all here were free from such impertinence not only those whose company is in all other places esteemed a favour from their equality of fortune but even those whose indigent circumstances make such an eleemosynary abode convenient to them and who are therefore less welcome to a great man s table because they stand in need of it

Among others of this kind was Dr Blifil a gentleman who had the misfortune of losing the advantage of great talents by the obstinacy of a father who would breed him to a profession he disliked In obedience to this obstinacy the doctor had in his youth been obliged to study physic or rather to say he studied it for in reality books of this kind were almost the only ones with which he was unacquainted and unfortunately for him the doctor was master of almost every other science but that by which he was to get his bread the consequence of which was that the doctor at the age of forty had no bread to eat

Such a person as this was certain to find a welcome at Mr Allworthy s table to whom misfortunes were ever a recommendation when they were derived from the folly or villany of others and not of the unfortunate person himself Besides this negative merit the doctor had one positive recommendation — this was a great appearance of religion Whether his religion was real or consisted only in appearance I shall not presume to say as I am not possessed of any touchstone which can distinguish the true from the false

If this part of his character pleased Mr Allworthy it delighted Miss Bridget She engaged him in many religious controversies on which occasions she constantly expressed great satisfaction in the doctor s knowledge and not much less in the compliments which he frequently bestowed on her own To say the truth she had read much English divinity and had puzzled more than one of the neighbouring curates Indeed her conversation was so pure her looks so sage and her whole deportment so grave and solemn that she seemed to deserve the name of saint equally with her namesake or with any other female in the Roman kalendar

As sympathies of all kinds are apt to beget love so experience teaches us that none have a more direct tendency this way than those of a religious kind between persons of different sexes The doctor found himself so agreeable to Miss Bridget that he now began to lament an unfortunate accident which had happened to him about ten years before namely his marriage with another woman who was not only still alive but what was worse known to be so by Mr Allworthy This was a fatal bar to that happiness which he otherwise saw sufficient probability of obtaining with this young lady for as to criminal indulgences he certainly never thought of them This was owing either to his religion as is most probable or to the purity of his passion which was fixed on those things which matrimony only and not criminal correspondence could put him in possession of or could give him any title to

He had not long ruminated on these matters before it occurred to his memory that he had a brother who was under no such unhappy incapacity This brother he made no doubt would succeed for he discerned as he thought an inclination to marriage in the lady and the reader perhaps when he hears the brother s qualifications will not blame the confidence which he entertained of his success

This gentleman was about thirty five years of age He was of a middle size and what is called well built He had a scar on his fore-

education for his father had with the same paternal authority we have mentioned before decreed him for holy orders but as the old gentleman died before he was ordained he chose the church military and preferred the king s commission to the bishop s

He had purchased the post of lieutenant of betaken himself to studying the Scriptures and was not a little suspected of an inclination to methodism

It seemed therefore not unlikely that such a person should succeed with a lady of so saint like a disposition and whose inclinations were no otherwise engaged than to the mar riage state in general but why the doctor who certainly had no great friendship for his brother should for his sake think of making so ill a return to the hospitality of Allworthy is a matter not so easy to be accounted for

Is it that some natures delight in evil as others are thought to delight in virtue? Or is there a pleasure in being accessory to a theft when we cannot commit it ourselves? Or lastly (which experience seems to make probable) have we a satisfaction in aggrandizing our families even though we have not the least love or respect for them?

Whether any of these motives operated on the doctor we will not determine but so the fact was He sent for his brother and easily found means to introduce him at Allworthy s as a person who intended only a short visit to himself

The captain had not been in the house a week before the doctor had reason to felicitate himself on his discernment The captain was indeed as great a master of the art of love as Ovid was formerly He had besides received proper hints from his brother which he failed not to improve to the best advantage

Chapter 11

Containing many rules and some examples concerning falling in love descriptions of beauty and other more prudential inducements to matrimony

IT HATH been observed by wise men or women I forget which that all persons are doomed to be in love once in their lives No particular season is as I remember assigned for this but the age at which Miss Bridget was arrived seems to me as proper a period as any to be fixed on for this purpose it often in deed happens much earlier but when it doth not I have observed it seldom or never fails about this time Moreover we may remark that at this season love is of a more serious and steady nature than what sometimes shows itself in the younger parts of life The love of girls is uncertain capricious and so foolish that we cannot always discover what the young lady would be at nay it may almost be doubted whether she always knows this her self

Now we are never at a loss to discern this in women about forty for as such grave serious, and experienced ladies well know their own meaning so it is always very easy for a man of the least sagacity to discover it with the utmost certainty

Miss Bridget is an example of all these observations She had not been many times in the captain s company before she was seized with this passion Nor did she go pining and moping about the house like a puny foolish girl ignorant of her distemper she felt she knew and she enjoyed the pleasing sensation of which as she was certain it was not only innocent but laudable she was neither afraid nor ashamed

And to say the truth there is in all points great difference between the reasonable passion which women at this age conceive towards men and the idle and childish liking of a girl to a boy which is often fixed on the outside only and on things of little value and no duration as on cherry cheeks small lily white hands sloe black eyes flowing locks downy chins dapper shapes nay sometimes on charms more worthless than these and less the party s own such are the outward ornaments of the person for which men are beholden to the taylor the laceman the periwig maker the hatter and the milliner and not to nature Such a passion girls may well be ashamed as they generally are to own either to themselves or others

The love of Miss Bridget was of another kind The captain owed nothing to any of these fop-makers in his dress nor was his per son much more beholden to nature Both his dress and person were such as had they appeared in an assembly or a drawing room would have been the contempt and ridicule of all the fine ladies there The former of these was indeed neat, but plain coarse ill fancied and out of fashion As for the latter we have expressly described it above So far was the skin on his cheeks from being cherry coloured that you could not discern what the natural colour of his cheeks was they being totally overgrown by a black beard which ascended to his eyes His shape and limbs were indeed exactly proportioned but so large that they denoted the strength rather of a ploughman than any other His shoulders were broad beyond all size and the calves of his legs larger than those of a common chairman In short his whole person wanted all that elegance and beauty which is the very reverse of clumsy strength and which so agreeably sets off most of our fine gentlemen being partly owing to the high blood of their an cestors viz blood made of rich sauces and generous wines and partly to an early town education

Though Miss Bridget was a woman of the greatest delicacy of taste yet such were the charms of the captain s conversation that she totally overlooked the defects of his person She imagined and perhaps very wisely that she should enjoy more agreeable minutes with the captain than with a much prettier fellow and forewent the consideration of pleasing her eyes in order to procure herself much more solid satisfaction

The captain no sooner perceived the passion of Miss Bridget in which discovery he was very quick-sighted than he faithfully re turned it The lady no more than her lover was remarkable for beauty I would attempt to draw her picture but that is done already by a more able master Mr Hogarth himself to whom she sat many years ago and hath been lately exhibited by that gentleman in his print of a winter s morning of which she was no improper emblem and may be seen walking (for walk she doth in the print) to Covent Garden church with a starved foot boy be hind carrying her prayer book

The captain likewise very wisely preferred the more solid enjoyments he expected with this lady to the fleeting charms of person He was one of those wise men who regard beauty in the other sex as a very worthless and super ficial qualification or to speak more truly who rather chuse to possess every convenience of life with an ugly woman than a handsome one without any of those conveniences And having a very good appetite and but little nicety he fancied he should play his part very well at the matrimonial banquet without the sauce of beauty

To deal plainly with the reader the captain ever since his arrival, at least from the moment his brother had proposed the match to him long before he had discovered any flat tering symptoms in Miss Bridget had been greatly enamoured that is to say of Mr Allworthy s house and gardens and of his lands tenements and hereditaments of all which the captain was so passionately fond that he would most probably have con tracted marriage with them had he been obliged to have taken the witch of Endor into the bargain

As Mr Allworthy therefore had declared to the doctor that he never intended to take a sec ond wife as his sister was his nearest relation and as the doctor had fished out that his inten tions were to make any child of hers his heir which indeed the law without his interposi tion would have done for him the doctor and his brother thought it an act of benevolence to give being to a human creature who would be so plentifully provided with the most essential means of happiness The whole thoughts therefore of both the brothers were how to engage the affections of this amiable lady

But fortune who is a tender parent and often doth more for her favourite offspring than either they deserve or wish had been so industr ous for the captain that whilst he was laying schemes to execute his purpose the lady conceived the same desires with himself and was on her side contriving how to give the captain proper encouragement without appearing too forward for she was a strict observer of all rules of decorum. In this how ever she easily succeeded for as the captain was always on the look-out no glance gesture or word escaped him

The satisfaction which the captain received from the kind behaviour of Miss Bridget was not a little abated by his apprehens ons of Mr Allworthy for notwithstanding his dis n terested professions the captain imagined he would when he came to act follow the ex ample of the rest of the world and refuse his consent to a match so disadvantageous in point of interest to his sister From what oracle he received this opinion I shall leave the reader to determine but however he cam by it it strangely perplexed him how to late his conduct so as at once to con affection to the lady and to conceal it from her brother He at length resolved to take all private opportunities of making his addresses but in the presence of Mr Allworthy to be as reserved and as much upon his guard as was possible and this conduct was highly approved by the brother

He soon found means to make his addresses in express terms to his mistress from whom he received an answer in the proper form viz. the answer which was first made some thousands of years ago and which hath been handed down by tradition from mother to daughter ever since If I was to translate this into Latin I should render it by these two words Nolo Episcopari a phrase likewise of immemorial use on another occasion

The captain however he came by his knowledge perfectly well understood the lady and very soon after repeated his application with more warmth and earnestness than before and was again according to due form rejected but as he had increased in the eagerness of his desires so the lady with the same propriety decreased in the violence of her refusal

Not to tire the reader by leading him through every scene of this courtship (which though in the opinion of a certain great author it is the pleasantest scene of life to the actor is perhaps as dull and tiresome as any whatever to the audience) the captain made his advances in form the citadel was defended in form and at length in proper form surrendered at discretion

During this whole time which filled the space of near a month the captain preserved great distance of behaviour to his lady in the presence of the brother and the more he succeeded with her in private the more reserved was he in public And as for the lady she had no sooner secured her lover than she behaved to him before company with the highest degree of indifference so that Mr Allworthy must have had the insight of the devil (or perhaps some of his worse qualities) to have entertained the least suspicion of what was going forward

Chapter 12

Containing what the reader may perhaps expect to find in it

In all bargains whether to fight or to marry or concerning any other such business little previous ceremony is required to bring the matter to an issue when both parties are really in earnest This was the case at present, and in less than a month the captain and his lady were man and wife

The great concern now was to break the matter to Mr Allworthy and this was undertaken by the doctor

One day then as Allworthy was walking in his garden the doctor came to him and with great gravity of aspect and all the concern which he could possibly affect in his countenance said I am come, sir to impart an affair to you of the utmost consequence but how shall I mention to you what it almost distracts me to think of! He then launched forth into the most bitter invectives both against men and women accusing the former of having no attachment but to their interest and the latter of being so addicted to vicious inclinations that they could never be safely trusted with one of the other sex Could I said he sir have suspected that a lady of such prudence such judgment such learning should indulge so indiscreet a passion! or could I have imagined that my brother—why do I call him so? he is no longer a brother of mine—"

Indeed but he is' said Allworthy "and a brother of mine too Bless me sir! said the doctor "do you know the shocking affair?

Look ee Mr Blifil answered the good man it hath been my constant maxim in life to make the best of all matters which happen My sister though many years younger than I is at least old enough to be at the age of discretion Had he imposed on a child I should have been more averse to have forgiven him but a woman upwards of thirty must certainly be supposed to know what will make her most happy She hath married a gentleman though perhaps not quite her equal in fortune and if he hath any perfections in her eye which can make up that deficiency I see no reason why I should object to her choice of her own happiness which I no more than herself imagine to consist only in immense wealth I might perhaps from the many declarations I have made of complying with almost any proposal have expected to have been consulted on this occasion but these matters are of a very delicate nature and the scruples of modesty perhaps are not to be overcome As to your brother I have really no anger against him at all He hath no obligations to me nor do I think he was under any necessity of asking my consent since the woman is, as I have said sis juris * and of a proper age to be entirely answerable only to herself for her conduct

The doctor accused Mr Allworthy of too great lenity repeated his accusations against his brother and declared that he should never more be brought either to see or to own him for his relation He then launched forth into [illegible]

bore in that friendship to a hazard

Allworthy thus answered Had I conceived any displeasure against your brother I should never have carried that resentment to the innocent but I assure you I have no such displeasure Your brother appears to me to be a man of sense and honour I do not disapprove the taste of my sister nor will I doubt but that she is equally the object of his inclinations I have always thought love the only foundation of happiness in a married state as it can only produce that high and tender friendship which should always be the cement of this union and in my opinion all those marriages which are contracted from other motives are greatly criminal they are a profanation of a most holy ceremony and generally end in disquiet and misery for surely we may call it a profanation to convert this most sacred institution into a wicked sacrifice to lust or avarice and what better can be said of those matches to which men are induced merely by the consideration of a beautiful person or a great fortune?

To deny that beauty is an agreeable object to the eye and even worthy some admiration would be false and foolish Beautiful is an epithet often used in Scripture and always mentioned with honour It was my own fortune to marry a woman whom the world thought handsome and I can truly say I liked her the better on that account But to make this the sole consideration of marriage to lust after it so violently as to overlook all imperfections for its sake or to require it so absolutely as to reject and disdain religion virtue and sense which are qualities in their nature of much higher perfection only because an elegance of person is wanting this is surely inconsistent either with a wise man or a good Christian And it is perhaps being too charitable to conclude that such persons mean any thing more by their marriage than to please their carnal appetites for the satisfaction of which we are taught it was not ordained

In the next place with respect to fortune Worldly prudence perhaps exacts some consideration on this head nor will I absolutely and altogether condemn it As the world is constituted the demands of a married state and the care of posterity require some little regard to what we call circumstances Yet this provision is greatly increased beyond what is really necessary by folly and vanity which create abundantly more wants than nature Equipage for the wife and large fortunes for the children are by custom enrolled in the list of necessaries and to procure these everything truly solid and sweet and virtuous and religious are neglected and overlooked

And this in many degrees the last and greatest of which seems scarce distinguishable from madness —I mean where persons of immense fortunes contract themselves to those who are and must be disagreeable to them—to fools and knaves—in order to increase an estate already larger even than the demands of their pleasures Surely such persons if they will not be thought mad must own either that they are incapable of tasting the sweets of the tenderest friendship or that they sacrifice the greatest happiness of which they are capable to the vain uncertain and senseless laws of vulgar opinion which owe as well their force as their foundation to folly

Here Allworthy concluded his sermon to which Blifil had listened with the profoundest attention though it cost him some pains to prevent now and then a small discomposure of his muscles He now praised every period of what he had heard with the warmth of a young divine who hath the honour to dine with a bishop the same day in which his lordship hath mounted the pulpit

Chapter 13

Which concludes the first book with an instance of ingratitude which we hope will appear unnatural

The reader from what hath been said may imagine that the reconciliation (if indeed it could be so called) was only matter of form we shall therefore pass it over and hasten to what must surely be thought matter of substance

The doctor had acquainted his brother with what had past between Mr Allworthy and him and added with a smile I promise I paid you off nay I absolutely desi

* Of her own right.

good gentleman not to forgive you for you know after he had made a declaration in your favour I might with safety venture on such a request with a person of his temper and I was willing as well for your sake as for my own to prevent the least possibility of a suspicion

Captain Blifil took not the least notice of this at that time but he afterwards made a very notable use of it

One of the maxims which the devil in a late visit upon earth left to his disciples is when once you are got up to kick the stool from under you In plain English when you have made your fortune by the good offices of a friend you are advised to discard him as soon as you can

Whether the captain acted by this maxim I will not positively determine so far we may confidently say that his actions may be fairly derived from this diabolical principle and indeed it is difficult to assign any other motive to them for no sooner was he possessed of Miss Bridget and reconciled to Allworthy than he began to show a coldness to his brother which increased daily till at length it grew into rudeness and became very visible to every one

The doctor remonstrated to him privately concerning this behaviour but could obtain no other satisfaction than the following plain declaration If you dislike anything in my brother's house sir you know you are at liberty to quit it This strange cruel and almost unaccountable ingratitude in the captain absolutely broke the poor doctor s heart for ingratitude never so thoroughly pierces the human breast as when it proceeds from those in whose behalf we have been guilty of transgressions Reflections on great and good actions however they are received or returned by those in whose favour they are performed always administer some comfort to us but what consolation shall we receive under so biting a calamity as the ungrateful behaviour of our friend when our wounded conscience at the same time flies in our face and upbraids us with having spotted it in the service of one so worthless!

Mr Allworthy himself spoke to the captain in his brother s behalf and desired to know what offence the doctor had committed when the hard hearted villain had the baseness to say that he should never forgive him for the injury which he had endeavoured to do him in his favour which he said he had pumped out of him and was such a cruelty that it ought not to be forgiven

Allworthy spoke in very high terms upon this declaration which he said became not a human creature He expressed indeed so much resentment against an unforgiving temper that the captain at last pretended to be convinced by his arguments and outwardly professed to be reconciled

As for the bride she was now in her honey moon and so passionately fond of her new husband that he never appeared to her to be in the wrong and his displeasure against any person was a sufficient reason for her dislike to the same

The captain at Mr Allworthy's instance was outwardly as we have said reconciled to his brother yet the same rancour remained in his heart and he found so many opportunities of giving him private hints of this, that the house at last grew insupportable to the poor doctor and he chose rather to submit to any inconveniences which he might encounter in the world than longer to bear these cruel and ungrateful insults from a brother for whom he had done so much

He once intended to acquaint Allworthy with the whole but he could not bring himself to submit to the confession by which he must take to his share so great a portion of guilt Besides by how much the worse man he represented his brother to be so much the greater would his own offence appear to Allworthy and so much the greater he had reason to imagine would be his resentment

He feigned therefore some excuse of business for his departure and promised to return soon again and took leave of his brother with so well dissembled content that as the captain played his part to the same perfection Allworthy remained well satisfied with the truth of the reconciliation

The doctor went directly to London where he died soon after of a broken heart a distemper which kills many more than is generally imagined and would have a fair title to a place in the bill of mortality did it not differ in one instance from all other diseases—viz that no physician can cure it

Now upon the most diligent enquiry into the former lives of these two brothers I find besides the cursed and hellish maxim of policy above mentioned another reason for the captain s conduct the captain besides what we have before said of him was a man of great pride and fierceness and had always treated his brother who was of a different complex ion and greatly deficient in both these quali ties with the utmost air of superiority The doctor however had much the larger share of learning and was by many reputed to have the better understanding This the captain knew, and could not bear for though envy is at best a very malignant passion yet is its bitter ness greatly heightened by mixing with con tempt towards the same object and very much afraid I am that whenever an obligation is joined to these two indignation and not grati tude will be the product of all three

BOOK II

Containing scenes of matrimonial felicity in different degrees of life, and various other transactions during the first two years after the marriage between Captain Blifil and Miss Bridget Allworthy

Chapter 1

Showing what kind of a history this is what it is like and what it is not like

Though we have properly enough en titled this our work a history and not a life nor an apology for a life as is more in fashion yet we intend in it rather to pursue the method of those writers who profess to disclose the revolutions of countries than to imitate the painful and voluminous historian who to preserve the regularity of his series thinks himself obliged to fill up as much paper with the detail of months and years in which noth ing remarkable happened as he employs upon those notable æras when the greatest scenes have been transacted on the human stage

Such histories as these do in reality very much resemble a newspaper which consists of just the same number of words whether there be any news in it or not They may likewise be compared to a stage coach which performs constantly the same course empty as well as full The writer indeed seems to think him self obliged to keep even pace with time whose amanuensis he is and like his master travels as slowly through centuries of monkish dul ness when the world seems to have been asleep as through that bright and busy age so nobly distinguished by the excellent Latin poet—

Ad confligendum venient bus undique pœnis
O nnia cum l elli trepido concussa tumultu Horri la contremuere sub altis ætl eris a iris
In d bioque fuit sub utroru n reg ia cadendum Omnibus humanis esset terraque marique

Of which we wish we could give our readers a more adequate translation than that by Mr Creech—

When dreadful Carthage frighted Rome with arms
And all the world was shook with fierce alarms Whilst undecided yet which part should fall Which nation rise the glorious lord of all

Now it is our purpose in the ensuing pages to pursue a contrary method When any ex traordinary scene presents itself (as we trust will often be the case) we shall spare no pains nor paper to open it at large to our reader but if whole years should pass without producing anything worthy his notice we shall not be afraid of a chasm in our history but shall hasten on to matters of consequence and leave such periods of time totally unobserved

These are indeed to be considered as blanks

the public with the many blanks they dispose of but when a great prize happens to be drawn the newspapers are presently filled with it and the world is sure to be informed at whose office it was sold indeed commonly two or three different offices lay claim to the honour of having disposed of it by which I suppose the adventurers are given to understand that certain brokers are in the secrets of Fortune and indeed of her cabinet council

My reader then is not to be surprized if in the course of this work he shall find chapters very short and others altogetl long some that contain only the single day and others that comprise years in a word if my history sometimes seems to stand still and sometimes to fly For all which I shall not look on myself as accountable to any court of critical jurisdiction whatever for as I am in reality the founder of a new province of writing so I am at liberty to make what laws I please therein And these laws my readers whom I consider as my subjects are bound to believe in and to obey with which that they may readily and cheerfully comply I do hereby assure them that I shall principally regard their ease and advantage in all such institutions for I do not like a jure divino * tyrant imagine that they are my slaves or my commodity I am indeed set over them for their own good only and was created for their use and not they for mine Nor do I doubt while I make their interest the great rule of my writings they will unanimously concur in supporting my dignity and in rendering me all the honour I shall deserve or desire

Chapter 2

Religious cautions against showing too much favour to bastards and a great discovery made by Mrs Deborah Wilkins

EIGHT months after the celebration of the nuptials between Captain Blifil and Miss Bridget Allworthy a young lady of great beauty merit and fortune was Miss Bridget by reason of a fright delivered of a fine boy The child was indeed to all appearances perfect but the midwife discovered it was born a month before its full time

Though the birth of an heir by his beloved sister was a circumstance of great joy to Mr Allworthy yet it did not alienate his affections from the little foundling to whom he had been godfather had given his own name of Thomas and whom he had hitherto seldom failed of visiting at least once a day in his nursery

He told his sister if she pleased the new born infant should be bred up together with little Tommy to which she consented though with some little reluctance for she had truly a great complacence for her brother and hence she had always behaved towards the foundling with rather more kindness than ladies of rigid virtue can sometimes bring themselves to show to these children who however innocent may be truly called the living monuments of incontinence

The captain could not so easily bring himself to bear what he condemned as a fault in Mr Allworthy He gave him frequent hints that to adopt the fruits of sin was to give countenance to it He quoted several texts (for he was well read in Scripture) such as, He visits the sins of the fathers upon the children and the fathers have eaten sour grapes and the childrens teeth are set on edge, &c Whence he argued the legality of punishing the crime of the parent on the bastard He said "Though the law did not positively allow the destroying such base born children yet it held them to be the children of nobody that the Church considered them as the children of nobody and that at the best they ought to be brought up to the lowest and vilest offices of the commonwealth

Mr Allworthy answered to all this and much more which the captain had urged on this subject That however guilty the parents might be the children were certainly innocent that as to the texts he had quoted the former of them was a particular denunciation against the Jews for the sin of idolatry of relinquishing and hating their heavenly King and the latter was parabolically spoken and rather intended to denote the certain and necessary consequences of sin than any express judgment against it But to represent the Almighty as avenging the sins of the guilty on the innocent was indecent if not blasphemous as it was to represent him acting against the first principles of natural justice and against the original notions of right and wrong which he himself had implanted in our minds by which we were to judge not only in all matters which were not revealed but even of the truth of revelation itself He said he knew many held the same principles with the captain on this head but he was himself firmly convinced to the contrary and would provide in the same manner for this poor infant as if a legitimate child had had the fortune to have been found in the same place

While the captain was taking all opportunities to press these and such like arguments, to remove the little foundling from Mr Allworthy s of whose fondness for him he began to be jealous Mrs Deborah had made a discovery which in its event threatened at least to prove more fatal to poor Tommy than all the reasonings of the captain

Whether the insatiable curiosity of this good woman had carried her on to that business or whether she did it to confirm herself in the good graces of Mrs Blifil who notwithstand

* By divine right

ing her outward behaviour to the foundling frequently abused the infant in private and her brother too for his fondness to it I will not determine but she had now as she conceived fully detected the father of the foundling

Now as this was a discovery of great consequence it may be necessary to trace it from the fountain head We shall therefore very minutely lay open those previous matters by which it was produced and for that purpose we shall be obliged to reveal all the secrets of a little family with which my reader is at present entirely unacquainted and of which the œconomy was so rare and extraordinary that I fear it will shock the utmost credulity of many married persons

Chapter 3

The description of a domestic government founded upon rules directly contrary to those of Aristotle

My reader may please to remember he hath been informed that Jenny Jones had lived some years with a certain schoolmaster who had at her earnest desire instructed her in Latin in which to do justice to her genius, she had so improved herself that she was become a better scholar than her master

Indeed though this poor man had undertaken a profession to which learning must be allowed necessary this was the least of his commendations He was one of the best natured fellows in the world and was at the same time master of so much pleasantry and humour that he was reputed the wit of the country and all the neighbouring gentlemen were so desirous of his company that as denying was not his talent he spent much time at their houses which he might with more emolument have spent in his school

It may be imagined that a gentleman so qualified and so disposed was in no danger of becoming formidable to the learned seminaries of Eton or Westminster To speak plainly his scholars were divided into two classes in the upper of which was a young gentleman the son of a neighboring squire who at the age of seventeen was just entered into his Syntaxis and in the lower was a second son of the same gentleman who together with seven parish boys was learning to read and write

The stipend arising hence would hardly have indulged the schoolmaster in the luxuries of life had he not added to this office those of clerk and barber and had not Mr Allworthy added to the whole an annuity of ten pounds which the poor man received every Christmas and with which he was enabled to cheer his heart during that sacred festival

Among his other treasures the pedagogue had a wife whom he had married out of Mr Allworthy s kitchen for her fortune viz twenty pounds which she had there amassed

This woman was not very amiable in her person Whether she sat to my friend Hogarth or no I will not determine but she exactly resembled the young woman who is pouring out her mistress s tea in the third picture of the Harlot s Progress She was besides a professed follower of that noble sect founded by Xantippe of old by means of which she became more formidable in the school than her husband for to confess the truth he was never master there or anywhere else in her presence

Though her countenance did not denote much natural sweetness of temper yet this was perhaps somewhat soured by a circumstance which generally poisons matrimonial felicity for children are rightly called the pledges of love and her husband though they had been married nine years had given her no such pledges a default for which he had no excuse either from age or health being not yet thirty years old and what they call a jolly brisk young man

Hence arose another evil which produced no little uneasiness to the poor pedagogue of whom she maintained so constant a jealousy that he durst hardly speak to one woman in the parish for the least degree of civility or even correspondence with any female was sure to bring his wife upon her back and his own

In order to guard herself against matrimonial injuries in her own house as she kept one maid servant she always took care to chuse her out of that order of females whose faces are taken as a kind of security for their virtue of which number Jenny Jones as the reader hath been before informed was one

As the face of this young woman might be called pretty good security of the before-mentioned kind and as her behaviour had been always extremely modest which is the certain consequence of understanding in women she had passed above four years at Mr Partridge s (for that was the schoolmaster s name) without creating the least suspicion in her mistress. Nay she had been treated with uncommon kindness and her mistress h

mitted Mr Partridge to give her those instructions which have been before commemorated

But it is with jealousy as with the gout when such distempers are in the blood there is never any security against their breaking out and that often on the slightest occasions and when least suspected

Thus it happened to Mrs Partridge who had submitted four years to her husband s teaching this young woman and had suffered her often to neglect her work in order to pursue her learning For passing by one day as the girl was reading and her master leaning over her the girl I know not for what reason, suddenly started up from her chair and this was the first time that suspicion ever entered into the head of her mistress

This did not however at that time discover itself but lay lurking in her mind like a concealed enemy who waits for a reinforcement of additional strength before he openly declares himself and proceeds upon hostile operations and such additional strength soon ar potum upon which the poor girl smiled perhaps at the badness of the Latin and when her which she was eating at the head of poor Jenny crying out You impudent whore do you play tricks with my husband before my face? and at the same instant rose from her chair with a knife in her hand with which most probably she would have executed very away for as to the poor husband whether after the example of the maid

This good woman was no more than Othello of a disposition

To make a life of jealousy And follow still the changes of the moon
With fresh suspicions——

With her as well as him, ——To be once in doubt,

Was once to be resolv'd——

she therefore ordered Jenny immediately to pack up her alls and begone for that she was determined she should not sleep that night within her walls

Mr Partridge had profited too much by experience to interpose in a matter of this nature He therefore had recourse to his usual receipt of patience for though he was not a great adept in Latin he remembered and well understood the advice contained in these words

——Leve fit quod bene fertur onus—

in English

A burden becomes lightest when it is well borne—which he had always in his mouth and of which to say the truth he had often occasion to experience the truth

Jenny offered to make protestations of her innocence but the tempest was too strong for her to be heard She then betook herself to the business of packing for which a small quantity their time unpleasantly enough that evening but something or other happened before the next morning which a little abated the fury of Mrs Partridge and she at length admitted her husband to make his excuses to which she gave the readier belief as he had instead of desiring her to recall Jenny professed a satis-

over very pert and obstinate for indeed she and her master had lately had frequent disputes in literature in which as hath been said she was become greatly his superior This however he would by no means allow and as he called her persisting in the right obstinacy he began to hate her with no small inveteracy

Chapter 4

Containing one of the most bloody battles or rather duels that were ever recorded in domestic history

For the reasons mentioned in the pre-should be divulged to none who are not mem bers of that honourable fraternity Mrs Partridge was pretty well satisfied that she had condemned her husband without cause and endeavoured by acts of kindness to make him amends for her false suspicion Her passions were indeed equally violent whichever way they inclined for as she could be extremely angry so could she be altogether as fond

But though these passions ordinarily succeed each other and scarce twenty four hours [illegible]

longer and so was the case at present for she continued longer in a state of affability after this fit of jealousy was ended than her husband had ever known before and had it not been for some little exercises which all the followers of Xantippe are obliged to perform daily Mr Partridge would have enjoyed a perfect serenity of several months

Perfect calms at sea are always suspected by the experienced mariner to be the forerunners of a storm and I know some persons who without being generally the devotees of superstition are apt to apprehend that great and unusual peace or tranquillity will be attended with its opposite For which reason the antients used on such occasions to sacrifice to the goddess Nemesis a deity who was thought by them to look with an invidious eye on human felicity and to have a peculiar delight in overturning it

As we are very far from believing in any such heathen goddess or from encouraging any superstition so we wish Mr John Fr—— or some other such philosopher would bestir himself a little in order to find out the real cause of this sudden transition from good to bad fortune which hath been so often remarked and of which we shall proceed to give an instance for it is our province to relate facts and we shall leave causes to persons of much higher genius

Mankind have always taken great delight in knowing and descanting on the actions of others Hence there have been in all ages and nations certain places set apart for public rendezvous where the curious might meet and satisfy their mutual curiosity Among these the barbers shops have justly borne the pre eminence Among the Greeks barbers news was a proverbial expression and Horace in one of his epistles makes honourable mention of the Roman barbers in the same light.

Those of England are known to be no wise inferior to their Greek or Roman predecessors You there see foreign affairs discussed in a manner little inferior to that with which they are handled in the coffee houses and domestic occurrences are much more largely and freely treated in the former than in the latter But this serves only for the men Now whereas the females of this country especially those of the lower order do associate themselves much more than those of other nations our polity would be highly deficient if they had not some place set apart likewise for the indulgence of their curiosity seeing they are in this no way inferior to the other half of the species

In enjoying therefore such place of rendezvous the British fair ought to esteem themselves more happy than any of their foreign sisters as I do not remember either to have read in history or to have seen in my travels anything of the like kind

This place then is no other than the chandler s shop the known seat of all the news or as it is vulgarly called gossiping in every parish in England

[illegible]

the parish was very much obliged to her for having turned Jenny away as she did

Mrs. Partridge whose jealousy, as the reader well knows was long since cured and who had no other quarrel to her maid answered boldly She did not know any obligation the parish had to her on that account for she believed Jenny had scarce left her equal behind her

No truly said the gossip I hope not though I fancy we have sluts enow too Then you have not heard it seems that she hath been brought to bed of two bastards? but as they are not born here my husband and the other overseer says we shall not be obliged to keep them

Two bastards! answered Mrs Partridge hastily you surprize me! I don t know whether we must keep them but I am sure they must have been begotten here for the wench hath not been nine months gone away

Nothing can be so quick and sudden as the operations of the mind especially when hope or fear or jealousy to which the two others are but journeymen set it to work It occurred instantly to her that Jenny had scarce ever been out of her own house while she lived with her The leaning over the chair the sudden starting up the Latin the smile and many other things rushed upon her all at once The satisfaction her husband expressed in the departure of Jenny appeared now to be only dissembled again in the same instant to be real but yet to confirm her jealousy proceeding from satiety and a hundred other bad causes In a word she was convinced of her husband s guilt and immediately left the assembly in confusion

As fair Grimalkin who though the youngest of the feline family degenerates not in ferocity from the elder branches of her house, and though inferior in strength is equal in fierceness to the noble tiger himself when a little mouse whom it hath long tormented in sport escapes from her clutches for a while frets scolds growls swears but if the trunk or box behind which the mouse lay hid be again removed she flies like lightning on her prey and with envenomed wrath bites scratches mumbles and tears the little animal

Not with less fury did Mrs Partridge fly on the poor pedagogue Her tongue teeth and hands fell all upon him at once His wig was in an instant torn from his head his shirt from his back and from his face descended five streams of blood denoting the number of claws with which nature had unhappily armed the enemy

Mr Partridge acted for some time on the defensive only indeed he attempted only to guard his face with his hands but as he found that his antagonist abated nothing of her rage he thought he might at least endeavour to disarm her or rather to confine her arms in doing which her cap fell off in the struggle and her hair being too short to reach her shoulders erected itself on her head her stays likewise which were laced through one single hole at the bottom burst open and her breasts which were much more redundant than her hair hung down below her middle her face woman heroine might have been an object of terror to a much bolder man than Mr Partridge

He had at length the good fortune by getting possession of her arms to render those weapons which she wore at the ends of her fingers useless which she no sooner perceived than the softness of her sex prevailed over her rage and she presently dissolved in tears which soon after concluded in a fit

That small share of sense which Mr Partridge had hitherto preserved through this scene of fury of the cause of which he was hitherto ignorant now utterly abandoned him

. .

most haste to her assistance Several good to the great joy of her husband brought to herself

As soon as she had a little recollected her spirits and somewhat composed herself with a cordial she began to inform the company of the manifold injuries she had received from her husband who she said was not contented to injure her in her bed but upon her upbraiding him with it had treated her in the cruelest manner imaginable had tore her cap and hair from her head and her stays from her body giving her at the same time several blows the marks of which she should carry to the grave

The poor man who bore on his face many more visible marks of the indignation of his wife stood in silent astonishment at this accusation which the reader will I believe bear witness for him had greatly exceeded the truth for indeed he had not struck her once and this silence being interpreted to be a confession of the charge by the whole court they all began at once *una voce to rebuke and revile him repeating often that none but a coward ever struck a woman

Mr Partridge bore all this patiently but when his wife appealed to the blood on her face as an evidence of his barbarity he could not help laying claim to his own blood for so it really was as he thought it very unnatural that this should rise up (as we are taught that of a murdered person often doth) in vengeance against him

To this the women made no other answer than that it was a pity it had not come from h of their bodies

After much admonition for what was past and much good advice to Mr Partridge for his future behaviour the company at length departed and left the husband and wife to a personal conference together in which Mr Partridge soon learned the cause of all his sufferings

* In one voice

Chapter 5

Containing much matter to exercise the judgment and reflection of the reader

I BELIEVE it is a true observation that few secrets are divulged to one person only but certainly it would be next to a miracle that a fact of this kind should be known to a whole parish and not transpire any farther

And indeed a very few days had past before the country to use a common phrase rung of the schoolmaster of Little Baddington who was said to have beaten his wife in the most cruel manner Nay in some places it was reported he had murdered her in others that he had broke her arms in others her legs in short there was scarce an injury which can be done to a human creature but what Mrs Partridge was somewhere or other affirmed to have received from her husband

The cause of this quarrel was likewise variously reported for as some people said that Mrs Partridge had caught her husband in bed with his maid so many other reasons of a very different kind went abroad Nay some transferred the guilt to the wife and the jealousy to the husband

Mrs Wilkins had long ago heard of this quarrel but as a different cause from the true one had reached her ears she thought proper to conceal it and the rather perhaps as the blame was universally laid on Mr Partridge and his wife when she was servant to Mr Allworthy had in something offended Mrs Wilkins who was not of a very forgiving temper

But Mrs Wilkins whose eyes could see objects at a distance and who could very well look forward a few years into futurity had perceived a strong likelihood of Captain Blifil s being hereafter her master and as she plainly discerned that the captain bore no great goodwill to the little foundling she fancied it would be rendering him an agreeable service if she could make any discoveries that might lessen the affection which Mr Allworthy seemed to have contracted for this child and which gave visible uneasiness to the captain who could not entirely conceal it even before Allworthy himself though his wife who acted her part much better in public frequently recommended to him her own example of conniving at the folly of her brother which she said she at least as well perceived and as much resented as any other possibly could

Mrs Wilkins having therefore by accident gotten a true scent of the above story though long after it had happened failed not to satisfy herself thoroughly of all the particulars and then acquainted the captain that she had at last discovered the true father of the little bastard which she was sorry she said to see her master lose his reputation in the country by taking so much notice of

The captain chid her for the conclusion of her speech as an improper assurance in judging of her master s actions for if his honour or his understanding would have suffered the captain to make an alliance with Mrs Wilkins his pride would by no means have admitted it And to say the truth there is no conduct less politic than to enter into any confederacy with your friend s servants against their master for by these means you afterwards become the slave of these very servants by whom you are constantly liable to be betrayed And this consideration perhaps it was which prevented Captain Blifil from being more explicit with Mrs Wilkins or from encouraging the abuse which she had bestowed on Allworthy

But though he declared no satisfaction to Mrs Wilkins at this discovery he enjoyed not a little from it in his own mind and resolved to make the best use of it he was able

He kept this matter a long time concealed within his own breast in hopes that Mr Allworthy might hear it from some other person but Mrs Wilkins whether she resented the captain s behaviour or whether his cunning was beyond her and she feared the discovery might displease him never afterwards opened her lips about the matter

I have thought it somewhat strange upon reflection that the housekeeper never acquainted Mrs Blifil with this news as women are more inclined to communicate all pieces of intelligence to their own sex than to ours The only way as it appears to me of solving this difficulty is by imputing it to that distance which was now grown between the lady and the housekeeper whether this arose from a jealousy in Mrs Blifil that Wilkins showed too great a respect to the foundling for while she was endeavouring to ruin the little infant in order to ingratiate herself with the captain she was every day more and more commending it before Allworthy as his fond ness for it every day increased This notwithstanding all the care she took at other times to express the direct contrary to Mrs Blifil perhaps offended that delicate lady who certainly now hated Mrs Wilkins and though she did not or possibly could not absolutely remove her from her place she found however the means of making her life very uneasy This Mrs Wilkins at length so resented that she very openly showed all manner of respect and fondness to little Tommy in opposition to Mrs Blifil

The captain therefore finding the story in danger of perishing at last took an opportunity to reveal it himself

He was one day engaged with Mr Allworthy in a discourse on charity in which the captain with great learning proved to Mr Allworthy that the word charity in Scripture nowhere means beneficence or generosity

The Christian religion he said was instituted for much nobler purposes than to enforce a lesson which many heathen philosophers had taught us long before and which though it might perhaps be called a moral virtue savoured but little of that sublime Christian like disposition that vast elevation of thought in purity approaching to angelic perfection to be attained expressed and felt only by grace Those he said came nearer to the Scripture meaning who understood by it candour or the forming of a benevolent opinion of our brethren and passing a favourable judgment on their actions a virtue much higher and more extensive in its nature than a pitiful distribution of alms which though we would never so much prejudice or even ruin our families could never reach many whereas charity in the other and truer sense might be extended to all mankind

He said Considering who the disciples were, it would be absurd to conceive the doctrine of generosity or giving alms to have been preached to them And as we could not well imagine this doctrine should be preached by its Divine Author to men who could not practise it much less should we think it understood so by those who can practise it and do not

But though continued he there is I am

[illegible] upon and to confer our choicest favours often on the undeserving as you must own was your case in your bounty to that worthless fellow Partridge for two or three such examples must greatly lessen the inward satisfaction which a good man would otherwise find in generosity nay may even make him timorous in bestowing lest he should be guilty of supporting vice and encouraging the wicked a crime of a very black dye and for which it will by no means be a sufficient excuse that we have not actually intended such an encouragement unless we have used the utmost caution in chusing the objects of our beneficence A consideration which I make no doubt hath greatly checked the liberality of many a worthy and pious man

Mr Allworthy answered He could not dis

but that he had always thought it was interpreted to consist in action and that giving alms constituted at least one branch of that virtue

As to the meritorious part he said he readily agreed with the captain for where could be the merit of barely discharging a duty? which he said let the world charity have what construction it would it sufficiently appeared to be from the whole tenor of the New Testament And as he thought it an indispensable duty enjoined both by the Christian law and by the law of nature itself so was it withal so pleasant that if any duty could be said to be its own reward or to pay us while we are discharging it it was this

To confess the truth said he there is one degree of generosity (of charity I would have called it) which seems to have some show of merit and that is where from a principle of benevolence and Christian love we bestow on another what we really want ourselves where in order to lessen the distresses of another we condescend to share some part of them by giving what even our own necessities cannot well spare This is I think meritorious but to relieve our brethren only with our superfluities to be charitable (I must use the word) rather at the expense of our coffers than ourselves to save several families from misery rather than hang up an extraordinary picture in our houses or gratify any other idle ridiculous vanity—this seems to be only being human creatures Nay I

ne

est

ny

mouths instead of one? which I think may be predicated of any one who knows that the bread of many is owing to his own largesses

As to the apprehension of bestowing bounty

on such as may hereafter prove unworthy objects because many have proved such surely it can never deter a good man from generosity I do not think a few or many examples of ingratitude can justify a man s hardening his heart against the distresses of his fellow creatures nor do I believe it can ever have such effect on a truly benevolent mind Nothing less than a persuasion of universal depravity can lock up the charity of a good man and this persuasion must lead him I think either into atheism or enthusiasm but surely it is unfair to argue such universal depravity from a few vicious individuals nor was this I believe ever done by a man who upon searching his own mind found one certain exception to the general rule He then concluded by asking who that Partridge was whom he had called a worthless fellow?

I mean said the captain Partridge the barber the schoolmaster what do you call him? Partridge the father of the little child which you found in your bed

Mr Allworthy exprest great surprize at this account and the captain as great at his ignorance of it for he said he had known it above a month and at length recollected with much difficulty that he was told it by Mrs Wilkins

Upon this Wilkins was immediately summoned who having confirmed what the captain had said was by Mr Allworthy by and with the captain s advice dispatched to Little Baddington to inform herself of the truth of the fact for the captain exprest great dislike at all hasty proceedings in criminal matters and said he would by no means have Mr Allworthy take any resolution either to the prejudice of the child or its father before he was satisfied that the latter was guilty for though he had privately satisfied himself of this from one of Partridge s neighbours yet he was too generous to give any such evidence to Mr Allworthy

Chapter 6

The trial of Partridge the schoolmaster for incontinency the evidence of his wife a short reflection on the wisdom of our law with other grave matters which those will like best who understand them most

IT MAY be wondered that a story so well known and which had furnished so much matter of conversation should never have been mentioned to Mr Allworthy himself who was perhaps the only person in that country who had never heard of it

To account in some measure for this to the reader I think proper to inform him that there was no one in the kingdom less interested in either sense for as no man was ever more sensible of the wants or more ready to relieve the distresses of others so none could be more tender of their characters or slower to believe anything to their disadvantage

Scandal therefore never found any access to his table for as it hath been long since observed that you may know a man by his companions to accommodate their conversation to the taste and inclination of their superiors

But to return to Mrs Wilkins who having executed her commission with great dispatch though at fifteen miles distance brought back such a confirmation of the schoolmaster's guilt that Mr Allworthy determined to send for the criminal and examine him viva voce Mr Partridge therefore was summoned to attend in order to his defence (if he could make any) against this accusation

At the time appointed before Mr Allworthy himself at Paradise-hall came as well the said Partridge with Anne his wife as Mrs Wilkins his accuser

And now Mr Allworthy being seated in the

nocence

Mrs Partridge was then examined who after a modest apology for being obliged to speak the truth against her husband related all the circumstances with which the reader hath already been acquainted and at last concluded with her husband s confession of his guilt

Whether she had forgiven him or no I will not venture to determine but it is certain she indeed made promises in Mr Allworthy s name that the punishment of her husband should not be such as might anywise affect his family

Partridge still persisted in asserting his innocence though he admitted he had made the above mentioned confession which he however endeavoured to account for by protesting that he was forced into it by the continued importunity she used who vowed that as she was sure of his guilt she would never leave tormenting him till he had owned it and faithfully promised that in such case she would never mention it to him more Hence he said he had been induced falsely to confess himself guilty though he was innocent and that he believed he should have confest a murder from the same motive

Mrs Partridge could not bear this imputation with patience and having no other remedy in the present place but tears she called forth a plentiful assistance from them and then addressing herself to Mr Allworthy she said (or rather cried) May it please your worship there never was any poor woman so injured as I am by that base man for this is not the only instance of his falsehood to me No may it please your worship he hath injured my bed many s the good time and often I could have put up with his drunkenness and neglect of his business if he had not broke one of the sacred commandments Besides if it had been out of doors I had not mattered it so much but with my own servant in my own house under my own roof to defile my own chaste bed which to be sure he hath with his beastly stinking whores Yes you villain you have defiled my own bed you have and then you have charged me with bullocking you into owning the truth Is it very likely an t please your worship that I should bullock him? I have marks enow about my body to show of his cruelty to me If you had been a man you villain you would have scorned to injure a woman in that manner But you an t half a man you know it Nor have you been half a husband to me You need run after whores you need when I m sure—— And since he provokes me I am ready an t please your worship to take my bodily oath that I found them a bed together What you have forgot I suppose when you beat me into a fit and made the blood run down my forehead because I only civilly taxed you with adultery! but I can prove it by all my neighbours You have almost broke my heart you have you have

Here Mr Allworthy interrupted and begged her to be pacified promising her that she should have justice, then turning to Partridge who stood aghast one half of his wits being hurried away by surprize and the other half by fear he said he was sorry to see there was so wicked a man in the world He assured him that his prevaricating and lying backward and forward was a great aggravation of his guilt for which the only atonement he could make was by confession and repentance He exhorted him therefore to begin by immediately confessing the fact and not to persist in denying what was so plainly proved against him even by his own wife

Here reader I beg your patience a moment while I make a just compliment to the great wisdom and sagacity of our law which refuses to admit the evidence of a wife for or against her husband This says a certain learned author who I believe was never quoted before in any but a law book would be the means of creating an eternal dissension between them It would indeed be the means of much perjury and of much whipping fining imprisoning transporting and hanging

Partridge stood a while silent till being bid to speak he said he had already spoken the truth and appealed to Heaven for his innocence and lastly to the girl herself whom he desired his worship immediately to send for for he was ignorant or at least pretended to be so that she had left that part of the country

Mr Allworthy whose natural love of justice joined to his coolness of temper made him always a most patient magistrate in hearing all the witnesses which an accused person could produce in his defence agreed to defer his final determination of this matter till the arrival of Jenny for whom he immediately dispatched a messenger and then having recommended peace between Partridge and his wife (though he addressed himself chiefly to the wrong person) he appointed them to attend again the third day for he had sent Jenny a whole day s journey from his own house

At the appointed time the parties all assembled when the messenger returning brought word that Jenny was not to be found for that she had left her habitation a few days before in company with a recruiting officer

Mr Allworthy then declared that the evidence of such a slut as she appeared to be would have deserved no credit but he said he could not help thinking that had she been present and would have declared the truth she must have confirmed what so many circumstances together with his own confession and the declaration of his wife that she had caught her husband in the fact, did sufficiently prove He therefore once more exhorted Partridge to confess but he still avowing his innocence Mr Allworthy declared himself satisfied of his guilt and that he was too bad a man to receive any encouragement from him He therefore deprived him of his annuity and recommended repentance to him on account of another world and industry to maintain himself and his wife in this

There were not perhaps many more unhappy persons than poor Partridge He had lost the best part of his income by the evidence of his wife, and yet was daily upbraided by her for having among other things, been the occasion of depriving her of that benefit but such was his fortune and he was obliged to submit to it

Though I called him poor Partridge in the last paragraph I would have the reader rather impute that epithet to the compassion in my temper than conceive it to be any declaration of his innocence Whether he was innocent or not will perhaps appear hereafter but if the historic muse hath entrusted me with any secrets, I will by no means be guilty of discovering them till she shall give me leave

Here therefore the reader must suspend his curiosity Certain it is that whatever was the truth of the case there was evidence more than sufficient to convict him before Allworthy indeed much less would have satisfied a bench of justices on an order of bastardy and yet notwithstanding the positiveness of Mrs Partridge who would have taken the sacrament upon the matter there is a possibility that the schoolmaster was entirely innocent for though it appeared clear on comparing the time when Jenny departed from Little Baddington with that of her delivery that she had there conceived this infant yet it by no means followed of necessity that Partridge must have been its father for to omit other particulars there was in the same house a lad near eighteen between whom and Jenny there had subsisted sufficient intimacy to found a reasonable suspicion and yet so blind is jealousy this circumstance never once entered into the head of the enraged wife

Whether Partridge repented or not according to Mr Allworthy s advice is not so apparent Certain it is that his wife repented heartily of the evidence she had given against him especially when she found Mrs Deborah had deceived her and refused to make any application to Mr Allworthy on her behalf She had however somewhat better success with Mrs Blifil who was as the reader must have perceived a much better tempered woman and very kindly undertook to solicit her brother to restore the annuity in which though good nature might have some share yet a stronger and more natural motive will appear in the next chapter

These solicitations were nevertheless unsuccessful for though Mr Allworthy did not think with some late writers that mercy consists only in punishing offenders yet he was as far from thinking that it is proper to this excellent quality to pardon great criminals wantonly without any reason whatever Any doubtfulness of the fact or any circumstance of mitigation was never disregarded but the petitions of an offender or the intercessions of others did not in the least affect him In a word he never pardoned because the offender himself or his friends were unwilling that he should be punished

Partridge and his wife were therefore both obliged to submit to their fate which was indeed severe enough for so far was he from doubling his industry on the account of his lessened income that he did in a manner abandon himself to despair and as he was by nature indolent that vice now increased upon him by which means he lost the little school he had so that neither his wife nor himself would have had any bread to eat had not the charity of some good Christian interposed and provided them with what was just sufficient for their sustenance

As this support was conveyed to them by an unknown hand they imagined and so I doubt not will the reader that Mr Allworthy himself was their secret benefactor who though he would not openly encourage vice could yet privately relieve the distresses of the vicious themselves when these became too exquisite and disproportionate to their demerit In which light their wretchedness appeared now to Fortune herself for she at length took pity on this miserable couple and considerably lessened the wretched state of Partridge by putting a final end to that of his wife who soon after caught the small pox and died

The justice which Mr Allworthy had executed on Partridge at first met with universal approbation but no sooner had he felt its consequences, than his neighbours began and to compassionate his case and presently after to blame that as rigour and severity which they before called justice They now exclaimed against punishing in cold blood and sang forth the praises of mercy and forgiveness

These cries were considerably increased by the death of Mrs Partridge which though owing to the distemper above mentioned which is no consequence of poverty or distress many were not ashamed to impute to Mr All worthy s severity or as they now termed it, cruelty

Partridge having now lost his wife his school and his annuity and the unknown person hav ing now discontinued the last mentioned char ity resolved to change the scene and left the country where he was in danger of starving with the universal compassion of all his neigh bours

Chapter 7

A short sketch of that felicity which prudent couples may extract from hatred with a short apology for those people who overlook imperfections in their friends

Though the captain had effectually de [illegible] to counterbalance his severity to the father with extraordinary fondness and affection towards the son

This a good deal soured the captain s temper as did all the other daily instances of Mr All worthy s generosity for he looked on all such [illegible]

though an affection placed on the understand ing is by many wise persons thought more dur able than that which is founded on beauty yet it happened otherwise in the present case Nay the understandings of this couple were their principal bone of contention and one great cause of many quarrels which from time to time arose between them and which at last ended on the side of the lady in a sovereign contempt for her husband and on the hus band s in an utter abhorrence of his wife

As these had both exercised their talents [illegible]

like a well bred man had before marriage al ways given up his opinion to that of the lady and this not in the clumsy awkward manner of a conceited blockhead who while he civilly yields to a superior in an argument is desirous of being still known to think himself in the right The captain on the contrary though one of the proudest fellows in the world so abso lutely yielded the victory to his antagonist that she who had not the least doubt of his sin cerity retired always from the dispute with an admiration of her own understanding and a love for his

But though this complacence to one whom the captain thoroughly despised was not so uneasy to him as it would have been had any hopes of preferment made it necessary to show the same submission to a Hoadley or to some other of great reputation in the science yet even this cost him too much to be endured without [illegible]

of his wife with that haughtiness and insolence which none but those who deserve some con tempt themselves can bestow and those only who deserve no contempt can bear

When the first torrent of tenderness was over and when in the calm and long interval between the fits reason begin to open the eyes of the lady and she saw this alteration of be haviour in the captain who at length answered all her arguments only with pish and pshaw she was far from enduring the indignity with a tame submission Indeed it at first so highly provoked her that it might have produced some tragical event had it not taken a more harm less turn by filling her with the utmost con tempt for her husband s understanding which somewhat qualified her hatred towards him though of this likewise she had a pretty moder ate share

The captain s hatred to her was of a purer kind for as to any imperfections in her knowl edge or understanding he no more despised her for them than for her not being six feet high In his opinion of the female sex he ex ceeded the moroseness of Aristotle himself he looked on a woman as on an animal of domestic use of somewhat higher consideration than a cat since her offices were of rather more im portance but the difference between these two was in his estimation so small that in his marriage contracted with Mr Allworthy s lands and tenements it would have been pretty equal which of them he had taken into the bargain

And yet so tender was his pride that it felt the contempt which his wife now began to express towards him and this added to the surfeit he had before taken of her love created in him a degree of disgust and abhorrence perhaps hardly to be exceeded

One situation only of the married state is excluded from pleasure and that is a state of indifference but as many of my readers I hope know what an exquisite delight there is in conveying pleasure to a beloved object so some few I am afraid may have experienced the satisfaction of tormenting one we hate It is I apprehend to come at this latter pleasure that we see both sexes often give up that ease in marriage which they might otherwise possess though their mate was never so disagreeable to them Hence the wife often puts on fits of love and jealousy, nay even denies herself any pleasure to disturb and prevent those of her husband and he again in return puts frequent restraints on himself and stays at home in company which he dislikes in order to confine his wife to what she equally detests Hence too must flow those tears which a widow sometimes so plentifully sheds over the ashes of a husband with whom she led a life of constant disquiet and turbulency and whom now she can never hope to torment any more

But if ever any couple enjoyed this pleasure it was at present experienced by the captain and his lady It was always a sufficient reason to either of them to be obstinate in any opinion that the other had previously asserted the contrary If the one proposed any amusement the other constantly objected to it they never loved or hated commended or abused the same person And for this reason as the captain looked with an evil eye on the little foundling his wife began now to caress it almost equally with her own child

The reader will be apt to conceive that this behaviour between the husband and wife did not greatly contribute to Mr Allworthy s repose as it tended so little to that serene happiness which he had designed for all three from this alliance but the truth is though he might be a little disappointed in his sanguine expectations yet he was far from being acquainted with the whole matter for as the captain was, from certain obvious reasons much on his guard before him the lady was obliged for fear of her brother s displeasure to pursue the same conduct In fact it is possible for a third person to be very intimate nay even to live long in the same house with a married couple who have any tolerable discretion and not even guess at the sour sentiments which they bear to each other for though the whole day may be sometimes too short for hatred as well as for love yet the many hours which they naturally spend together apart from all observers furnish people of tolerable moderation with such ample opportunity for the enjoyment of either passion that if they love they can support being a few hours in company without toying or if they hate without spitting in each other s faces

It is possible however that Mr Allworthy saw enough to render him a little uneasy for we are not always to conclude, that a wise man is not hurt because he doth not cry out and lament himself like those of a childish or effeminate temper But indeed it is possible he might see some faults in the captain without any uneasiness at all for men of true wisdom and goodness are contented to take persons and things as they are without complaining of their imperfections or attempting to amend them They can see a fault in a friend a relation or an acquaintance without ever mentioning it to the parties themselves or to any others and this often without lessening their affection Indeed unless great discernment be tempered with this overlooking disposition we ought never to contract friendship but with a degree of folly which we can deceive for I hope my friends will pardon me when I declare I know none of them without a fault and I should be sorry if I could imagine I had any friend who could not see mine Forgiveness of this kind we give and demand in turn It is an exercise of friendship and perhaps none of the least pleasant And this forgiveness we must bestow, without desire of amendment. There is perhaps no surer mark of folly than an attempt to correct the natural infirmities of those we love The finest composition of human nature as well as the finest china may have a flaw in it and this I am afraid in either case is equally incurable though nevertheless the pattern may remain of the highest value

Upon the whole then Mr Allworthy certainly saw some imperfections in the captain but as this was a very artful man and eternally upon his guard before him these appeared to him no more than blemishes in a good character which his goodness made him overlook and his wisdom prevented him from discovering to the captain himself Very different would have been his sentiments had he discovered the whole which perhaps would in time have the case had the husband and wife long con tinued this kind of behaviour to each other but this kind Fortune took effectual means to prevent by forcing the captain to do that which rendered him again dear to his wife and re stored all her tenderness and affection towards him

Chapter 8

A receipt to regain the lost affections of a wife which hath never been known to fail in the most desperate cases

THE CAPTAIN was made large amends for the unpleasant minutes which he passed in the conversation of his wife (and which were as few as he could contrive to make them) by the pleasant meditations he enjoyed when alone

These meditations were entirely employed on Mr Allworthy s fortune for first he exer cised much thought in calculating as well as he could the exact value of the whole which cal culations he often saw occasion to alter in his own favour and secondly and chiefly he pleased himself with intended alterations in the house and gardens and in projecting many other schemes as well for the improvement of the estate as of the grandeur of the place for this purpose he applied himself to the studies of architecture and gardening and read over many books on both these subjects for these sciences, indeed employed his whole time and formed his only amusement He at last com pleted a most excellent plan and very sorry we are that it is not in our power to present it principal ingredients which serve to recom mend all great and noble designs of this nature for it required an immoderate expense to exe cute and a vast length of time to bring it to any

Nothing was wanting to enable him to enter upon the immediate execution of this plan but the death of Mr Allworthy in calculating which he had employed much of his own alge-bra besides purchasing every book extant that treats of the value of lives reversions, &c From all which he satisfied himself that as he had every day a chance of this happening so had he more than an even chance of its happening within a few years.

But while the captain was one day busied in tune could indeed have ... cruel so mal a propos so absolutely destruc tive to all his schemes In short not to keep the

apoplexy

This unfortunately befel the captain as he was taking his evening walk by himself so that nobody was present to lend him any assistance if indeed any assistance could have preserved him He took therefore measure of that pro portion of soil which was now become adequate to all his future purposes and he lay dead on the ground a great (though not a living) ex ample of the truth of that observation of Horace

Tu secanda marmora
Locas sub ipsum funus et sepulchri Immemor struis domos only necessary and build houses of five hun dred by a hundred feet forgetting that of six by two

Chapter 9

A proof of the infallibility of the foregoing receipt in the lamentations of the widow, with other suitable decorations of death such as physicians &c and an epitaph in the true stile

MR ALLWORTHY his sister and another lady were assembled at the accustomed hour in the supper room where having waited a punctual at his meals) and gave orders that the bell should be rung without the doors and especially towards those walks which the cap tain was wont to use

All these summons proving ineffectual (for the captain had, by perverse accident, betaken himself to a new walk that evening), Mrs Blifil declared she was seriously frightened Upon which the other lady, who was one of her most intimate acquaintance, and who well knew the true state of her affections, endeavoured all she could to pacify her, telling her—To be sure she could not help being uneasy; but that she should hope the best That, perhaps the sweet- [illegible] fallen him, for that he would never stay out without sending her word, as he must know how uneasy it would make her. The other lady, having no other arguments to use, betook herself to the entreaties usual on such occasions, and begged her not to frighten herself, for it might be of very ill consequence to her own health, and, filling out a very large glass of wine, advised and at last prevailed with her to drink it.

Mr. Allworthy now returned into the parlour, for he had been himself in search after the captain His countenance sufficiently showed the consternation he was under, which, indeed, had a good deal deprived him of speech, but as grief operates variously on different [illegible]

entations which the lady, her companion, declared she could not blame, but at the same time dissuaded her from indulging attempting to moderate the grief of her friend by philosophical observations on the many disappointments to which human life is daily subject, which, she said, was a sufficient consideration to fortify our minds against any accidents, how sudden or terrible soever She said her brother's example ought to teach her patience, who, though indeed he could not be supposed as much concerned as herself yet was doubtless, very uneasy, though his resignation to the Divine will had restrained his grief within due bounds

'Mention not my brother," said Mrs Blifil, 'I alone am the object of your pity What are the terrors of friendship to what a wife feels on these occasions? Oh he is lost! Somebody hath murdered him—I shall never see him more!'—Here a torrent of tears had the same consequence with what the suppression had occasioned to Mr. Allworthy, and she remained silent.

At this interval a servant came running in, out of breath, and cried out, The captain was found and, before he could proceed farther, he was followed by two more, bearing the dead body between them

Here the curious reader may observe another diversity in the operations of grief for as Mr Allworthy had been before silent, from the same cause which had made his sister vociferous, so did the present sight, which drew tears from the gentleman put an entire stop to those of the lady; who first gave a violent scream, and presently after fell into a fit

The room was soon full of servants some of whom, with the lady visitant, were employed in care of the wife, and others, with Mr Allworthy, assisted in carrying off the captain to a warm bed, where every method was tried, in order to restore him to life

And glad should we be, could we inform the reader that both these bodies had been attended with equal success, for those who undertook the care of the lady succeeded so well, that, after the fit had continued a decent time, she again revived, to their great satisfaction· but as to the captain, all experiments of bleeding, chafing dropping, &c, proved ineffectual Death, that inexorable judge, had passed sentence on him, and refused to grant him a reprieve, though two doctors who arrived, and were fee'd at one and the same instant, were his counsel

These two doctors, whom, to avoid any malicious applications, we shall distinguish by the names of Dr Y and Dr Z, having felt his pulse, to wit, Dr Y his right arm, and Dr Z his left both agreed that he was absolutely dead but as to the distemper, or cause of his death, they differed, Dr Y holding that he died of an apoplexy and Dr Z of an epilepsy

Hence arose a dispute between the learned men, in which each delivered the reasons of their several opinions These were of such equal force, that they served both to confirm either doctor in his own sentiments, and made not the least impression on his adversary

To say the truth, every physician almost hath his favourite disease, to which he ascribes all the victories obtained over human nature The gout, the rheumatism, the stone, the gravel, and the consumption, have all their several patrons in the faculty, and none more than the nervous fever, or the fever on the spirits And here we may account for those disagreements in opinion, concerning the cause of a patient's death, which sometimes occur, between the most learned of the college, and which have greatly surprized that part of the world who have been ignorant of the fact we have above asserted

The reader may perhaps be surprized, that, instead of endeavouring to revive the patient, the learned gentlemen should fall immediately into a dispute on the occasion of his death but in reality all such experiments had been made before their arrival for the captain was put into a warm bed, had his veins scarified, his anticipated in everything they ordered, were at a loss how to apply that portion of time which it is usual and decent to remain for their fee, and were therefore necessitated to find some subject or other for discourse, and what could more naturally present itself than that before mentioned?

Our doctors were about to take their leave, when Mr Allworthy, having given over the captain, and acquiesced in the Divine will, began to enquire after his sister, whom he desired them to visit before their departure

This lady was now recovered of her fit, and, to use the common phrase as well as could be expected for one in her condition The doctors therefore, all previous ceremonies being complied with, as this was a new patient, attended according to desire, and laid hold on each of her hands, as they had before done on those of the corpse

The case of the lady was in the other extreme from that of her husband for as he was past all the assistance of physic so in reality she required none

There is nothing more unjust than the vulgar opinion, by which physicians are misreplatter Nay, some are so cautious on this head, good nor harm I have heard some of these, with great gravity, deliver it as a maxim That Nature should be left to do her own work, while the physician stands by as it were to clap her on the back and encourage her when she doth well"

So little then did our doctors delight in death, that they discharged the corpse after a single fee, but they were not so disgusted with their living patient, concerning whose case they im*mediately agreed, and fell to prescribing* with great diligence

Whether, as the lady had at first persuaded her physicians to believe her ill, they had now, in return, persuaded her to believe herself so, I will not determine, but she continued a whole month with all the decorations of sickness During this time she was visited by physicians, attended by nurses, and received constant messages from her acquaintance to enquire after her health

At length the decent time for sickness and immoderate grief being expired, the doctors were discharged, and the lady began to see company, being altered only from what she was before, by that colour of sadness in which she had dressed her person and countenance

The captain was now interred, and might, perhaps, have already made a large progress towards oblivion, had not the friendship of Mr Allworthy taken care to preserve his memory, by the following epitaph, which was written by a man of as great genius as integrity, and one who perfectly well knew the captain

HERE LIES, IN EXPECTATION OF A JOYFUL RISING, THE BODY OF
CAPTAIN JOHN BLIFIL.
LONDON
HAD THE HONOUR OF HIS BIRTH, OXFORD OF HIS EDUCATION.

HIS PARTS WERE AN HONOUR TO HIS PROFESSION AND TO HIS COUNTRY, HIS LIFE, TO HIS RELIGION AND HUMAN NATURE

HE WAS A DUTIFUL SON, A TENDER HUSBAND,
AN AFFECTIONATE FATHER, A MOST KIND BROTHER, A SINCERE FRIEND, A DEVOUT CHRISTIAN, AND A GOOD MAN

HIS INCONSOLABLE WIDOW
HATH ERECTED THIS STONE, THE MONUMENT OF HIS VIRTUES
AND OF HER AFFECTION.

BOOK III

CONTAINING THE MOST MEMORABLE TRANSACTIONS WHICH PASSED IN THE FAMILY OF MR ALLWORTHY FROM THE TIME WHEN TOMMY JONES ARRIVED AT THE AGE OF FOURTEEN TILL HE ATTAINED THE AGE OF NINETEEN IN THIS BOOK THE READER MAY PICK UP SOME HINTS CONCERNING THE EDUCATION OF CHILDREN

Chapter 1

Containing little or nothing

THE READER will be pleased to remember,

In so doing we do not only consult our own dignity and ease but the good and advantage of the reader for besides that by these means we prevent him from throwing away his time, in reading without either pleasure or emolument we give him at all such seasons an opportunity of employing that wonderful sagacity of which he is master by filling up these vacant spaces of time with his own conjectures for which purpose we have taken care to qualify him in the preceding pages

For instance what reader but knows that Mr Allworthy felt at first, for the loss of his friend those emotions of grief which on such occasions enter into all men whose hearts are not composed of flint or their heads of as solid of it and the latter correcting it as unlawful and at the same time assuaging it by raising future hopes and assurances which enable a strong and religious mind to take leave of a friend on his deathbed with little less indifference than if he was preparing for a long journey and indeed with little less hope of seeing him again

Nor can the judicious reader be at a greater loss on account of Mrs. Bridget Blifil who he may be assured conducted herself through the whole season in which grief is to make its appearance on the outside of the body with the strictest regard to all the rules of custom and decency suiting the alterations of her countenance to the several alterations of her habit for as this changed from weeds to black from black to grey from grey to white so did her countenance change from dismal to sorrowful from sorrowful to sad and from sad to serious till the day came in which she was allowed to return to her former serenity

We have mentioned these two as examples only of the task which may be imposed on readers of the lowest class Much higher and harder exercises of judgment and penetration may reasonably be expected from the upper graduates in criticism Many notable discoveries will I doubt not be made by such of the transactions which happened in the family of our worthy man during all the years which we have thought proper to pass over for though nothing worthy of a place in this history occurred within that period yet did several incidents happen of equal importance with those reported by the daily and weekly historians of the age in reading which great numbers of persons consume a considerable part of their time very little I am afraid to their emolument Now in the conjectures here proposed some of the most excellent faculties of the mind may be employed to much advantage since it is a more useful capacity to be able to foretel the actions of men in any circumstance from their characters than to judge of their characters from their actions The former I own requires the greater penetration but may be accomplished by true sagacity with no less certainty than the latter

As we are sensible that much the greatest part of our readers are very eminently possessed of this quality we have left them a space of twelve years to exert it in and shall now bring forth our heroe at about fourteen years of age not questioning that many have been long impatient to be introduced to his acquaintance

Chapter 2

The heroe of this great history appears with very bad omens A little tale of so low a kind that some may think it not worth their notice A word or two concerning a squire, and more relating to a gamekeeper and a schoolmaster

As we determined when we first sat down to write this history to flatter no man but to guide our pen throughout by the directions of truth we are obliged to bring our heroe on the stage in a much more disadvantageous manner than we could wish and to declare honestly even at his first appearance that it was the universal opinion of all Mr Allworthy s family that he was certainly born to be hanged

Indeed I am sorry to say there was too much reason for this conjecture the lad having from his earliest years discovered a propensity to many vices and especially to one which hath as direct a tendency as any other to that fate which we have just now observed to have been prophetically denounced against him he had been already convicted of three robberies viz, of robbing an orchard of stealing a duck out of a farmer s yard and of picking Master Blifil s pocket of a ball

The vices of this young man were moreover heightened by the disadvantageous light in which they appeared when opposed to the virtues of Master Blifil his companion a youth of so different a cast from little Jones that not only the family but all the neighbourhood resounded his praises He was indeed a lad of a remarkable disposition sober discreet and pious beyond his age qualities which gained him the love of every one who knew him while Tom Jones was universally disliked and many expressed their wonder that Mr Allworthy would suffer such a lad to be educated with his nephew lest the morals of the latter should be corrupted by his example

An incident which happened about this time will set the characters of these two lads more fairly before the discerning reader than is in the power of the longest dissertation

Tom Jones who bad as he is must serve for the heroe of this history had only one friend among all the servants of the family for as to Mrs Wilkins she had long since given him up and was perfectly reconciled to her mistress This friend was the gamekeeper a fellow of a loose kind of disposition and who was thought not to entertain much stricter notions concerning the difference of meum and tuum than the young gentleman himself And hence this friendship gave occasion to many sarcastical remarks among the domestics most of which were either proverbs before or at least are become so now and indeed the wit of them all may be comprised in that short Latin proverb 'Noscitur a socio which I think is thus expressed in English You may know him by the company he keeps

To say the truth some of that atrocious wickedness in Jones of which we have just mentioned three examples might perhaps be derived from the encouragement he had received from this fellow who in two or three instances, had been what the law calls an accessary after the fact for the whole duck and great part of the apples were converted to the use of the gamekeeper and his family though as Jones alone was discovered the poor lad bore not only the whole smart but the whole blame both which fell again to his lot on the following occasion

Contiguous to Mr Allworthy s estate was the manor of one of those gentlemen who are called preservers of the game This species of men from the great severity with which they revenge the death of a hare or partridge might be thought to cultivate the same superstition with the Bannians in India many of whom we are told dedicate their whole lives to the preservation and protection of certain animals was it not that our English Bannians while they preserve them from other enemies will most unmercifully slaughter whole horse loads themselves so that they stand clearly acquitted of any such heathenish superstition

I have indeed a much better opinion of this kind of men than is entertained by some as I take them to answer the order of Nature and the good purposes for which they were ordained in a more ample manner than many others Now as Horace tells us that there are a set of human beings

Fruges consumere nati

Born to consume the fruits of the earth so I make no manner of doubt but that there are others

Feras consumere nati

Born to consume the beasts of the field or as it is commonly called the game and none I believe will deny but that those squires fulfil this end of their creation

Little Jones went one day a shooting with the gamekeeper when happening to spring a covey of partridges near the border of that manor over which Fortune, to fulfil the wise purposes of Nature had planted one of the game consumers, the birds flew into it and were marked (as it is called) by the two sportsmen, in some furze bushes, about two or three hundred paces beyond Mr. Allworthy's do minions

Mr Allworthy had given the fellow strict orders, on pain of forfeiting his place, never to trespass on any of his neighbours, no more on those who were less rigid in this matter than on the lord of this manor With regard to others, indeed, these orders had not been always very scrupulously kept but as the disposition of the gentleman with whom the partridges had taken sanctuary was well known, the gamekeeper had never yet attempted to invade his territories. Nor had he done it now, had not the younger sportsman, who was excessively eager to pursue the flying game, over persuaded him, but Jones being very importunate, the other, who was himself keen enough after the sport, yielded to his persuasions entered the manor, and shot one of the partridges

The gentleman himself was at that time on horse back, at a little distance from them and hearing the gun go off, he immediately made towards the place, and discovered poor Tom, for the gamekeeper had leapt into the thickest part of the furze brake, where he had happily concealed himself

The gentleman having searched the lad, and found the partridge upon him denounced great vengeance, swearing he would acquaint Mr Allworthy He was as good as his word for he rode immediately to his house and com plained of the trespass on his manor in as high terms and as bitter language as if his house had been broken open and the most valuable furniture stole out of it He added that some other person was in his company though he could not discover him for that two guns had been discharged almost in the same instant And, says he, "We have found only this partridge, but the Lord knows what mischief they have done'

At his return home Tom was presently con vened before Mr Allworthy He owned the fact, and alledged no other excuse but what was really true viz, that the covey was origi

[illegible]

the circumstance of the two guns, which had been deposed by the squire and both his servants, but Tom stoutly persisted in asserting that he was alone, yet, to say the truth, he hesi tated a little at first, which would have con firmed Mr Allworthy s belief, had what the squire and his servants said wanted any further confirmation

The gamekeeper, being a suspected person, was now sent for, and the question put to him but he, relying on the promise which Tom had made him, to take all upon himself, very resolutely denied being in company with the young gentleman, or indeed having seen him the whole afternoon

Mr. Allworthy then turned towards Tom, with more than usual anger in his countenance, and advised him to confess who was with him, repeating, that he was resolved to know The lad, however, still maintained his resolution, and was dismissed with much wrath by Mr Allworthy, who told him he should have to the next morning to consider of it, when he should be questioned by another person, and in an other manner

Poor Jones spent a very melancholy night, and the more so, as he was without his usual companion, for Master Blifil was gone abroad on a visit with his mother Fear of the punish ment he was to suffer was on this occasion his least evil, his chief anxiety being, lest his con stancy should fail him, and he should be brought to betray the gamekeeper, whose ruin he knew must now be the consequence

Nor did the gamekeeper pass his time much better He had the same apprehensions with the youth for whose honour he had likewise a much tenderer regard than for his skin

In the morning when Tom attended the rev erend Mr Thwackum the person to whom Mr Allworthy had committed the instruction of the two boys he had the same questions put to him by that gentleman which he had been asked the evening before, to which he returned the same answers The consequence of this was so severe a whipping that it possibly fell little short of the torture with which confes sions are in some countries extorted from criminals

Tom bore his punishment with great reso lution and though his master asked him be tween every stroke whether he would not con fess he was contented to be flead rather than betray his friend or break the promise he had made

The gamekeeper was now relieved from his anxiety, and Mr Allworthy himself began to

he himself pleased had carried his severity much beyond the good man s intention this latter began now to suspect that the squire had been mistaken which his extreme eager ness and anger seemed to make probable and as for what the servants had said in confirma tion of their master s account he laid no great stress upon that Now as cruelty and injustice were two ideas of which Mr Allworthy could by no means support the consciousness a single moment he sent for Tom and after many kind and friendly exhortations said I am con vinced my dear child that my suspicions have wronged you I am sorry that you have been so severely punished on this account And at last gave him a little horse to make him amends again repeating his sorrow for what had past

Tom s guilt now flew in his face more than any severity could make it He could more easily bear the lashes of Thwackum than the generosity of Allworthy The tears burst from his eyes and he fell upon his knees crying Oh sir you are too good to me Indeed you are Indeed I don t deserve it And at that very instant from the fulness of his heart had almost betrayed the secret but the good genius of the gamekeeper suggested to him what might be the consequence to the poor fellow and this consideration sealed his lips

Thwackum did all he could to persuade All worthy from showing any compassion or kind ness to the boy saying He had persisted in an untruth and gave some hints that a second whipping might probably bring the matter to l ght

But Mr Allworthy absolutely refused to con sent to the experiment He said the boy had suffered enough already for concealing the truth even if he was guilty seeing that he could have no motive but a mistaken point of honour for so doing Honour! cryed Thwackum with some warmth mere stubbornness and obstinacy! Can honour teach any one to tell a lie or can any honour exist independent of religion?

This discourse happened at table when din ner was just ended and there were present Mr Allworthy Mr Thwackum and a third gentleman who now entered into the debate and whom before we proceed any further we shall briefly introduce to our reader's acquaint ance

Chapter 3

The character of Mr Square the philosopher, and of Mr Thwackum the divine, with a dispute concerning—

THE NAME of this gentleman who had then resided some time at Mr Allworthys house was Mr Square His natural parts were not of the first rate but he had greatly im proved them by a learned education He was deeply read in the antients and a profest master of all the works of Plato and Aristotle Upon which great models he had principally formed himself sometimes according with the opinion of the one and sometimes with that of the other In morals he was a profest Platonist and in religion he inclined to be an Aristotelian

But though he had as we have said formed his morals on the Platonic model yet he per fectly agreed with the opinion of Aristotle in considering that great man rather in the qual ity of a philosopher or a speculatist than as a legislator This sentiment he carried a great way indeed so far as to regard all virtue as matter of theory only This it is true he never affirmed as I have heard to any one and yet upon the least attention to his conduct I can not help thinking it was his real opinion as it will perfectly reconcile some contradictions which might otherwise appear in his character

This gentleman and Mr Thwackum scarce ever met without a disputation for their tenets were indeed diametrically opposite to each other Square held human nature to be the per fection of all virtue and that vice was a devia tion from our nature in the same manner as deformity of body is Thwackum on the con trary maintained that the human mind since the fall was nothing but a sink of iniquity till purified and redeemed by grace In one point only they agreed which was in all their dis courses on morality never to mention the word goodness The favourite phrase of the former was the natural beauty of virtue that of the latter was the divine power of grace The former measured all actions by the unalterable

Coke upon Lyttleton where the comment is of equal authority with the text

After this short introduction the reader will be pleased to remember that the parson had concluded his speech with a triumphant ques tion to which he had apprehended no answer viz Can any honour exist independent of religion?

To this Square answered that it was impossible to discourse philosophically concerning words till their meaning was first established that there were scarce any two words of a more vague and uncertain signification than the two he had mentioned for that there were almost as many different opinions concerning honour as concerning religion But says he if by honour you mean the true natural beauty of virtue I will maintain it may exist independent of any religion whatever Nay added he you yourself will allow it may exist independent of all but one so will a Mahometan a Jew and all the maintainers of all the different sects in the world

Thwackum replied this was arguing with the usual malice of all the enemies to the true Church He said he doubted not but that all the infidels and hereticks in the world would if they could confine honour to their own absurd errors and damnable deceptions but honour says he is not therefore manifold because there are many absurd opinions about it nor is religion manifold because there are various sects and heresies in the world When I mention religion I mean the Christian religion and not only the Christian religion but the Protestant religion and not only the Protestant religion but the Church of England And when I mention honour I mean that mode of Divine grace which is not only consistent with but dependent upon this religion and is consistent with and dependent upon no other Now to say that the honour I here mean and which was I thought all the honour I could be supposed to mean will uphold must less dictate an untruth is to assert an absurdity too shocking to be conceived

I purposely avoided says Square drawing a conclusion which I thought evident from what I have said but if you perceived it I am sure you have not attempted to answer it However to drop the article of religion I think it is plain from what you have said that we have different ideas of honour or why do we not agree in the same terms of its explanation? I have asserted that true honour and true virtue are almost synonymous terms and they are both founded on the unalterable rule of right and the eternal fitness of things to which an untruth being absolutely repugnant and contrary it is certain that true honour cannot support an untruth In this therefore I think we are agreed but that this honour can be said to be founded on religion to which it is antecedent if by religion be meant any positive law——

I agree answered Thwackum with great warmth with a man who asserts honour to be antecedent to religion! Mr Allworthy did I agree—?

He was proceeding when Mr Allworthy interposed telling them very coldly they had both mistaken his meaning for that he had said nothing of true honour—It is possible however he would not have easily quieted the disputants who were growing equally warm had not another matter now fallen out which put a final end to the conversation at present

Chapter 4

Containing a necessary apology for the author and a childish incident which perhaps requires an apology likewise

Before I proceed farther I shall beg leave to obviate some misconstructions into which the zeal of some few readers may lead them for I would not willingly give offence to any especially to men who are warm in the cause of virtue or religion

I hope therefore no man will by the grossest misunderstanding or perversion of my meaning misrepresent me as endeavouring to cast any ridicule on the greatest perfections of human nature and which do indeed alone purify and ennoble the heart of man and raise him above the brute creation This reader I will venture to say (and by how much the better man you are yourself by so much the more will you be inclined to believe me) that I would rather have buried the sentiments of these two persons in eternal oblivion than have done any injury to either of these glorious causes

On the contrary it is with a view to their service that I have taken upon me to record the lives and actions of two of their false and pretended champions A treacherous friend is the most dangerous enemy and I will say boldly that both religion and virtue have received more real discredit from hypocrites than the wittiest profligates or infidels could ever cast upon them nay farther as these two in their purity are rightly called the bands of civil society and are indeed the greatest of blessings so when poisoned and corrupted with fraud pretence and effectation they have become the worst of civil curses

have enabled men to perpetrate the most cruel mischiefs to their own species

Indeed I doubt not but this ridicule will in general be allowed my chief apprehension is as many true and just sentiments often came from the mouths of these persons lest the whole should be taken together and I should be conceived to ridicule all alike Now the reader will be pleased to consider that as neither of these men were fools they could not be supposed to have holden none but wrong principles and to have uttered nothing but absurdities what injustice therefore must I have done to their characters had I selected only what was bad! And how horribly wretched and maimed must their arguments have appeared!

Upon the whole it is not religion or virtue but the want of them which is here exposed Had not Thwackum too much neglected virtue and Square religion in the composition of their several systems and had not both utterly discarded all natural goodness of heart they had never been represented as the objects of derision in this history in which we will now proceed

This matter then which put an end to the debate mentioned in the last chapter was no other than a quarrel between Master Blifil and Tom Jones the consequence of which had been a bloody nose to the former for though Master Blifil notwithstanding he was the younger was in size above the other s match yet Tom was much his superior at the noble art of boxing

Tom however cautiously avoided all engagements with that youth for besides that Tommy Jones was an inoffensive lad amidst all his roguery and really loved Blifil Mr Thwackum being always the second of the latter would have been sufficient to deter him

But well says a certain author No man is

was somewhat passionate in his disposition immediately caused that phenomenon in the face of the former which we have above remembered

Master Blifil now with his blood running from his nose and the tears galloping after from his eyes appeared before his uncle and the tremendous Thwackum In which court an indictment of assault battery and wounding was instantly preferred against Tom who in his excuse only pleaded the provocation which was indeed all the matter that Master Blifil had omitted

It is indeed possible that this circumstance might have escaped his memory for in his reply he positively insisted that he had made use of no such appellation adding Heaven forbid such naughty words should ever come out of his mouth!

Tom though against all form of law rejoined in affirmance of the words Upon which Master Blifil said It is no wonder Those who will tell one fib will hardly stick at another If I had told my master such a wicked fib as you have done I should be ashamed to show my face

What fib child? cries Thwackum pretty eagerly

Why he told you that nobody was with him a shooting when he killed the partridge but he knows (here he burst into a flood of tears) yes he knows for he confessed it to me that Black George the gamekeeper was there Nay he said—yes you did—deny it if you can that you would not have confest the truth though master had cut you to pieces

At this the fire flashed from Thwackum s eyes and he cried out in triumph— Oh! ho! this is your mistaken notion of honour! This is the boy who was not to be whipped again!" But Mr Allworthy with a more gentle aspect turned towards the lad, and said Is this true child? How came you to persist so obstinately in a falsehood?

Tom said He scorned a lie as much as any one but he thought his honour engaged him to act as he did for he had promised the poor fellow to conceal him which he said "he thought himself farther obliged to as the gamekeeper had begged him not to go into the gentleman s manor and had at last gone himself in compliance with his persuasions" He said This was the whole truth of the matter and he would take his oath of it and concluded with very passionately begging Mr Allworthy to have compassion on the poor fellow s family especially as he himself only had been guilty and the other had been very difficultly prevailed on to do what he did Indeed sir said he it could hardly be called a lie that I told for the poor fellow was entirely innocent of the whole matter I should have gone alone after the birds nay I did go at first and he only followed me to prevent more mischief Do pray sir let me be punished take my little horse away again but pray, sir forgive poor George"

Mr Allworthy hesitated a few moments and then dismissed the boys advising them to live more friendly and peaceably together.

Chapter 5

The opinions of the divine and the philosopher concerning the two boys, with some reasons for their opinions, and other matters

IT is probable that by disclosing this secret which had been communicated in the utmost confidence to him young Blifil preserved his companion from a good lashing for the offence of the bloody nose would have been of itself sufficient cause for Thwackum to have proceeded to correction but now this was totally absorbed in the consideration of the other matter and with regard to this Mr Allworthy declared privately he thought the boy deserved reward rather than punishment, so that Thwackum s hand was withheld by a general pardon

Thwackum whose meditations were full of birch exclaimed against this weak and as he said he would venture to call it wicked lenity To remit the punishment of such crimes was he said to encourage them He enlarged much on the correction of children and quoted many texts from Solomon and others which being to be found in so many other books shall not be found here He then applied him self to the vice of lying on which head he was altogether as learned as he had been on the other

Square said he had been endeavouring to reconcile the behaviour of Tom with his idea of perfect virtue but could not He owned there was something which at first sight ap peared like fortitude in the action but as fortitude was a virtue and falsehood a vice they could by no means agree or unite to-gether He added that as this was in some measure to confound virtue and vice it might be worth Mr Thwackum s consideration whether a larger castigation might not be laid on upon the account

As both these learned men concurred in censuring Jones so were they no less unani mous in applauding Master Blifil To bring truth to light, was by the parson asserted to be the duty of every religious man and by the philosopher this was declared to be highly con formable with the rule of right and the eter nal and unalterable fitness of things

All this however weighed very little with Mr Allworthy He could not be prevailed on to sign the warrant for the execution of Jones There was something within his own breast with which the invincible fidelity which that youth had preserved corresponded much bet ter than it had done with the religion of Thwackum or with the virtue of Square He therefore strictly ordered the former of these gentlemen to abstain from laying violent hands on Tom for what had past The peda gogue was obliged to obey those orders but not without great reluctance and frequent mutterings that the boy would be certainly spoiled

Towards the gamekeeper the good man be haved with more severity He presently sum moned that poor fellow before him and after many bitter remonstrances paid him his wages and dismist him from his service for Mr Allworthy rightly observed that there was a great difference between being guilty of a falsehood to excuse yourself and to excuse an other He likewise urged as the principal mo-tive to his inflexible severity against this man that he had basely suffered Tom Jones to under go so heavy a punishment for his sake whereas he ought to have prevented it by making the discovery himself

When this story became public many people differed from Square and Thwackum in judg ing the conduct of the two lads on the oc casion Master Blifil was generally called a sneaking rascal a poor-spirited wretch with other epithets of the like kind whilst Tom was honoured with the appellations of a brave lad a jolly dog and an honest fellow Indeed his behaviour to Black George much ingratiated him with all the servants for though that fel low was before universally disliked yet he was no sooner turned away than he was as univer sally pitied and the friendship and gallantry of Tom Jones was celebrated by them all with the highest applause and they condemned Master Blifil as openly as they durst without incurring the danger of offending his mother For all this however poor Tom smarted in the flesh for though Thwackum had been in hibited to exercise his arm on the foregoing account yet as the proverb says It is easy to find a stick &c So was it easy to find a rod and indeed the not being able to find one was the only thing which could have kept Thwackum any long time from chastising Jones

Ha

only inducement to the pedagogue it is probable Master Blifil would likewise have had his share but though Mr Allworthy had given him frequent orders to make no difference between the lads yet was Thwackum altogether as kind and gentle to this youth as he was harsh nay even barbarous to the other To say the truth Blifil had greatly gained his master s affections partly by the profound respect he always showed his person but much more by the decent reverence with which he received his doctrine for he had got by heart and frequently repeated his phrases and maintained all his master s religious principles with a zeal which was surprizing in one so young and which greatly endeared him to the worthy preceptor

Tom Jones on the other hand was not only deficient in outward tokens of respect often forgetting to pull off his hat or to bow at his master s approach but was altogether as unmindful both of his master s precepts and example He was indeed a thoughtless giddy youth with little sobriety in his manners and less in his countenance and would often very impudently and indecently laugh at his companion for his serious behaviour

Mr Square had the same reason for his preference of the former lad for Tom Jones showed no more regard to the learned discourses which this gentleman would sometimes throw away upon him than to those of Thwackum He once ventured to make a jest of the rule of right and at another time said he believed there was no rule in the world capable of making such a man as his father (for so Mr Allworthy suffered himself to be called)

Master Blifil on the contrary had address enough at sixteen to recommend himself at one and the same time to both these opposites With one he was all religion with the other he was all virtue And when both were present he was profoundly silent which both interpreted in his favour and in their own

Nor was Blifil contented with flattering both these gentlemen to their faces he took frequent occasions of praising them behind their backs to Allworthy before whom when they two were alone and his uncle commended any religious or virtuous sentiment (for many such came constantly from him) he seldom were meant and he found by experience the great impressions which they made on the philosopher as well as on the divine for to say the truth there is no kind of flattery so irresistible as this at second hand of that singular plan of education which he had laid down for this worthy man having observed the imperfect institution of our public schools and the many vices which boys were there liable to learn had resolved to educate his nephew as well as the other lad whom he had in a manner adopted in his own house where he thought their morals would escape all that danger of being corrupted to which they would be unavoidably exposed in any public school or university

Having therefore determined to commit these boys to the tuition of a private tutor Mr Thwackum was recommended to him for that office by a very particular friend of whose understanding Mr Allworthy had a great opinion and in whose integrity he placed much confidence This Thwackum was fellow of a college where he almost entirely resided and had a great reputation for learning religion and sobriety of manners And these were doubtless the qualifications by which Mr Allworthy s friend had been induced to recommend him though indeed this friend had some obligations to Thwackum s family who were the most considerable persons in a borough which that gentleman represented in parliament

Thwackum at his first arrival was extremely agreeable to Allworthy and indeed he perfectly answered the character which had been given of him Upon longer acquaintance however and more intimate conversation this worthy man saw infirmities in the tutor which he could have wished him to have been without though as those seemed greatly over balanced by his good qualities they did not incline Mr Allworthy to part with him nor would they indeed have justified such a pro-

he imagines that the most intimate acquaintance which he himself could have had with that divine would have informed him of those things which we from our inspiration are en abled to open and discover Of readers who, from such conceits as these, condemn the wisdom or penetration of Mr. Allworthy, I shall not scruple to say, that they make a very bad and ungrateful use of that knowledge which we have communicated to them.

These apparent errors in the doctrine of Thwackum served greatly to palliate the contrary errors in that of Square, which our good man no less saw and condemned He thought, indeed, that the different exuberancies of these gentlemen would correct their different imperfections, and that from both, especially with his assistance, the two lads would derive sufficient precepts of true religion and virtue If the event happened contrary to his expectations, this possibly proceeded from some fault in the plan itself, which the reader hath my leave to discover, if he can for we do not pretend to introduce any infallible characters into this history where we hope nothing will be found which hath never yet been seen in human nature

To return therefore the reader will not, I think, wonder that the different behaviour of the two lads above commemorated produced the different effects of which he hath already seen some instance, and besides this there was another reason for the conduct of the philosopher and the pedagogue, but this being matter of great importance, we shall reveal it in the next chapter.

Chapter 6

Containing a better reason still for the before mentioned opinions

It is to be known then, that those two learned personages, who have lately made a considerable figure on the theatre of this history, had, from their first arrival at Mr All

For this purpose they had cast their eyes on

It may seem remarkable, that, of four persons whom we have commemorated at Mr Allworthy's house, three of them should fix their inclinations on a lady who was never greatly celebrated for her beauty, and who was, more over, now a little descended into the vale of years; but in reality bosom friends, and intimate acquaintance, have a kind of natural propensity to particular females at the house of a friend—viz, to his grandmother, mother, sister, daughter, aunt, niece, or cousin, when they are rich, and to his wife, sister, daughter, niece, cousin, mistress, or servant maid, if they should be handsome.

We would not, however, have our reader imagine, that persons of such characters as were supported by Thwackum and Square, would undertake a matter of this kind, which hath been a little censured by some rigid moralists, before they had thoroughly examined it, and considered whether it was (as Shakespear phrases it) "Stuff o' th' conscience," or no. Thwackum was encouraged to the undertaking by reflecting that to covet your neighbour's sister is nowhere forbidden and he knew it was a rule in the construction of all laws, that "Expressum facit cessare tacitum" The sense of which is, "When a lawgiver sets down plainly his whole meaning, we are prevented from making him mean what we please our selves" As some instances of women, therefore, are mentioned in the divine law, which forbids us to covet our neighbour s goods, and that of a sister omitted he concluded it to be lawful And as to Square, who was in his person what is called a jolly fellow, or a widow's *man, he easily reconciled his choice to the eter*nal fitness of things

Now, as both of these gentlemen were industrious in taking every opportunity of recommending themselves to the widow they apprehended one certain method was, by giving her son the constant preference to the other lad and as they conceived the kindness and affection which Mr Allworthy showed the latter, must be highly disagreeable to her, they doubted not but the laying hold on all occa sions to degrade and vilify him, would be

flogging line, "Castigo te non quod odio

For this reason principally the two gentlemen concurred as we have seen above in their opinion concerning the two lads this being indeed almost the only instance of their con curring on any point for beside the difference of their principles they had both long ago strongly suspected each other s design and hated one another with no little degree of in veteracy

This mutual animosity was a good deal in creased by their alternate successes for Mrs Blifil knew what they would be at long before they imagined it or indeed intended she should for they proceeded with great caution lest she should be offended and acquaint Mr Allworthy But they had no reason for any such fear she was well enough pleased with a passion of which she intended none should have any fruits but herself And the only fruits she designed for herself were flattery and courtship for which purpose she soothed them by turns and a long time equally She was in deed rather inclined to favour the parson s principles but Square s person was more agreeable to her eye for he was a comly man whereas the pedagogue did in countenance very nearly resemble that gentleman who in the Harlot s Progress is seen correcting the ladies in Bridewell

Whether Mrs Blifil had been surfeited with the sweets of marriage or disgusted by its bitters or from what other cause it proceeded I will not determine but she could never be brought to listen to any second proposals However she at last conversed with Square with such a degree of intimacy that malicious tongues began to whisper things of her to which as well for the sake of the lady as that they were highly disagreeable to the rule of right and the fitness of things we will give no credit and therefore shall not blot our paper with them The pedagogue tis certain whipped on without getting a step nearer to his journey s end

Indeed he had committed a great error and that Square discovered much sooner than him self Mrs Blifil (as perhaps the reader may have formerly guessed) was not over and above pleased with the behav*iour of her husband* nay to be hon h

uered at it she had not the most violent regard to the offspring she had by him And in fact she had so little of this regard that in his infancy she seldom saw her son or took any the good man called his own boy, and in all things put on an entire equality with Master Blifil This acquiescence in Mrs Blifil was considered by the neighbours and by the fam ily as a mark of her condescension to her brother s humour and she was imagined by all others as well as Thwackum and Square to hate the foundling in her heart nay the more civility she showed him the more they conceived she detested him and the surer schemes she was laying for his ruin for as they thought it her interest to hate him it was very difficult for her to persuade them she did not

Thwackum was the more confirmed in his opinion as she had more than once slily caused him to whip Tom Jones when Mr Allworthy who was an enemy to this exercise was abroad whereas she had never given any such orders concerning young Blifil And this had likewise imposed upon Square In reality though she certainly hated her own son—of which how ever monstrous it appears I am assured she is not a singular instance—she appeared not withstanding all her outward compliance to be in her heart sufficiently displeased with all the favour shown by Mr Allworthy to the foundling She frequently complained of this behind her brother s back and very sharply censured him for it both to Thwackum and Square nay she would throw it in the teeth of Allworthy himself when a little quarrel or miff as it is vulgarly called arose between them

However when Tom grew up and gave tokens of that gallantry of temper which greatly recommends men to women this dis inclination which she had discovered to him when a child by degrees abated and at last she so evidently demonstrated her affection to him to be much stronger than what she bore her own son that it was impossible to mistake her any longer She was so desirous of often seeing him and discovered such satisfaction and delight in his company that before he was eighteen years old he was become a rival to both Square and Thwackum and what is worse the whole country began to talk as loudly of her inclination to Tom as they had before done of that which she had shown to Square on which account the philosopher con ceived the most implacable hatred for our poor heroe

Chapter 7

In which the author himself makes his appearance on the stage

THOUGH Mr Allworthy was not of him self hasty to see things in a disadvantageous light and was a stranger to the public voice which seldom reaches to a brother or a hus band though it rings in the ears of all the neighbourhood yet was this affection of Mrs Blifil to Tom and the preference which she too visibly gave him to her own son of the utmost disadvantage to that youth

For such was the compassion which inhab ited Mr Allworthy s mind that nothing but the steel of justice could ever subdue it To be unfortunate in any respect was sufficient if there was no demerit to counterpoise it to turn the scale of that good man s pity and to engage his friendship and his benefaction

When therefore he plainly saw Master Blifil was absolutely detested (for that he was) by his own mother he began on that account only to look with an eye of compassion upon him and what the effects of compassion are in good and benevolent minds I need not here explain to most of my readers.

Henceforward he saw every appearance of virtue in the youth through the magnifying end and viewed all his faults with the glass inverted so that they became scarce percep tible And this perhaps the amiable temper of pity may make commendable but the next step the weakness of human nature alone must excuse for he no sooner perceived that pref erence which Mrs Blifil gave to Tom than that poor youth (however innocent) began to sink in his affections as he rose in hers This [illegible]

afterwards produced the mighty events that will be contained hereafter in this history and to which it must be confest the unfortunate lad by his own wantonness wildness and want of caution too much contributed

In recording some instances of these we shall if rightly understood afford a very use ful lesson to those well-disposed youths who shall hereafter be our readers for they may here find that goodness of heart and open ness of temper though these may give them great comfort within and administer to an honest pride in their own minds will by no means alas! do their business in the world. Prudence and circumspection are necessary even to the best of men They are indeed as it were a guard to Virtue without which she can never be safe It is not enough that your designs nay that your actions are intrinsi cally good you must take care they shall ap pear so If your inside be never so beautiful you must preserve a fair outside also This must be constantly looked to or malice and envy will take care to blacken it so that the sagacity and goodness of an Allworthy will not be able to see through it and to discern the beauties within Let this my young readers be your constant maxim that no man can be good enough to enable him to neglect the rules of prudence nor will Virtue herself look beauti ful unless she be bedecked with the outward ornaments of decency and decorum And this precept my worthy disciples if you read with due attention you will I hope find sufficiently enforced by examples in the following pages

I ask pardon for this short appearance by way of chorus on the stage It is in reality for my own sake that while I am discovering the rocks on which innocence and goodness often split I may not be misunderstood to recom mend the very means to my worthy readers by which I intend to show them they will be un done And this as I could not prevail on any of my actors to speak I myself was obliged to declare

Chapter 8

A childish incident in which however is seen a good natured disposition in Tom Jones

THE READER may remember that Mr All worthy gave Tom Jones a little horse as a kind of smart money for the punishment which he imagined he had suffered innocently

This horse Tom kept above half a year and then rode him to a neighbouring fair and sold him

At his return being questioned by Thwac kum what he had done with the money for which the horse was sold he frankly declared he would not tell him

Oho says Thwackum you will not! then I will have it out of your br—h that being the place to which he always applied for informa tion on every doubtful occasion

Tom was now mounted on the back of a footman and everything prepared for execu tion when Mr Allworthy entering the room gave the criminal a reprieve and took hi with him into another apartment whe

ing alone with Tom he put the same question to him which Thwackum had before asked him

Tom answered he could in duty refuse him nothing but as for that tyrannical rascal he would never make him any other answer than with a cudgel with which he hoped soon to be able to pay him for all his barbarities

Mr Allworthy very severely reprimanded the lad for his indecent and disrespectful ex pressions concerning his master but much more for his avowing an intention of revenge He threatened him with the entire loss of his favour if he ever heard such another word from his mouth for he said he would never support or befriend a reprobate By these and the like declarations he extorted some com punction from Tom in which that youth was not over sincere for he really meditated some return for all the smarting favours he had re ceived at the hands of the pedagogue He was however brought by Mr Allworthy to express a concern for his resentment against Thwac kum and then the good man after some wholesome admonition permitted him to pro- ceed wh ch he did as follows –

Indeed my dear sir I love and honour you more than all the world I know the great obligations I have to you and should detest myself if I thought my heart was capable of ingratitude Could the little horse you gave me speak I am sure he could tell you how fond I was of your present for I had more pleasure in feeding him than in riding him Indeed sir it went to my heart to part with him nor would I have sold him upon any other ac count in the world than what I did You your self sir I am convinced in my case would have done the same for none ever so sensibly felt the misfortunes of others What would you feel dear sir if you thought yourself the oc casion of them? Indeed sir there never was any misery like the rs

Like whose child? says Allworthy What do you mean?

Oh sir! answered Tom your poor game keeper with all his large family ever s nce your discarding him have been perishing with all the miseries of cold and hunger I could not bear to see these poor wretches naked and [illegible]

[illegible] he thus proceeded] It was to save them from absolute destruction I parted with your dear present notwithstanding all the value I had for it I sold the horse for them and they have every farthing of the money

Mr Allworthy now stood silent for some mo- ments and before he spoke the tears started from his eyes He at length dismissed Tom with a gentle rebuke advising him for the future to apply to him in cases of distress, rather than to use extraordinary means of re- lieving them himself

This affair was afterwards the subject of much debate between Thwackum and Square Thwackum held that this was flying in Mr Allworthy s face who had intended to punish the fellow for his disobedience He said in some instances what the world called charity appeared to him to be opposing the will of the Almighty which had marked some par ticular persons for destruction and that this was in like manner acting in opposition to Mr Allworthy concluding as usual with a hearty recommendation of birch

Square argued strongly on the other side in opposition perhaps to Thwackum or in com pliance with Mr Allworthy who seemed very much to approve what Jones had done As to what he urged on this occasion as I am con vinced most of my readers will be much abler advocates for poor Jones it would be imper tinent to relate it Indeed it was not difficult to reconcile to the rule of right an action which it would have been impossible to deduce from the rule of wrong

Chapter 9

Containing an incident of a more heinous kind with the comments of Thwackum and Square

IT HATH been observed by some man of much greater reputation for wisdom than my self that misfortunes seldom come single. An instance of this may I believe be seen in those gentlemen who have the misfortune to [illegible]

[illegible] he was discovered to have some time before sold a fine Bible which Mr Allworthy gave him the money arising from which sale he had disposed of in the same manner This Bible Master Blifil had purchased though he had [illegible]

should be sold out of the family at half price He therefore deposited the said half price him self for he was a very prudent lad and so careful of his money that he had laid up al most every penny which he had received from Mr Allworthy

Some people have been noted to be able to read in no book but their own On the con trary from the time when Master Blifil was first possessed of this Bible, he never used any other Nay he was seen reading in it much oftener than he had before been in his own Now as he frequently asked Thwackum to ex plain difficult passages to him that gentleman unfortunately took notice of Tom s name which was written in many parts of the book This brought on an inquiry which obliged Master Blifil to discover the whole matter

Thwackum was resolved a crime of this kind which he called sacrilege should not go unpunished He therefore proceeded immedi ately to castigation and not contented with that he acquainted Mr Allworthy at their next meeting with this monstrous crime as it ap peared to him inveighing against Tom in the most bitter terms and likening him to the buy ers and sellers who were driven out of the tem ple

Square saw this matter in a very different light He said he could not perceive any higher crime in selling one book than in selling an other That to sell Bibles was strictly lawful by all laws both Divine and human and con sequently there was no unfitness in it He told Thwackum that his great concern on this oc casion brought to his mind the story of a very devout woman who out of pure regard to religion stole Tillotson s Sermons from a lady of her acquaintance

This story caused a vast quantity of blood to rush into the parson s face which of itself was none of the palest and he was going to reply with great warmth and anger had not Mrs. Blifil who was present at this debate interposed That lady declared herself abso lutely of Mr Square s side She argued indeed very learnedly in support of his opinion and concluded with saying if Tom had been guilty of any fault she must confess her own son ap peared to be equally culpable for that she could see no difference between the buyer and the seller both of whom were alike to be driven out of the temple

Mrs Blifil having declared her opinion put an end to the debate Square s triumph would almost have stopt his words, had he needed them and Thwackum who for reasons before mentioned durst not venture at disobliging the lady was almost choaked with indignation As to Mr Allworthy he said since the boy had been already punished he would not deliver his sentiments on the occasion and whether he was or was not angry with the lad I must leave to the reader s own conjecture

Soon after this an action was brought against the gamekeeper by Squire Western (the gen tleman in whose manor the partridge was killed) for depredations of the like kind. This was a most unfortunate circumstance for the fellow as it not only of itself threatened his ruin but actually prevented Mr Allworthy from restoring him to his favour for as that gentleman was walking out one evening with Master Blifil and young Jones the latter slily drew him to the habitation of Black George where the family of that poor wretch namely, his wife and children were found in all the misery with which cold hunger and naked ness can affect human creatures for as to the money they had received from Jones former debts had consumed almost the whole

Such a scene as this could not fail of affect ing the heart of Mr Allworthy He immedi ately gave the mother a couple of guineas with which he bid her cloath her children The poor woman burst into tears at this goodness and while she was thanking him could not refrain from expressing her gratitude to Tom who had she said long preserved both her and hers from starving We have not, says she, "had a morsel to eat nor have these poor chil dren had a rag to put on but what his good ness hath bestowed on us For indeed, besides the horse and the Bible Tom had sacrificed a night-gown and other things to the use of this distressed family

On their return home Tom made use of all his eloquence to display the wretchedness of these people and the penitence of Black George himself and in this he succeeded so well that Mr Allworthy said he thought the man had suffered enough for what was past that he would forgive him and think of some means of providing for him and his family

Jones was so delighted with this news that though it was dark when they returned home he could not help going back a mile in a shower of rain to acquaint the poor woman with the glad tidings but like other hasty di vulgers of news he only brought on himself the trouble of contradicting it, for the ill fortune of Black George made use of the very oppor tunity of his friend s absence to overturn all agun

Chapter 10

In which Master Blifil and Jones appear in different lights

MASTER BLIFIL fell very short of his com panion in the amiable quality of mercy but he as greatly exceeded him in one of a much higher kind namely in justice in which he followed both the precepts and example of Thwackum and Square for though they would both make frequent use of the word mercy yet it was plain that in reality Square held it to be inconsistent with the rule of right and Thwackum was for doing justice and leaving mercy to heaven The two gentlemen did in deed somewhat differ in opinion concerning the objects of this sublime virtue by which Thwackum would probably have destroyed one half of mankind and Square the other half

Master Blifil then though he had kept si lence in the presence of Jones yet when he had better considered the matter could by no means endure the thought of suffering his uncle to confer favours on the undeserving He therefore resolved immediately to acquaint him with the fact which we have above slightly hinted to the reader The truth of which was as follows

The gamekeeper about a year after he was dismissed from Mr Allworthy s service and before Tom s selling the horse being in want of bread either to fill his own mouth or those of his family as he passed through a field be longing to Mr Western espied a hare sitting in her form This hare he had basely and bar barously knocked on the head against the laws of the land and no less against the laws of sportsmen

Th h ... ... h

ing evidence against some poacher And now Black George was pitched upon by him as being a per on ...

err

He

cou

gir

an tomers for the squire being charmed with the power of punishing Black George whom a single transgression was sufficient to ruin made no further enquiry

Had this fact been truly laid before Mr All worthy it might probably have done the game keeper very little mischief But there is no zeal blinder than that which is inspired with the love of justice against offenders Master Blifil had forgot the distance of the time He varied likewise in the manner of the fact and by the hasty addition of the single letter S he considerably altered the story for he said that George had wired hares These alterations might probably have been set right had not Master Blifil unluckily insisted on a promise of secrecy from Mr Allworthy before he re vealed the matter to him but by that means the poor gamekeeper was condemned without having an opportunity to defend himself for as the fact of killing the hare and of the action brought were certainly true Mr Allworthy had no doubt concerning the rest

Short lived then was the joy of these poor people for Mr Allworthy the next morning declared he had fresh reason without assign ing it for his anger and strictly forbad Tom to mention George any more though as for his family he said he would endeavour to keep them from starving but as to the fellow him self he would leave him to the laws which friendship was to be tired out by no disap pointments he now determined to try another method of preserving the poor gamekeeper from ruin

Jones was lately grown very intimate with ...

ship that the squire had declared Tom would certainly make a great man if he had but suf ficient encouragement He often wished he had himself a son with such parts and one day very solemnly asserted at a drinking bout that Tom should hunt a pack of hounds for a thousand pound of his money with any huntsman in the whole country

By such kind of talents he had so ingratiated himself with the squire that he was a most welcome guest at his table and a favourite companion in his sport everything which the squire held most dear to wit his guns dogs and horses were now as much at the command of Jones as if they had been his own He re solved therefore to make use of this favour on behalf of his friend Black George whom he hoped to introduce into Mr Western s fam ily in the same capacity in which he had be fore served Mr Allworthy

The reader if he considers that this fellow was already obnoxious to Mr Western and if he considers farther the weighty business by which that gentleman s displeasure had been incurred will perhaps condemn this as a fool ish and desperate undertaking but if he should totally condemn young Jones on that account he will greatly applaud him for strengthening himself with all imaginable in terest on so arduous an occasion

For this purpose then Tom applied to Mr Western s daughter a young lady of about seventeen years of age whom her father next after those necessary implements of sport just before mentioned loved and esteemed above all the world Now as she had some influence on the squire so Tom had some little influence on her But this being the intended heroine of this work a lady with whom we ourselves are greatly in love and with whom many of our readers will probably be in love too be fore we part it is by no means proper she should make her appearance at the end of a book

BOOK IV

Containing the time of a year

Chapter 1

Containing five pages of paper

As TRUTH distingu shes our writings from those idle romances which are filled with mon sters the productions not of nature but of distempered brains and which have been there fore recommended by an eminent critic to the sole use of the pastry cook so on the other hand we would avoid any resemblance to that kind of history which a celebrated poet seems to think is no less calculated for the emolu ment of the brewer as the reading it should be always attended with a tankard of good ale—

While—history with her comrade ale
Soothes the sad series of her serious tale

For as this is the liquor of modern historians nay perhaps their muse if we may believe the opinion of Butler who attributes inspiration to ale it ought likewise to be the potation of the r readers since every book ought to be read with the same spirit and in the same man ner as it is writ Thus the famous author of Hurlothrumbo told a learned bishop that the reason his lordship could not taste the excel lence of his piece was that he did not read it with a fiddle in his hand which instrument he h mself had always had in his own when he composed it

That our work therefore might be in no danger of being likened to the labours of these h storians, we have taken every occasion of interspersing through the whole sundry sim iles descriptions and other kind of poetical embellishments These are indeed designed to supply the place of the said ale and to re fresh the mind whenever those slumbers which in a long work are apt to invade the reader as well as the writer shall begin to creep upon him Without interruptions of this kind the best narrative of plain matter of fact must overpower every reader for nothing but the everlasting watchfulness which Homer has ascribed only to Jove himself can be proof against a newspaper of many volumes

We shall leave to the reader to determ ne with what judgment we have chosen the several occas ons for inserting those orna mental parts of our work Surely it will be allowed that none could be more proper than the present where we are about to introduce a considerable character on the scene no less indeed than the heroine of this hero c his torical prosaic poem Here therefore we have thought proper to prepare the mind of the reader for her reception by filling it with every pleasing image which we can draw from the face of nature And for this method we plead many precedents First this is an art well known to and much practised by our tragick poets who seldom fail to prepare their audience for the reception of their principal characters

Thus the heroe is always introduced

flourish of drums and trumpets in order to rouse a martial spirit in the audience, and to accommodate their ears to bombast and fustian which Mr Locke's blind man would not have grossly erred in likening to the sound of a trumpet Again when lovers are coming forth soft music often conducts them on the stage, either to soothe the audience with the softness of the tender passion or to lull and prepare them for that gentle slumber in which they will most probably be composed by the ensuing scene

And not only the poets but the masters of these poets the managers of playhouses, seem to be in this secret, for besides the aforesaid kettle-drums, &c, which denote the heroe s approach he is generally ushered on the stage by a large troop of half a dozen scene shifters, and how necessary these are imagined to his appearance may be concluded from the following theatrical story —

King Pyrrhus was at dinner at an ale house bordering on the theatre when he was summoned

Wilks therefore was thundering out "Where are the carpenters to walk on before King Pyrrhus? that monarch very quietly eat his mutton and the audience, however impatient, were obliged to entertain themselves with music in his absence

To be plain, I much question whether the politician who hath generally a good nose, hath not scented out somewhat of the utility of this practice I am convinced that awful magistrate my lord mayor contracts a good deal of that reverence which attends him through the year by the several pageants which precede his pomp Nay, I must confess that even I myself who am not remarkably liable to be captivated with show, have yielded not a little to the impressions of much preceding state When I have seen a man strutting in a procession, after others whose business was only to walk before him I have conceived a higher notion of his dignity than I have felt on seeing him in a common situation But there is one instance, which comes exactly up to my purpose This is the custom of sending on a basket woman who is to precede the pomp at a coronation and to strew the stage with flowers, before the great personages be

suaded the people of the real presence of the deity though a plain mortal had personated her and performed her office But we have no such design of imposing on our reader, and therefore those who object to the heathen theology may if they please, change our goddess into the above mentioned basket woman Our intention, in short, is to introduce our heroine with the utmost solemnity in our power, with an elevation of stile, and all other circumstances proper to raise the veneration of our reader Indeed we would, for certain causes advise those of our male readers who have any hearts to read no farther, were we not well assured that how amiable soever the picture of our heroine will appear as it is really a copy from nature many of our fair country women will be found worthy to satisfy any passion and to answer any idea of female perfection which our pencil will be able to raise

And now without any further preface, we proceed to our next chapter

Chapter 2

A short hint of what we can do in the sublime, and a description of Miss Sophia Western

Hushed be every ruder breath May the heathen ruler of the winds confine in iron chains the boisterous limbs of noisy Boreas and the sharp pointed nose of bitter-biting Eurus Do thou, sweet Zephyrus, rising from thy fragrant bed mount the western sky, and lead on those delicious gales, the charms of which call forth the lovely Flora from her chamber, perfumed with pearly dews, when on the 1st of June her birth-day, the blooming maid in loose attire gently trips it over the verdant mead where every flower rises to do her homage till the whole field becomes enamelled and colours contend with sweets which shall ravish her most

So charming may she now appear! and you the feathered choristers of nature, whose sweetest notes not even Handel can excell tune your melodious throats to celebrate her appearance From love proceeds your music, and to love it returns Awaken therefore that gentle passion in every swain for lo! adorned with all the charms in which nature can array her, bedecked with beauty, youth, sprightliness, innocence, modesty, and tenderness breathing sweetness from her rosy lips and darting brightness from her sparkling eyes, the lovely Sophia comes!

Reader perhaps thou hast seen the statue of the Venus de Medicis Perhaps too thou hast seen the gallery of beauties at Hampton Court Thou may st remember each bright Churchill of the galaxy and all the toasts of the Kit-cat Or if their reign was before thy times at least thou hast seen their daughters the no less dazzling beauties of the present age whose names should we here insert we apprehend they would fill the whole vol ume

Now if thou hast seen all these be not afraid of the rude answer which Lord Rochester once gave to a man who had seen many things No If thou hast seen all these without knowing what beauty is thou hast no eyes if without feeling its power thou hast no heart

Yet is it possible my friend that thou may est have seen all these without being able to form an exact idea of Sophia for she did not exactly resemble any of them She was most like the picture of Lady Ranelagh and I have heard more still to the famous dutchess of Mazarine but most of all she resembled one whose image never can depart from my breast and whom, if thou dost remember thou hast then my friend an adequate idea of Sophia

But lest this should not have been thy for tune we will endeavour with our utmost skill to describe this paragon though we are sen sible that our highest abilities are very in adequate to the task

Sophia then the only daughter of Mr West tern was a middle sized woman but rather in clining to tall Her shape was not only exact but extremely delicate and the nice propor tion of her arms promised the truest symmetry in her limbs Her hair which was black was so luxuriant that it reached her middle be fore she cut it to comply with the modern fash ion and it was now curled so gracefully in her neck that few could believe it to be her own If envy could find any part of the face which demanded less commendation than the rest it [illegible]

extinguish Her nose was exactly regular and her mouth in which were two rows of ivory exactly answered Sir John Suckling s descrip tion in those lines —

Her lips were red and one was thin Compar'd to that was next her chin Some bee had stung it newly

Her cheeks were of the oval kind and in her right she had a dimple which the least smile discovered Her chin had certainly its share in forming the beauty of her face but it was dif ficult to say it was either large or small though perhaps it was rather of the former kind Her complexion had rather more of the lily than of the rose but when exercise or modesty in creased her natural colour no vermilion could equal it Then one might indeed cry out with the celebrated Dr Donne

—Her pure and eloquent blood Spoke in her cheeks and so distinctly wrought
That one might almost say her body thought

Her neck was long and finely turned and here if I was not afraid of offending her deli cacy I might justly say the highest beauties of the famous Venus de Medicis were outdone Here was whiteness which no lilies ivory nor alabaster could match The finest cambric might indeed be supposed from envy to cover that bosom which was much whiter than it self —It was indeed

Nitor splendens Pario marmore purius

A gloss shining beyond the purest brightness of Parian marble

Such was the outside of Sophia nor was this beautiful frame disgraced by an inhabitant unworthy of it Her mind was every way equal to her person nay the latter borrowed some charms from the former for when she smiled the sweetness of her temper diffused that glory over her countenance which no regularity of features can give But as there are no perfec tions of the mind which do not discover them selves in that perfect intimacy to which we in tend to introduce our reader with this charm ing young creature so it is needless to mention them here nay it is a kind of tacit affront to our reader s understanding and may also rob him of that pleasure which he will re ceive in forming his own judgment of her character

It may however be proper to say that what ever mental accomplishments she had derived from nature they were somewhat improved and cultivated by art for she had been edu cated under the care of an aunt who was a lady of great discretion and was thoroughly acquainted with the world having lived in her youth about the court whence she had retired some years since into the country —

versation and instructions

fectly well bred though perhaps she wanted a little of that ease in her behaviour which is to be acquired only by habit and living within what is called the polite circle But this to say the truth is often too dearly purchased and though it hath charms so inexpressible that the French perhaps among other qualities mean to express this when they declare they know not what it is yet its absence is well compensated by innocence nor can good sense and a natural gentility ever stand in need of it

Chapter 3

Wherein the history goes back to commemorate a trifling incident that happened some years since but which trifling as it was had some future consequences

The amiable Sophia was now in her eighteenth year when she is introduced into this history Her father as hath been said was fonder of her than of any other human creature To her therefore Tom Jones applied in order to engage her interest on the behalf of his friend the gamekeeper

But before we proceed to this business a short recapitulation of some previous matters may be necessary

Though the different tempers of Mr Allworthy and of Mr Western did not admit of a very intimate correspondence yet they lived upon what is called a decent footing together by which means the young people of both families had been acquainted from their infancy and as they were all near of the same age had been frequent playmates together

The gaiety of Tom s temper suited better with Sophia than the grave and sober disposi

some displeasure at it

As he did not however outwardly express any such disgust it would be an ill office in us into their closets and cupboards only to discover their poverty and meanness to the world

However as persons who suspect they have super or sagacity of Thwackum and Square discerned to have arisen from a much better principle

Tom Jones when very young had presented Sophia with a little bird which he had taken from the nest had nursed up and taught to sing

Of this bird Sophia then about thirteen years old was so extremely fond that her chief business was to feed and tend it and her chief pleasure to play with it By these means little Tommy for so the bird was called was become so tame that it would feed out of the hand of its mistress would perch upon the finger and lie contented in her bosom where it seemed

ing away

One day when Mr Allworthy and his whole family dined at Mr Western s Master Blifil being in the garden with little Sophia and observing the extreme fondness that she showed for her little bird desired her to trust it for a moment in his hands Sophia presently complied with the young gentleman s request and after some previous caution delivered him her bird of which he was no sooner in possession than he slipt the string from its leg and tossed it into the air

The foolish animal no sooner perceived itself at liberty than forgetting all the favours it had received from Sophia it flew directly from distance immediately ran to her assistance

He was no sooner informed of what had happened than he cursed Blifil for a pitiful sake when the branch on which it was perched and that hung over a canal broke and the poor lad plumped over head and ears into the water

Sophia s concern now changed its object And as she apprehended the boy s life was in danger she screamed ten times louder than before and indeed Master Blifil himself now seconded her with all the vociferation in his power

The company who were sitting in a room next the garden were instantly alarmed and came all forth but just as they reached the canal Tom (for the water was luckily pretty shallow in that part) arrived safely on shore

Thwackum fell violently on poor Tom, who stood dropping and shivering before him, when Mr Allworthy desired him to have patience, and turning to Master Blifil said, 'Pray, child, what is the reason of all this disturbance?"

Master Blifil answered, 'Indeed, uncle, I am very sorry for what I have done, I have been unhappily the occasion of it all I had Miss Sophia's bird in my hand, and thinking the poor creature languished for liberty, I own I could not forbear giving it what it desired, for I always thought there was something very cruel in confining anything It seemed to be against the law of nature, by which everything hath a right to liberty, nay, it is even unchristian, for it is not doing what we would be done by, but if I had imagined Miss Sophia would have been so much concerned at it, I am sure I never would have done it, nay, if I had known what would have happened to the bird itself for when Master Jones, who climbed up that tree after it, fell into the water the bird took a second flight, and presently a nasty hawk carried it away '

Poor Sophia, who now first heard of her little Tommy's fate (for her concern for Jones had prevented her perceiving it when it happened), shed a shower of tears These Mr Allworthy endeavoured to assuage, promising her a much finer bird but she declared she would never have another Her father chid her for crying so for a foolish bird but could not help telling young Blifil if he was a son of his, his backside should be well flead

Sophia now returned to her chamber the two young gentlemen were sent home and the rest of the company returned to their bottle, where a conversation ensued on the subject of the bird, so curious that we think it deserves a chapter by itself

Chapter 4

Containing such very deep and grave matters, that some readers, perhaps, may not relish it

SQUARE had no sooner lighted his pipe, than, addressing himself to Allworthy he thus began 'Sir, I cannot help congratulating you on your nephew who at an age when few lads have any ideas but of sensible objects is arrived at a capacity of distinguishing right from wrong To confine anything, seems to me against the law of nature by which everything hath a right to liberty These were his words, and the impression they have made on me is never to be eradicated Can any man have a higher notion of the rule of right, and the eternal fitness of things? I cannot help promising myself, from such a dawn, that the meridian of this youth will be equal to that of either the elder or the younger Brutus"

Here Thwackum hastily interrupted and spilling some of his wine, and swallowing the rest with great eagerness, answered, 'From another expression he made use of, I hope he will resemble much better men The law of nature is a jargon of words, which means nothing I know not of any such law, nor of any right which can be derived from it To do as we would be done by, is indeed a Christian motive, as the boy well expressed himself, and I am glad to find my instructions have borne such good fruit"

'If vanity was a thing fit" says Square, "I might indulge some on the same occasion, for whence only he can have learnt his notions of right or wrong, I think is pretty apparent If there be no law of nature, there is no right nor wrong"

'How!" says the parson "do you then banish revelation? Am I talking with a deist or an atheist?'

"Drink about,' says Western 'Pox of your laws of nature! I don't know what you mean, either of you by right and wrong To take away my girl's bird was wrong in my opinion, and my neighbour Allworthy may do as he pleases, but to encourage boys in such practices is to breed them up to the gallows"

Allworthy answered That he was sorry for what his nephew had done but could not consent to punish him as he acted rather from a generous than unworthy motive' He said 'If the boy had stolen the bird none would have *been more ready to vote for a severe chastise*ment than himself but it was plain that was not his design' and indeed it was as apparent to him that he could have no other view but what he had himself avowed (For as to that malicious purpose which Sophia suspected it never once entered into the head of Mr Allworthy) He at length concluded with again blaming the action as inconsiderate and which, he said was pardonable only in a child.

Square had delivered his opinion so openly that if he was now silent he must submit to have his judgment censured He said therefore with some warmth, "That Mr Allworthy had too much respect to the dirty consideration of property That in passing our judgmen great and mighty actions all private regards should be laid aside for by adhering to those narrow rules the younger Brutus had been condemned of ingratitude and the elder of parricide

And if they had been hanged too for those crimes cried Thwackum they would have had no more than their deserts A couple of heathenish villains! Heaven be praised we have no Brutuses now a-days! I wish Mr Square you would desist from filling the minds of my pupils with such antichristian stuff for the consequence must be while they are under my care its being well scourged out of them again There is your disciple Tom almost spoiled already I overheard him the other day disputing with Master Blifil that there was no merit in faith without works I know that is one of your tenets and I suppose he had it from you"

Don t accuse me of spoiling him says Square Who taught him to laugh at whatever is virtuous and decent and fit and right in the nature of things? He is your own scholar and I disclaim him No no Master Blifil is my boy Young as he is that lad s notions of moral rectitude I defy you ever to eradicate philosophical cant to hurt No no I have taken care to instil such principles into him —

And I have instilled principles into him too cries Square What but the sublime idea of virtue could inspire a human mind with the generous thought of giving liberty? And I repeat to you again if it was a fit thing to be proud I might claim the honour of having infused that idea —

And if pride was not forbidden said Thwackum I might boast of having taught him that duty which he himself assigned as his motive

So between you both says the squire the young gentleman hath been taught to rob my law who was present on the back he cried out What say you to this Mr Counsellor? Is not this against law?

The lawyer with great gravity delivered himself as follows —

If the case be put of a partridge there can be no doubt but an action would lie for though this be feræ naturæ yet being reclaimed property vests but being the case of a singing bird though reclaimed as it is a thing of base nature it must be considered as nullius in bonis In this case therefore I conceive the plaintiff must be non suited and I should dis-advise the bringing any such action

Well says the squire if it be nullus bonus let us drink about and talk a little of the state of the nation or some such discourse that we all understand for I am sure I don t understand a word of this It may be learning and sense for aught I know but you shall never persuade me into it Pox! you have neither of you mentioned a word of that poor lad who deserves to be commended to venture breaking his neck to oblige my girl was a generous-spirited action I have learning enough to see that D—n me here s Tom s health! I shall love the boy for it the longest day I have to live"

Thus was the debate interrupted but it would probably have been soon resumed had not Mr Allworthy presently called for his coach and carried off the two combatants reader though it happened some years before that stage or period of time at which our history is now arrived

Chapter 5

Containing matter accommodated to every taste

Parva leves capiunt animos—Small things affect light minds was the sentiment of a great master of the passion of love And certain

...ny accidents from time to time impro... both these passions in her breast which without our recounting the reader may well conclude from what we have before hinted of the different tempers of these lads and how much the one suited with her own inclinations more than the other To say the truth Sophia when very young discerned that Tom though an idle thoughtless rattling rascal was nobody s enemy but his own and that Master Blifil though a prudent discreet sober young gentleman was at the same time strongly attached to the interest only of one single person and who that single person was the reader will be able to divine without any assistance of ours

These two characters are not always received in the world with the different regard which seems severally due to either and which one would imagine mankind from self interest should show towards them But perhaps there may be a political reason for it in finding one of a truly benevolent disposition men may very reasonably suppose they have found a treasure and be desirous of keeping it like all other good things to themselves Hence they may imagine that to trumpet forth the praises of such a person would in the vulgar phrase be crying Roast meat and calling in partakers of what they intend to apply solely to their own use If this reason does not satisfy the reader I know no other means of accounting for the little respect which I have commonly seen paid to a character which really does great honour to human nature and is productive of the highest good to society But it was otherwise with Sophia She honoured Tom Jones and scorned Master Blifil almost as soon as she knew the meaning of those two words

Sophia had been absent upwards of three years with her aunt during all which time she had seldom seen either of these young gentlemen She dined however once together with her aunt at Mr Allworthy s This was a few days after the adventure of the partridge before commemorated Sophia heard the whole story at table where she said nothing nor indeed could her aunt get many words from her as she returned home but her maid when undressing her happening to say Well miss I suppose you have seen young Master Blifil today? she answered with much passion I hate the name of Master Blifil as I do whatever is base and treacherous and I wonder Mr Allworthy would suffer that old barbarous school master to punish a poor boy so cruelly for what was only the effect of his good nature She then recounted the story to her maid and concluded with saying Don t you think he is a boy of noble spirit?

This young lady was now returned to her father who gave her the command of his house and placed her at the upper end of his table where Tom (who for his great love of hunting was become a great favourite of the squire) often dined Young men of open generous dispositions are naturally inclined to gallantry which if they have good understandings as was in reality Tom s case exerts itself in an obliging complacent behaviour to all women in general This greatly distinguished Tom from the boisterous brutality of mere country squires on the one hand and from the solemn and somewhat sullen deportment of Master Blifil on the other and he began now at twenty to have the name of a pretty fellow among all the women in the neighbourhood

Tom behaved to Sophia with no particularity unless perhaps by showing her a higher respect than he paid to any other This distinction her beauty fortune sense and amiable carriage seemed to demand but as to design upon her person he had none for which we shall at present suffer the reader to condemn him of stupidity but perhaps we shall be able indifferently well to account for it hereafter

Sophia, with the highest degree of innocence and modesty had a remarkable sprightliness in her temper This was so greatly increased when ever she was in company with Tom that had he not been very young and thoughtless he must have observed it or had not Mr Western s thoughts been generally either in the field the stable or the dog kennel it might have perhaps created some jealousy in him but so far was the good gentleman from entertaining any such suspicions that he gave Tom every opportunity with his daughter which any lover could have wished and this Tom innocently improved to better advantage by following only the dictates of his natural gallantry and good nature than he might perhaps have done had he had the deepest designs on the young lady

But indeed it can occasion little wonder that this matter escaped the observation of others since poor Sophia herself never remarked it and her heart was irretrievably lost before she suspected it was in danger

Matters were in this situation when Tom one afternoon finding Sophia alone began after a short apology with a very serious face to acquaint her that he had a favour to ask of her which he hoped her goodness would comply with

Though neither the young man s behaviour nor indeed his manner of opening this business were such as could give her any just cause of suspecting he intended to make love to her yet whether Nature whispered something into her ear or from what cause it arose I will not determine certain it is some idea of that kind must have intruded itself for her colour for sook her cheeks her limbs trembled and her tongue would have faltered had Tom stopped for an answer but he soon relieved her her perplexity by proceeding to inform her of his request which was to solicit her interest on behalf of the gamekeeper whose own ruin and that of a large family must be he said the consequence of Mr Western s pursuing his action against him

Sophia presently recovered her confusion and with a smile full of sweetness said Is small matter was one of her gowns some linen and ten shillings in money of which Tom had heard and it had in reality put this solicitation into his head

Our youth now emboldened with his success resolved to push the matter farther and ventured even to beg her recommendation of him to her father s service protesting that he thought him one of the honestest fellows in the country and extremely well qualified for the place of a gamekeeper which luckily then happened to be vacant

Sophia answered Well I will undertake this too but I cannot promise you as much success as in the former part which I assure you I will not quit my father without obtaining However I will do what I can for the poor fellow for I sincerely look upon him and his family as objects of great compassion And now Mr Jones I must ask you a favour

A favour madam! cries Tom if you knew the pleasure you have given me in the hopes of receiving a command from you you would think by mentioning it you did confer the greatest favour on me for by this dear hand I would sacrifice my life to oblige you

He then snatched her hand and eagerly kissed it which was the first time his lips had ever touched her The blood which before had forsaken her cheeks now made her sufficient amends by rushing all over her face and neck with such violence that they became all of a scarlet colour She now first felt a sensation to which she had been before a stranger and which when she had leisure to reflect on it began to acquaint her with some secrets which the reader if he doth not already guess them will know in due time

Sophia as soon as she could speak (which was not instantly) informed him that the favour she had to desire of him was not to lead

together and expected some day or other to see her father brought home with broken limbs She therefore begged him for her sake to be more cautious and as he well knew Mr Western would follow him not to ride so madly nor to take dangerous leaps for the future

Tom promised faithfully to obey her commands and after thanking her for her kind compliance with his request took his leave and departed highly charmed with his success

Poor Sophia was charmed too but in a very different way Her sensations however the reader s heart (if he or she have any) will better represent than I can if I had as many mouths as ever poet wished for to eat I suppose those many dainties with which he was so plentifully provided

It was Mr Western s custom every afternoon as soon as he was drunk to hear his daughter play on the harpsichord for he was a great lover of music and perhaps had he lived in town might have passed for a connoisseur for he always excepted against the finest compositions of Mr Handel He never relished any music but what was light and airy and indeed his most favourite tunes were Old Sir Simon the King St George he was for England Bobbing Joan and some others

His daughter though she was a perfect mistress of music and would never willingly have played any but Handel s was so devoted to her father s pleasure that she learnt all those tunes to oblige him. However she would now and then endeavour to lead him into her own taste and when he required the repetition of his ballads would answer with a Nay dear

was retired from his bottle she played all his favourites three times over without any solicitation This so pleased the good squire that he started from his couch gave his daughter a kiss and swore her hand was greatly improved She took this opportunity to execute her promise to Tom in which she succeeded so well that the squire declared if she would give him t other bout of Old Sir Simon he would give the gamekeeper his deputation the next morning Sir Simon was played again and again till the charms of the music soothed Mr Western to sleep In the morning Sophia did not fail to remind him of his engagement and his attorney was immediately sent for ordered to stop any further proceedings in the action and to make out the deputation

Tom's success in this affair soon began to ring over the country and various were the censures passed upon it some greatly applauding it as an act of good nature others sneering and saying No wonder that one idle fellow should love another Young Blifil was greatly enraged at it He had long hated Black George in the same proportion as Jones delighted in him not from any offence which he had ever received but from his great love to religion and virtue —for Black George had the reputation of a loose kind of a fellow Blifil therefore represented this as flying in Mr Allworthy's face and declared with great concern that it was impossible to find any other motive for doing good to such a wretch

Thwackum and Square likewise sung to the same tune They were now (especially the latter) become greatly jealous of young Jones with the widow for he now approached the age of twenty was really a fine young fellow and that lady by her encouragements to him seemed daily more and more to think him so

Allworthy was not however moved with their malice He declared himself very well satisfied with what Jones had done He said the perseverance and integrity of his friendship was highly commendable and he wished he could see more frequent instances of that virtue

But Fortune who seldom greatly relishes such sparks as my friend Tom perhaps because they do not pay more ardent addresses to her gave now a very different turn to all his actions and showed them to Mr Allworthy in a light far less agreeable than that gentleman's goodness had hitherto seen them in

Chapter 6

degree lower his character in the estimation of those men of wit and gallantry who approve the heroes in most of our modern comedies

There are two sorts of people who I am afraid have already conceived some contempt for my heroe on account of his behaviour to Sophia The former of these will blame his prudence in neglecting an opportunity to possess himself of Mr Western's fortune and the latter will no less despise him for his backwardness to so fine a girl who seemed ready to fly into his arms if he would open them to receive her

Now though I shall not perhaps be able absolutely to acquit him of either of these offered in mitigation I shall set forth the plain matter of fact and leave the whole to the reader's determination

Mr Jones had somewhat about him which though I think writers are not thoroughly agreed in its name doth certainly inhabit some human breasts whose use is not so properly to distinguish right from wrong as to prompt and incite them to the former and to restrain and withhold them from the latter

This somewhat may be indeed resembled to the famous trunk maker in the playhouse for whenever the person who is possessed of it doth what is right no ravished or friendly spectator is so eager or so loud in his applause on the contrary when he doth wrong no critic is so apt to hiss and explode him

To give a higher idea of the principle I mean as well as one more familiar to the present age it may be considered as sitting on its throne in the mind like the Lord High Chan

integrity which nothing can corrupt

This active principle may perhaps be said to constitute the most essential barrier between us and our neighbours the brutes for if there be some in the human shape who are not under any such dominion I choose rather to consider them as deserters from us to our neighbours among whom they will have the fate of deserters and not be placed in the first rank.

Our heroe whether he derived it from Thwackum or Square I will not determine was very strongly under the guidance of this principle for though he did not always act rightly yet he never did otherwise without feeling and suffering for it It was this which taught him that to repay the civilities and little friendships of hospitality by robbing the house where you have received them is to be the basest and meanest of thieves He did not think the baseness of this offence lessened by the height of the injury committed on the contrary if to steal another's plate deserved death and infamy it seemed to him difficult to assign a punishment adequate to the robbing a man of his whole fortune and of his child into the bargain

This principle therefore prevented him from any thought of making his fortune by such means (for this as I have said is an active principle and doth not content itself with knowledge or belief only) Had he been greatly enamoured of Sophia he possibly might have thought otherwise but give me leave to say there is great difference between running away with a man s daughter from the motive of love and doing the same thing from the motive of theft

Now though this young gentleman was not insensible of the charms of Sophia though he greatly liked her beauty and esteemed all her other qualifications she had made however no deep impression on his heart for which as it renders him liable to the charge of stupidity or at least of want of taste we shall now proceed to account

The truth then is his heart was in the possession of another woman Here I question not but the reader will be surprized at our long taciturnity as to this matter and quite at a loss to divine who this woman was since we have hitherto not dropt a hint of any one likely to be a rival to Sophia for as to Mrs Blifil though we have been obliged to mention some suspicions of her affection for Tom we have not hitherto given the least latitude for imagining that he had any for her and indeed I am sorry to say it but the youth of both sexes are too

pense he will be pleased to remember that wife and five children

The second of these children was a daughter whose name was Molly and who was esteemed one of the handsomest girls in the whole country

Congreve well says there is in true beauty something which vulgar souls cannot admire so can no dirt or rags hide this something from those souls which are not of the vulgar stamp

The beauty of this girl made however no impression on Tom till she grew towards the age of sixteen when Tom who was near three years older began first to cast the eyes of affection upon her And this affection he had fixed on the girl long before he could bring himself to attempt the possession of her person for though his constitution urged him greatly to this his principles no less forcibly restrained him To debauch a young woman however

ily very strongly corroborated all such sober reflections so that he once resolved to get the better of his inclinations and he actually abstained three whole months without ever going to Seagrim s house or seeing his daughter

Now though Molly was as we have said generally thought a very fine girl and in reality she was so yet her beauty was not of the most amiable kind It had indeed very little of feminine in it and would have become a man at least as well as a woman for to say the truth youth and florid health had a very considerable share in the composition

Nor was her mind more effeminate than her person As this was tall and robust so was that bold and forward So little had she of modesty that Jones had more regard for her virtue than she herself And as most probably she liked Tom as well as he liked her so when she perceived his backwardness she herself grew proportionably forward and when she saw he had entirely deserted the house she found means of throwing herself in his way and behaved in such a manner that the youth must have had very much or very little of the heroe if her endeavours had proved unsuccessful In a word she soon triumphed over all the virtuous resolutions of Jones for though she behaved at last with all decent reluctance yet I rather chuse to attribute the triumph to her since in fact it was her design which succeeded

In the conduct of this matter I say Molly so well played her part that Jones attributed the conquest entirely to himself and considered the young woman as one who had the reader will allow to have been a very natural and probable supposition as we have more than once mentioned the uncommon comeliness of his person and indeed he was one of the handsomest young fellows in the world

As there are some minds whose affections like Master Blifil s are solely placed on one single person whose interest and indulgence alone they consider on every occasion regard ing the good and ill of all others as merely in different any farther than as they contribute to the pleasure or advantage of that person so there is a different temper of mind which borrows a degree of virtue even from self love Such can never receive any kind of satisfaction from another without loving the creature to whom that satisfaction is owing and without making its well being in some sort necessary to their own ease

Of this latter species was our heroe He con sidered this poor girl as one whose happiness or misery he had caused to be dependent on himself Her beauty was still the object of de-sire though greater beauty or a fresher object, might have been more so but the little abate ment which fruition had occasioned to this was highly overbalanced by the considerations of the affection which she visibly bore him and which might without any great violence to the word be called love though perhaps it was at first not very judiciously placed

This then was the true reason of that in sensibility which he had shown to the charms of Sophia and that behaviour in her which might have been reasonably enough inter preted as an encouragement to his addresses for as he could not think of abandoning his Molly poor and destitute as she was so no more could he entertain a notion of betraying such a creature as Sophia And surely had he given the least encouragement to any passion for that young lady he must have been abso-lutely guilty of one or other of those crimes either of which would in my opinion have very justly subjected him to that fate which at his first introduction into this history I mentioned to have been generally predicted as his certain destiny

Chapter 7

Being the shortest chapter in this book

HER MOTHER first perceived the alteration in the shape of Molly and in order to hide it from her neighbours she foolishly clothed her in that sack which Sophia had sent her though indeed that young lady had little apprehen sion that the poor woman would have been weak enough to let any of her daughters wear it in that form

Molly was charmed with the first opportu nity she ever had of showing her beauty to ad vantage for though she could very well bear to contemplate herself in the glass even when dressed in rags and though she had in that dress conquered the heart of Jones and per haps of some others yet she thought the addi tion of finery would much improve her charms and extend her conquests

Molly therefore having dressed herself out in this sack with a new laced cap and some other ornaments which Tom had given her repairs to church with her fan in her hand the very next Sunday The great are deceived if they imagine they have appropriated ambition and vanity to themselves These noble qual ities flourish as notably in a country church and churchyard as in the drawing room or in the closet Schemes have indeed been laid in the vestry which would hardly disgrace the conclave Here is a ministry and here is an opposition Here are plots and circumven tions parties and factions equal to those which are to be found in courts

Nor are the women here less practised in the highest feminine arts than their fair superiors in quality and fortune Here are prudes and *coquettes Here are dressing and ogling false-*hood envy malice scandal in short every thing which is common to the most splendid assembly or politest circle Let those of high life therefore no longer despise the ignorance of their inferiors nor the vulgar any longer rail at the vices of their betters

Molly had seated herself some time before she was known by her neighbours And then a whisper ran through the whole congregation Who is she? but when she was discovered such sneering giggling tittering and laugh ing ensued among the women that Mr All worthy was obliged to exert his authority to preserve any decency among them

Chapter 8

A battle sung by the muse in the Homerican stile and which none but the classical rea ler can taste

MR WESTERN had an estate in this pari h and as his house stood at little greater distance from this church than from his own he very often came to Divine Service here and both he and the charming Sophia happened to be present at this time

Sophia was much pleased with the beauty of the girl whom she pitied for her simplicity in having dressed herself in that manner as she saw the envy which it had occasioned among her equals She no sooner came home than she sent for the gamekeeper and ordered him to bring his daughter to her saying she would provide for her in the family and might possibly place the girl about her own person when her own maid who was now going away had left her

Poor Seagrim was thunderstruck at this for he was no stranger to the fault in the shape of his daughter He answered in a stammering voice "That he was afraid Molly would be too awkward to wait on her ladyship as she had never been at service No matter for that says Sophia she will soon improve I am pleased with the girl and am resolved to try her

Black George now repaired to his wife on whose prudent counsel he depended to extricate him out of this dilemma but when he came thither he found his house in some confusion So great envy had this sack occasioned that when Mr Allworthy and the other gentry were gone from church the rage which had hitherto been confined burst into an uproar and having vented itself at first in opprobrious words laughs hisses and gestures betook itself at last to certain missile weapons which though from their plastic nature they threatened neither the loss of life or of limb were however sufficiently dreadful to a well dressed lady Molly had too much spirit to bear this treatment tamely Having therefore—but hold as we are diffident of our own abilities let us here invite a superior power to our assistance

Ye Muses then whoever ye are who love to sing battles and principally thou who whilom didst recount the slaughter in those fields where Hudibras and Trulla fought if thou wert not starved with thy friend Butler assist me on this great occasion All things are not in the power of all

As a vast herd of cows in a rich farmer's yard if while they are milked they hear their calves at a distance lamenting the robbery which is then committing roar and bellow so roared forth the Somersetshire mob an halaloo made up of almost as many squalls screams and other different sounds as there were persons or indeed passions among them some were inspired by rage others alarmed by fear and others had nothing in their heads but the love of fun but chiefly Envy the sister of Satan and his constant companion rushed among the crowd and blew up the fury of the women who no sooner came up to Molly than they pelted her with dirt and rubbish

Molly having endeavoured in vain to make a handsome retreat faced about and laying hold of ragged Bess who advanced in the front of the enemy she at one blow felled her to the ground The whole army of the enemy (though near a hundred in number) seeing the fate of their general gave back many paces and retired behind a new dug grave for the church yard was the field of battle where there was to be a funeral that very evening Molly pursued her victory and catching up a skull which lay on the side of the grave discharged it with such fury that having hit a taylor on the head the two skulls sent equally forth a hollow sound at their meeting and the taylor took presently measure of his length on the ground where the skulls lay side by side and it was doubtful which was the more valuable of the two Molly then taking a thigh bone in her hand fell in among the flying ranks and dealing her blows with great liberality on either side overthrew the carcass of many a mighty heroe and heroine

Recount O Muse the names of those who fell on this fatal day First Jemmy Tweedle felt on his hinder head the direful bone Him the pleasant banks of sweetly winding Stour had nourished where he first learnt the vocal art with which wandering up and down at wakes and fairs he cheered the rural nymphs and swains when upon the green they interweaved the sprightly dance while he himself stood fiddling and jumping to his own music How little now avails his fiddle! He thumps the verdant floor with his carcass Next old Echepole the sowgelder received a blow in his forehead from our Amazonian heroine and immediately fell to the ground He was a swinging fat fellow and fell with almost as much noise as a house His tobacco-box dropped at the same time from his pocket which Molly took up as lawful spoils Then Kate of the Mill tumbled unfortunately over a tombstone which catching hold of her ungartered stocking inverted the order of nature and gave her heels the superiority to her head Betty Pippin with young Roger her lover fell both to the ground where oh perverse fate! she salutes the earth and he the sky Tom Freckle the smith s son was the next victim to her rage He was an ingenious workman and made excellent pattens nay the very patten with which he was knocked down was his own workmanship Had he been at that time singing psalms in the church he would have avoided a broken head Miss Crow the daughter of a farmer John Giddish himself a farmer Nan Slouch Esther Codling Will Spray Tom Bennet the three Misses Potter whose father keeps the sign of the Red Lion Betty Chambermaid Jack Ostler, and many others of inferior note lay rolling among the graves

Not that the strenuous arm of Molly reached all these for many of them in their flight over threw each other

But now Fortune fearing she had acted out of character and had inclined too long to the same side especially as it was the right side hastily turned about for now Goody Brown—whom Zekiel Brown caressed in his arms nor he alone but half the parish besides so famous was she in the fields of Venus nor indeed less in those of Mars The trophies of both these her husband always bore about on his head and face for if ever human head did by its horns display the amorous glories of a wife Zekiel s did nor did his well scratched face less denote her talents (or rather talons) of a different kind

No longer bore this Amazon the shameful flight of her party She stopt short and calling aloud to all who fled spoke as follows Ye Somersetshire men or rather ye Somersetshire women are ye not ashamed thus to fly from a single woman? But if no other will oppose her I myself and Joan Top here will have the honour of the victory Having thus said she flew at Molly Seagrim and easily wrenched the thigh bone from her hand at the same time clawing off her cap from her head Then laying hold of the hair of Molly with her left hand she attacked her so furiously in the face with the right that the blood soon began to trickle from her nose Molly was not idle this while She soon removed the clout from the head of Goody Brown and then fastening on her hair with one hand with the other she caused another bloody stream to issue forth from the nostrils of the enemy

When each of the combatants had borne off sufficient spoils of hair from the head of her antagonist the next rage was against the garments In this attack they exerted so much violence that in a very few minutes they were both naked to the middle

It is lucky for the women that the seat of fistycuff war is not the same with them as among men but though they may seem a little to deviate from their sex when they go forth to battle yet I have observed they never so far forget as to assail the bosoms of each other where a few blows would be fatal to most of them This I know, some derive from their being of a more bloody inclination than the males On which account they apply to the nose as to the part whence blood may most easily be drawn but this seems a far fetched as well as ill natured supposition

Goody Brown had great advantage of Molly in this particular for the former had indeed no breasts her bosom (if it may be so called) as well in colour as in many other properties exactly resembling an antient piece of parchment upon which any one might have drummed a considerable while without doing her any great damage

Molly, beside her present unhappy condition was differently formed in those parts and might perhaps have tempted the envy of Brown to give her a fatal blow had not the lucky arrival of Tom Jones at this instant put an immediate end to the bloody scene

This accident was luckily owing to Mr Square for he Master Blifil, and Jones had mounted their horses after church to take the air and had ridden about a quarter of a mile when Square changing his mind (not idly but for a reason which we shall unfold as soon as we have leisure) desired the young gentlemen to ride with him another way than they had at first purposed This motion being complied with brought them of necessity back again to the churchyard

Master Blifil who rode first seeing such a mob assembled and two women in the posture in which we left the combatants stopt his horse to enquire what was the matter A country fellow scratching his head answerd him I don t know measter un t I an t please your honour here hath been a vight I think between Goody Brown and Moll Seagrim

Who who? cries Tom but without waiting for an answer having discovered the features of his Molly through all the discomposure in which they now were he hastily alighted turned his horse loose and leaping over the wall ran to her She now first bursting into tears told him how barbarously she had been treated Upon which forgetting the sex of Goody Brown or perhaps not knowing it in his rage—for in reality she had no feminine appearance but a petticoat which he might not observe—he gave her a lash or two with his horsewhip and then flying at the mob who were all accused by Moll he dealt his blows so profusely on all sides that unless I would again invoke the muse (which the good natured reader may think a little too hard upon her as she hath so lately been violently sweated) it would be impossible for me to recount the horse whipping of that day

Having scoured the whole coast of the en emy as well as any of Homer s heroes ever did, or as Don Quixote or any knight errant in the world could have done he returned to Molly whom he found in a condition which must give both me and my reader pain was it to be described here Tom raved like a madman beat his breast tore his hair stamped on the ground and vowed the utmost vengeance on all who had been concerned He then pulled off his coat and buttoned it round her put his hat upon her head wiped the blood from her face as well as he could with his handkerchief and called out to the servant to ride as fast as possible for a side saddle or a pillion that he might carry her safe home.

Master Blifil objected to the sending away the servant as they had only one with them but as Square seconded the order of Jones he was obliged to comply

The servant returned in a very short time with the pillion and Molly having collected her rags as well as she could was placed be- hind him In which manner she was carried home Square Blifil and Jones attending

Here Jones having received his coat given her a sly kiss and whispered her that he would return in the evening quitted his Molly and rode on after his companions

Chapter 9

Containing matter of no very peaceable colour

MOLLY had no sooner apparelled herself in her accustomed rags than her sisters began to fall violently upon her particularly her eldest sister who told her she was well enough served How had she the assurance to wear a [illegible]

warrant you think it belongs to your beauty I suppose you think yourself more handsomer than any of us -- Hand her down the bit of glass from over the cupboard cries another I d wash the blood from my face before I talked of my beauty -- You d better have minded what the parson says cries the eld est "and not a harkened after men voke -- Indeed child and so she had says the mother sobbing she hath brought a disgrace upon us all She s the vurst of the vamily that ever was a whore

'You need not upbraid me with that mother cried Molly you yourself was brought to-bed of sister there, within a week after you was married

Yes hussy answered the enraged mother so I was and what was the mighty matter of that? I was made an honest woman then and if you was to be made an honest woman I should not be angry but you must have to do- ing with a gentleman you nasty slut you will have a bastard hussy you will and that I defy any one to say of me

In this situation Black George found his family when he came home for the purpose before mentioned As his wife and three daughters were all of them talking together and most of them crying it was some time be- fore he could get an opportunity of being heard but as soon as such an interval occurred he acquainted the company with what Sophia had said to him

Goody Seagrim then began to revile her daughter afresh Here says she you have brought us into a fine quandary indeed What will madam say to that big belly? Oh that ever I should live to see this day!

Molly answered with great spirit And what is this mighty place which you have got for me father? (for he had not well understood the phrase used by Sophia of being about her person) I suppose it is to be under the cook but I shan t wash dishes for anybody My gentleman will provide better for me See what he hath given me this afternoon He hath promised I shall never want money and you shan t want money neither mother if you will hold your tongue and know when you are well And so saying she pulled out several guineas and gave her mother one of them

The good woman no sooner felt the gold within her palm than her temper began (such is the efficacy of that panacea) to be mollified Why husband says she would any but such a blockhead as you not have enquired what place this was before he had accepted it? Per haps as Molly says it may be in the kitchen and truly I don t care my daughter should be a scullion wench for poor as I am I am a gentlewoman And thof I was obliged as my father who was a clergyman died worse than nothing and so could not give me a shilling of portion to undervalue myself by marrying a poor man yet I would have you to know I have a spirit above all them things Marry come up! it would better become Madam Western to look at home and remember who her own grandfather was. Some of my family, for aught I know, might ride in their coaches, when the grandfathers of some voke walked a-voot I warrant she fancies she did a mighty matter, when she sent us that old gownd, some of my family would not have picked up such rags in the street; but poor people are always trampled upon —The parish need not have been in such a fluster with Molly You might have told them, child, your grandmother wore better things new out of the shop"

'Well, but consider," cried George, "what answer shall I make to madam?'

"I don't know what answer,' says she, "you are always bringing your family into one quandary or other Do you remember when you shot the partridge the occasion of all our misfortunes? Did not I advise you never to go into Squire Western's manor? Did not I tell you many a good year ago what would come of it? But you would have your own headstrong ways yes, you would, you villain '

Black George was, in the main a peaceable kind of fellow, and nothing choleric nor rash, yet did he bear about him something of what the antients called the irascible, and which his wife, if she had been endowed with much wisdom, would have feared He had long experienced, that when the storm grew very high, arguments were but wind, which served rather to increase, than to abate it He was therefore seldom unprovided with a small switch a remedy of wonderful force, as he had often essayed, and which the word villain served as a hint for his applying

No sooner, therefore, had this symptom appeared, than he had immediate recourse to the said remedy, which though, as it is usual in all very efficacious medicines, it at first seemed to heighten and inflame the disease soon produced a total calm, and restored the patient to perfect ease and tranquillity.

This is, however, a kind of horse medicine, which requires a very robust constitution to digest, and is therefore proper only for the vulgar, unless in one single instance, viz., where superiority of birth breaks out in which case we should not think it very improperly applied by any husband whatever, if the application was not in itself so base that, like certain applications of the physical kind which need not be mentioned, it so much degrades and contaminates the hand employed in it that no gentleman should endure the thought of anything so low and detestable

The whole family were soon reduced to a state of perfect quiet, for the virtue of this medicine, like that of electricity, is often communicated through one person to many others, who are not touched by the instrument. To say the truth, as they both operate by friction, it may be doubted whether there is not something analogous between them of which Mr. Freke would do well to enquire, before he publishes the next edition of his book

A council was now called, in which, after many debates, Molly still persisting that she would not go to service, it was at length resolved, that Goody Seagrim herself should wait on Miss Western, and endeavour to procure the place for her eldest daughter, who declared great readiness to accept it but Fortune, who seems to have been an enemy of this little family, afterwards put a stop to her promotion

Chapter 10

A story told by Mr Supple, the curate The penetration of Squire Western His great love for his daughter, and the return to it made by her

The next morning Tom Jones hunted with Mr Western, and was at his return invited by that gentleman to dinner

The lovely Sophia shone forth that day with more gaiety and sprightliness than usual. Her battery was certainly levelled at our heroe, though, I believe, she herself scarce yet knew her own intention but if she had any design of charming him she now succeeded

Mr Supple, the curate of Mr Allworthy's parish, made one of the company He was a good natured worthy man but chiefly remarkable for his great taciturnity at table, though his mouth was never shut at it In short, he had one of the best appetites in the world However, the cloth was no sooner taken away, than he always made sufficient amends for his silence for he was a very hearty fellow, and his conversation was often entertaining never offensive

At his first arrival, which was immediately before the entrance of the roast beef, he had given an intimation that he had brought some news with him, and was beginning to tell, that he came that moment from Mr Allworthy's, when the sight of the roast beef struck him dumb permitting him only to say grace, and to declare he must pay his respect to the baronet for so he called the sirloin

When dinner was over, being reminded by

Sophia of his news he began as follows· "I believe, lady, your ladyship observed a young woman at church yesterday at even song who was drest in one of your outlandish garments, I think I have seen your ladyship in such a one However, in the country, such dresses are

Rara avis in terris, nigroque simillima cygno

That is, madam, as much as to say, 'A rare bird upon the earth and very like a black swan' The verse is in Juvenal But to return to what I was relating I was saying such garments are rare sights in the country, and perchance, too, it was thought the more rare, respect being had to the person who wore it, who they tell me, is the daughter of Black George, your worship's gamekeeper, whose sufferings, I should have opined might have taught him more wit, than to dress forth his wenches in such gaudy apparel She created so much confusion in the congregation that if Squire Allworthy had not silenced it, it would have interrupted the service for I was once about to stop in the middle of the first lesson Howbeit, nevertheless after prayer was over, and I was departed home, this occasioned a battle in the churchyard, where amongst other mischief, the head of a travelling fidler was very much broken This morning the fidler came to Squire Allworthy for a warrant, and the wench was brought before him The squire was inclined to have compounded matters, when lo! on a sudden the wench appeared (I ask your ladyship s pardon) to be as it were, at the eve of bringing forth a bastard The squire demanded of her who was the father? But she pertinaciously refused to make any response So that he was about to make her mittimus to Bridewell when I departed"

"And is a wench having a bastard all your news, doctor? cries Western, 'I thought it might have been some public matter, something about the nation '

'I am afraid it is too common indeed," answered the parson ' but I thought the whole story altogether deserved commemorating As to national matters your worship knows them best My concerns extend no farther than my own parish '

'Why, ay," says the squire, 'I believe I do know a little of that matter, as you say But come, Tommy, drink about, the bottle stands with you"

Tom begged to be excused for that he had particular business, and getting up from table, escaped the clutches of the squire, who was rising to stop him, and went off with very littl ceremony

The squire gave him a good curse at his de parture; and then turning to the parson, he cried out, "I smoke it· I smoke it Tom is cer tainly the father of this bastard Zooks, par son, you remember how he recommended the veather o' her to me D—n un, what a sly b—d 'tis Ay, ay, as sure as two-pence, Tom is the veather of the bastard"

"I should be very sorry for that," says the parson

'Why sorry," cries the squire· "Where is the mighty matter o't? What, I suppose dost pre tend that thee hast never got a bastard? Pox more good luck's thine! for I warrant hast done a therefore many's the good time and often"

"Your worship is pleased to be jocular,' answered the parson, "but I do not only ani madvert on the sinfulness of the action— though that surely is to be greatly deprecated —but I fear his unrighteousness may injur him with Mr Allworthy And truly I must say though he hath the character of being a littl wild, I never saw any harm in the young man nor can I say I have heard any, save what you worship now mentions I wish, indeed, he wa a little more regular in his responses at church but altogether he seems

Ingenui vultus puer ingenuique pudoris

That is a classical line, young lady, and, bein rendered into English, is, 'a lad of an inge young gentleman (for so I think I may call him, notwithstanding his birth) appears to me a very modest civil lad, and I should be sorry that he should do himself any injury in Squire Allworthy s opinion"

"Poogh!' says the squire· "Injury, with All worthy! Why, Allworthy loves a wench him self Doth not all the country know whose son Tom is? You must talk to another person in that manner I remember Allworthy at col lege"

'I thought," said the parson, ' he had never been at the university"

Yes, yes, he was," says the squire "and many a wench have we two had together As arrant a whore master as any within five miles o'un No, no It will do'n no harm with he assure yourself, nor with anybody else Ask Sophy there—You have not the worse opinion of a young fellow for getting a bastard have you girl? No no the women will like un the better for t

This was a cruel question to poor Sophia She had observed Tom s colour change at the parson s story and that with his hasty and abrupt departure, gave her sufficient reason to think her father s suspicion not groundless Her heart now at once discovered the great secret to her which it had been so long disclosing by little and little and she found herself highly interested in this matter In such a situation her father's malapert question rushing suddenly upon her produced some symptoms which might have alarmed a suspicious heart but to do the squire justice that was not his fault When she rose therefore from her chair and told him a hint from him was always sufficient to make her withdraw he suffered her to leave the room and then with great gravity of countenance remarked That it was better to see a daughter over modest than over forward —a sentiment which was highly applauded by the parson

There now ensued between the squire and the parson a most excellent political discourse framed out of newspapers and political pamphlets in which they made a libation of four bottles of wine to the good of their country and then the squire being fast asleep the parson lighted his pipe mounted his horse and rode home

When the squire had finished his half hour s nap he summoned his daughter to her harpsichord but she begged to be excused that evening on account of a violent head-ache This remission was presently granted for indeed she seldom had occasion to ask him twice as he loved her with such ardent affection that by gratifying her he commonly conveyed the highest gratification to himself She was really what he frequently called her his little darling and she well deserved to be so for she returned all his affection in the most ample manner She had preserved the most inviolable duty to him in all things and this her love made not only easy but so delightful that when one of her companions laughed at her for placing so much merit in such scrupulous obedience as that young lady called it Sophia answered You mistake me madam if you think I value myself upon this account for besides that I am barely discharging my duty I am likewise pleasing myself I can truly say I have no delight equal to that of contributing to my father s happiness and if I value myself my dear it is on having this power and not on executing it

This was a satisfaction however which poor Sophia was incapable of tasting this evening She therefore not only desired to be excused from her attendance at the harpsichord but likewise begged that he would suffer her to absent herself from supper To this request likewise the squire agreed though not without some reluctance for he scarce ever permitted her to be out of his sight unless when he was engaged with his horses dogs or bottle Nevertheless he yielded to the desire of his daughter though the poor man was at the same time obliged to avoid his own company (if I may so express myself) by sending for a neighbouring farmer to sit with him

Chapter 11

The narrow escape of Molly Seagrim with some observations for which we have been forced to dive pretty deep into nature

Tom Jones had ridden one of Mr Western s horses that morning in the chase so that having no horse of his own in the squire s stable he was obliged to go home on foot this he did so expeditiously that he ran upwards of three miles within the half hour

Just as he arrived at Mr Allworthy s outward gate he met the constable and company with Molly in their possession whom they were conducting to that house where the inferior sort of people may learn one good lesson viz respect and deference to their superiors since it must show them the wide distinction Fortune intends between those persons who are to be corrected for their faults and those who are not which lesson if they do not learn I am afraid they very rarely learn any other good lesson or improve their morals at the House of Correction

A lawyer may perhaps think Mr Allworthy exceeded his authority a little in this instance And to say the truth I question as here was no regular information before him whether his conduct was strictly regular However as his intention was truly upright he ought to be excused in foro conscientiae since so many arbitrary acts are daily committed by magistrates who have not this excuse to plead for themselves

Tom was no sooner informed by the constable whither they were proceeding (indeed he pretty well guessed it of himself) than he caught Molly in his arms and embracing her tenderly before them all, swore he would murder the first man who offered to lay hold of her He bid her dry her eyes and be comforted, for, wherever she went, he would accompany

ment only to his father (for so he now called Allworthy), for he durst, he said, be assured, that when he had alledged what he had to say in her favour, the girl would be discharged

The constable, who, I make no doubt, would have surrendered his prisoner had Tom demanded her, very readily consented to this request So back they all went into Mr Allworthy s hall, where Tom desired them to stay till his return, and then went himself in pursuit of the good man As soon as he was found, Tom threw himself at his feet, and having begged a patient hearing, confessed himself to be the father of the child of which Molly was then big He entreated him to have compassion on the poor girl and to consider, if there was any guilt in the case, it lay principally at his door

If there is any guilt in the case! answered Allworthy warmly Are you then so profligate and abandoned a libertine to doubt whether the breaking the laws of God and man the corrupting and ruining a poor girl be guilt? I own indeed it doth lie principally upon you and so heavy it is, that you ought to expect it should crush you"

Whatever may be my fate' says Tom 'let me succeed in my intercessions for the poor girl I confess I have corrupted her! but whether she shall be ruined depends on you For Heaven s sake, sir, revoke your warrant, and do not send her to a place which must unavoidably prove her destruction

Allworthy bid him immediately call a serv-

final resolution which upon his knees he besought him might be in favour of the girl, that she might be permitted to go home to her parents, and not be exposed to a greater degree of shame and scorn than must necessarily fall upon her 'I know," said he, that is too forgive me, I hope I shall deserve it"

Allworthy hesitated some time, and at l

said, 'Well, I will discharge my mittimus— You may send the constable to me" He was instantly called, discharged, and so was the girl

It will be believed that Mr Allworthy failed not to read Tom a very severe lecture on this occasion but it is unnecessary to insert it here as we have faithfully transcribed what he said

on the young man, who was no hardened sinner that he retired to his own room, where he passed the evening alone, in much melancholy contemplation

Allworthy was sufficiently offended by this transgression of Jones, for notwithstanding the assertions of Mr Western, it is certain this worthy man had never indulged himself in any loose pleasures with women, and greatly condemned the vice of incontinence in others Indeed there is much reason to imagine that there was not the least truth in what Mr Western affirmed especially as he laid the scene of those impurities at the university, where Mr Allworthy had never been In fact, the good squire was a little too apt to indulge that kind of pleasantry which is generally called rhodomontade but which may, with as much propriety, be expressed by a much shorter word and perhaps we too often supply the use of this little monosyllable by others since very much of what frequently passes in the world for wit and humour should, in the strictest purity of language, receive that short appellation, which, in conformity to the well bred laws of custom, I here suppress

But whatever detestation Mr Allworthy had to this or to any other vice, he was not so blinded by it but that he could discern any virtue in the guilty person, as clearly indeed as if there had been no mixture of vice in the same character While he was angry therefore with the incontinence of Jones he was no less pleased with the honour and honesty of his self accusation He began now to form in his mind the same opinion of this young fellow, which we hope, our reader may have conceived And in balancing his faults with his perfections, atter seemed rather to preponderate

It was se, theref hwac
kum, wl ediately Mr Blifil wi unbend inst lworthy ing an y.' T

were too generally addicted to this vice, but he believed that youth was sincerely affected with what he had said to him on the occasion, and he hoped he would not transgress again " So that, as the days of whipping were at an end, the tutor had no other vent but his own mouth for his gall, the usual poor resource of impotent revenge.

But Square, who was a less violent, was a much more artful man, and as he hated Jones more perhaps than Thwackum himself did, so he contrived to do him more mischief in the mind of Mr. Allworthy

The reader must remember the several little incidents of the partridge, the horse, and the Bible, which were recounted in the second book By all which Jones had rather improved than injured the affection which Mr All worthy was inclined to entertain for him The same, I believe, must have happened to him with every other person who hath any idea of friendship, generosity, and greatness of spirit, that is to say, who hath any traces of goodness in his mind

Square himself was not unacquainted with the true impression which those several instances of goodness had made on the excellent heart of Allworthy, for the philosopher very well knew what virtue was, though he was not always perhaps steady in its pursuit, but as for Thwackum, from what reason I will not determine, no such thoughts ever entered into his head he saw Jones in a bad light and he imagined Allworthy saw him in the same, but that he was resolved, from pride and stubbornness of spirit, not to give up the boy whom he had once cherished since by so doing, he must tacitly acknowledge that his former opinion of him had been wrong

Square therefore embraced this opportunity of injuring Jones in the tenderest part, by giving a very bad turn to all these before-mentioned occurrences I am sorry, sir, said he, to own I have been deceived as well as yourself I could not, I confess, help being pleased with what I ascribed to the motive of friendship, though it was carried to an excess, and all excess is faulty and vicious but in this I made allowance for youth Little did I suspect that the sacrifice of truth which we both imagined to have been made to friendship, was in reality a prostitution of it to a depraved and debauched appetite You now plainly see whence all the seeming generosity of this young man to the family of the gamekeeper proceeded He supported the father in order to corrupt the daughter, and preserved the family from starving to bring one of them to shame and ruin This is friendship! this is generosity! As Sir Richard Steele says, 'Gluttons who give high prices for delicacies, are very worthy to be called generous' In short I am resolved, from this instance, never to give way to the weakness of human nature more, nor self, yet were they too plausible to be absolutely and hastily rejected, when laid before his eyes by another Indeed what Square had said sunk very deeply into his mind and the uneasiness which it there created was very visible to the other, though the good man would not acknowledge this, but made a very slight answer, and forcibly drove off the discourse to some other subject It was well perhaps for poor Tom, that no such suggestions had been made before he was pardoned, for they certainly stamped in the mind of Allworthy the first bad impression concerning Jones.

Chapter 12

Containing much clearer matters, but which flowed from the same fountain with those in the preceding chapter

The reader will be pleased, I believe, to dreams less in the morning, when Mrs Honour, her maid, attended her at the usual hour, she was found already up and drest

Persons who live two or three miles' distance in the country are considered as next-door neighbours, and transactions at the one house fly with incredible celerity to the other Mrs Honour, therefore, had heard the whole story of Molly s shame, which she, being of a very communicative temper, had no sooner entered the apartment of her mistress, than she began to relate in the following manner —

La ma am, what doth your la'ship think? the girl that your la ship saw at church on Sunday, whom you thought so handsome, though you would not have thought her so handsome look like a confident slut and to be sure she hath laid the child to young Mr Jones And all the parish says Mr Allworthy is so angry with young Mr Jones that he won t see him To be sure one can t help pitying the poor young man and yet he doth not deserve much pity neither for demeaning himself with such kind of trumpery Yet he is so pretty a gentleman I should be sorry to have him turned out of doors I dares to swear the wench was as willing as he for she was always a forward kind of body And when wenches are so coming young men are not so much to be blamed neither for to be sure they do no more than what is natural Indeed it is beneath them to meddle with such dirty draggle tails and whatever happens to them it is good enough for them And yet to be sure the vile baggages are most in fault I wishes with all my heart they were well to be whipped at the cart s tail for it is pity they should be the ruin of a pretty young gentleman and nobody can deny but that Mr Jones is one of the most handsomest young men that ever——

She was running on thus when Sophia with a more peevish voice than she had ever spoken to her in before cried Prithee why dost thou trouble me with all this stuff? What concern have I in what Mr Jones doth? I suppose you are all alike And you seem to me to be angry it was not your own case

I ma am! answered Mrs Honour I am sorry your ladyship should have such an

said he was a handsome man? Everybody says it as well as I To be sure I never thought as it was any harm to say a young man was handsome but to be sure I shall never think him so any more now for handsome is that handsome does A beggar wench!——

Stop thy torrent of impertinence cries Sophia and see whether my father wants me at breakfast

Mrs Honour then flung out of the room muttering much to herself of which Marry come up I assure you was all that could be plainly distinguished

Whether Mrs Honour really deserved that suspicion of which her mistress gave her a hint is a matter which we cannot indulge our reader s curiosity by resolving We will however make him amends in disclosing what stolen into the bosom of this young lady That it had there grown to a pretty great height before she herself had discovered it When she first began to perceive its symptoms the sensations were so sweet and pleasing that she had not resolution sufficient to check or repel them and thus she went on cherishing a passion of which she never once considered the consequences

This incident relating to Molly first opened her eyes She now first perceived the weakness of which she had been guilty and though it caused the utmost perturbation in her mind yet it had the effect of other nauseous physic and for the time expelled her distemper Its operation indeed was most wonderfully quick and in the short interval while her maid was absent so entirely removed all symptoms that when Mrs Honour returned with a summons reason we hope that learned faculty for whom we have so profound a respect will pardon us the violent hands we have been necessitated to lay on several words and phrases which of right belong to them and without which our descriptions must have been often unintelligible

Now there is no one circumstance in which the distempers of the mind bear a more exact analogy to those which are called bodily than that aptness which both have to a relapse This is plain in the violent diseases of ambition and avarice I have known ambition when cured at court by frequent disappointments (which are the only physic for it) to break out again in a contest for foreman of the grand jury at an assizes and have heard of a man who had so far conquered avarice as to give away many a sixpence that comforted himself at last on his deathbed by making a crafty and advantageous bargain concerning his ensuing funeral with an undertaker who had married his only child

In the affair of love which out of strict conformity with the Stoic philosophy we shall here treat as a disease this proneness to relapse is no less conspicuous Thus it happened to poor Sophia upon whom the very next time she saw young Jones all the former symptoms returned and from that time cold and hot fits alternately seized her heart

The situation of this young lady was now very different from what it had ever been before That passion which had formerly been so exquisitely delicious, became now a scorpion in her bosom She resisted it therefore with her utmost force, and summoned every argument her reason (which was surprisingly strong for her age) could suggest, to subdue and expel it In this she so far succeeded, that she began to hope from time and absence a perfect cure She resolved therefore to avoid Tom Jones as much as possible, for which purpose she began to conceive a design of visiting her aunt, to which she made no doubt of obtaining her father's consent

But Fortune, who had other designs in her head, put an immediate stop to any such proceeding, by introducing an accident, which will be related in the next chapter

Chapter 13

A dreadful accident which befel Sophia. The gallant behaviour of Jones, and the more dreadful consequence of that behaviour to the young lady, with a short digression in favour of the female sex

MR WESTERN grew every day fonder and fonder of Sophia, insomuch that his beloved dogs themselves almost gave place to her in his affections but as he could not prevail on himself to abandon these he contrived very cunningly to enjoy their company, together with that of his daughter, by insisting on her riding a hunting with him

Sophia, to whom her father's word was a law, readily complied with his desires, though she had not the least delight in a sport, which was of too rough and masculine a nature to suit with her disposition She had however another motive, beside her obedience, to accompany the old gentleman in the chase, for by her presence she hoped in some measure to restrain his impetuosity, and to prevent him from so frequently exposing his neck to the utmost hazard

The strongest objection was that which would have formerly been an inducement to her, namely, the frequent meeting with young Jones, whom she had determined to avoid, but as the end of the hunting season now approached, she hoped, by a short absence with her aunt, to reason herself entirely out of her unfortunate passion, and had not any doubt of being able to meet him in the field the subsequent season without the least danger

On the second day of her hunting as she was returning from the chase, and was arrived within a little distance from Mr Western's house, her horse, whose mettlesome spirit required a better rider, fell suddenly to prancing and capering in such a manner that she was in the most imminent peril of falling Tom Jones, who was at a little distance behind saw this and immediately galloped up to her assistance As soon as he came up he leapt from his own horse, and caught hold of hers by the bridle The unruly beast presently reared himself on end on his hind legs and threw his lovely burthen from his back, and Jones caught her in his arms

She was so affected with the fright, that she was not immediately able to satisfy Jones, who was very sollicitous to know whether she had received any hurt She soon after, however, recovered her spirits, assured him she was safe, and thanked him for the care he had taken of her Jones answered, 'If I have preserved you, madam, I am sufficiently repaid, for I promise you, I would have secured you from the least harm at the expense of a much greater misfortune to myself than I have suffered on this occasion '

'What misfortune? replied Sophia eagerly, I hope you have come to no mischief?'

'Be not concerned, madam,' answered Jones "Heaven be praised you have escaped so well, considering the danger you was in If I have broke my arm, I consider it as a trifle, in comparison of what I feared upon your account '

Sophia then screamed out, "Broke your arm! Heaven forbid '

'I am afraid I have, madam," says Jones [illegible]

[illegible]

support her and as her thoughts were in no less agitation she could not refrain from giving Jones a look so full of tenderness, that it almost argued a stronger sensation in her mind, than even gratitude and pity united can raise in the gentlest female bosom, without the assistance of a third more powerful passion

Mr Western who was advanced at some distance when this accident happened was returned as were the rest of the horsemen Sophia immediately acquainted them with what had befallen Jones and begged them to take care of him Upon which Western who had been much alarmed by meeting his daughter s horse without its rider and was now overjoyed to find her unhurt cried out I am glad it is no worse If Tom hath broken his arm we will get a joiner to mend un again

The squire alighted from his horse and proceeded to his house on foot with his daughter and Jones An impartial spectator who had met them on the way would on viewing their several countenances have concluded Sophia alone to have been the object of compassion for as to Jones he exulted in having probably saved the life of the young lady at the price only of a broken bone and Mr Western though he was not unconcerned at the accident which had befallen Jones was however delighted in a much higher degree with the fortunate escape of his daughter

The generosity of Sophia s temper construed this behaviour of Jones into great bravery and it made a deep impression on her heart for certain it is that there is no one quality which so generally recommends men to women as this proceeding if we believe the common opinion from that natural timidity of the sex which is says Mr Osborne so great that a woman is the most cowardly of all the creatures God ever made —a sentiment more remarkable for its bluntness than for its truth Aristotle in his Politics doth them I believe more justice when he says The modesty and fortitude of men differ from those virtues in women for the fortitude which becomes a woman would be cowardice in a man and the modesty which becomes a man would be pertness in a woman Nor is there perhaps more of truth in the opinion of those who derive the partiality which women are inclined to show to the brave from this excess of their fear Mr Bayle (I think in his article of

[illegible]

who of all others saw farthest into human nature and who introduces the heroine of his Odyssey the great pattern of matrimonial love and constancy assigning the glory of her husband as the only source of her affection towards him *

* The English reader will not find th s in the [illegible] timent is entirely left out in the

However this be certain it is that the accident operated very strongly on Sophia and, indeed after much enquiry into the matter I am inclined to believe that at this very time the charming Sophia made no less impression on the heart of Jones to say truth he had for some time become sensible of the irresistible power of her charms

Chapter 14

The arrival of a surgeon—his operations and a long dialogue between Sophia and her maid

When they arrived at Mr Western s hall Sophia who had tottered along with much difficulty sunk down in her chair but by the assistance of hartshorn and water she was prevented from fainting away and had pretty well recovered her spirits when the surgeon who was sent for to Jones appeared Mr Western who imputed these symptoms in his daughter to her fall advised her to be presently blooded by way of prevention In this opinion he was seconded by the surgeon who gave so many reasons for bleeding and quoted so many cases where persons had miscarried for want of it that the squire became very importunate and indeed insisted peremptorily that his daughter should be blooded

Sophia soon yielded to the commands of her father though entirely contrary to her own inclinations for she suspected I believe less danger from the fright than either the squire or the surgeon She then stretched out her beautiful arm and the operator began to prepare for his work

While the servants were busied in providing

[illegible]

sinuated was not at present to be apprehended Sophia declared she was not under the least apprehension adding If you open an artery I promise you I ll forgive you Will you? cries Western D—n me if I will If he does thee the least mischief d—n me if I don t ha the heart s blood o un out The surgeon assented to bleed her upon these conditions and then proceeded to his operation which he performed with as much dexterity as he had promised and with as much quickness for he took but little blood from her saying it was much safer to bleed again and again, than to take away too much at once

Sophia, when her arm was bound up, retired for she was not willing (nor was it, perhaps, strictly decent) to be present at the operation on Jones Indeed, one objection which she had to bleeding (though she did not make it) was the delay which it would occasion to setting the broken bone For Western, when Sophia was concerned, had no consideration but for her, and as for Jones himself, he "sat like patience on a monument smiling at grief" To say the truth, when he saw the blood springing from the lovely arm of Sophia, he scarce thought of what had happened to himself.

The surgeon now ordered his patient to be stript to his shirt, and then entirely baring the arm, he began to stretch and examine it, in such a manner that the tortures he put him to caused Jones to make several wry faces which the surgeon observing, greatly wondered at, crying, 'What is the matter, sir? I am sure it is impossible I should hurt you" And then holding forth the broken arm, he began a long and very learned lecture of anatomy, in which simple and double fractures were most accurately considered, and the several ways in which Jones might have broken his arm were discussed with proper annotations showing how many of these would have been better, and how many worse than the present case

Having at length finished his laboured harangue, with which the audience though it had greatly raised their attention and admiration were not much edified, as they really understood not a single syllable of all he had said he proceeded to business, which he was more expeditious in finishing than he had been in beginning.

Jones was then ordered into a bed which Mr Western compelled him to accept at his own house, and sentence of water gruel was passed upon him

Among the good company which had attended in the hall during the bone-setting Mrs Honour was one, who being summoned to her mistress as soon as it was over and asked by her how the young gentleman did presently launched into extravagant praises on the magnanimity, as she called it, of his behaviour, which, she said was so charming in so pretty a creature" She then burst forth into much warmer encomiums on the beauty of his person, enumerating many particulars and ending with the whiteness of his skin

This discourse had an effect on Sophia's countenance, which would not perhaps have

ously placed opposite to her, gave her an opportunity of surveying those features in which, of all others she took most delight, so she had not once removed her eyes from that amiable object during her whole speech

Mrs Honour was so intirely wrapped up in the subject on which she exercised her tongue, and the object before her eyes that she gave her mistress time to conquer her confusion, which having done, she smiled on her maid, and told her, 'she was certainly in love with this young fellow"—"I in love, madam!' answers she 'upon my word, ma'am, I assure you ma'am upon my soul, ma'am I am not"—"Why, if you was" cries her mistress, 'I see no reason that you should be ashamed of it, for he is certainly a pretty fellow"—'Yes, ma'am," answered the other, 'that he is, the most handsomest man I ever saw in my life Yes, to be sure, that he is and as your ladyship says I don't know why I should be ashamed of loving him though he is my betters To be sure gentlefolks are but flesh and blood no more than us servants Besides as for Mr. Jones thof Squire Allworthy hath made a gentleman of him he was not so good as myself by birth for thof I am a poor body I am an honest person's child, and my father and mother were married, which is more than some people can say as high as they hold their heads Marry come up! I assure you, my dirty cousin! thof his skin be so white, and to be sure it is the most whitest that ever was seen, I grim s dirty leavings"

Perhaps Sophia might have suffered her easy task, for certainly there were some pas-

* This is the second person of low condition appear stranger than they can be thought at present

sages in her speech which were far from being agreeable to the lady However, she now checked the torrent as there seemed no end of its flowing "I wonder," says she, "at your assurance in daring to talk thus of one of my father's friends As to the wench, I order you never to mention her name to me And with regard to the young gentleman's birth, those who can say nothing more to his disadvantage, may as well be silent on that head, as I desire you will be for the future'

'I am sorry I have offended your ladyship," answered Mrs Honour I am sure I hate Molly Seagrim as much as your ladyship can, and as for abusing Squire Jones, I can call all the servants in the house to witness, that whenever any talk hath been about bastards, I have always taken his part, for which of you, says I to the footman, would not be a bastard, if he could to be made a gentleman of? And, says I I am sure he is a very fine gentleman, and he hath one of the whitest hands in the world for to be sure so he hath and, says I, one of the sweetest temperedest, best natured est men in the world he is and says I, all the servants and neighbours all round the country loves him And to be sure, I could tell your ladyship something but that I am afraid it would offend you — What could you tell me, Honour? says Sophia 'Nay ma am, to be sure he meant nothing by it, therefore I would not have your ladyship be offended'—' Prithee tell me, says Sophia I will know it this in stant '— Why, ma am' answered Mrs Hon our, he came into the room one day last week when I was at work, and there lay your ladyship s muff on a chair and to be sure he put his hands into it that very muff your lady ship gave me but yesterday La! says I, Mr Jones you will stretch my lady's muff, and spoil it but he still kept his hands in it and then he kissed it—to be sure I hardly ever saw such a kiss in my life as he gave it —' I sup pose he did not know it was mine, replied Sophia Your ladyship shall hear, ma am He kissed it again and again and said it was the prettiest muff in the world La! sir says I you have seen it a hundred times Yes Mrs Hon our cried he but who can see anything beau tiful in the presence of your lady but herself? —Nay that s not all neither but I hope your ladyship won t be offended for to be sure he meant nothing One day as your ladyship was playing on the harpsichord to my master Mr. Jones was sitting in the next room and me-thought he looked melancholy La! says I Mr Jones, what's the matter? a penny for yo thoughts, says I Why, hussy, says he, startin up from a dream, what can I be thinking when that angel your mistress is playing? An then squeezing me by the hand, Oh! M Honour, says he, how happy will that man b —and then he sighed Upon my troth l breath is as sweet as a nosegay—But to sure he meant no harm by it. So I hope yo ladyship will not mention a word, for he ga me a crown never to mention it, and ma me swear upon a book, but I believe, inde it was not the Bible"

Till something of a more beautiful

this any more to me—nor to anybody else will not betray you—I mean, I will not angry, but I am afraid of your tongue W my girl, will you give it such liberties?'— N ma'am," answered she, "to be sure, I wo sooner cut out my tongue than offend y ladyship To be sure I shall never mentio word that your ladyship would not have m —' Why, I would not have you mention any more,' said Sophia, 'for it may come my father s ears, and he would be angry w

Honour, "I protest I believe he meant n ing I thought he talked as if he was ou his senses, nay, he said he believed he was side himself when he had spoken the wo Ay, sir, says I, I believe so too Yes, says Honour—But I ask your ladyship's pard I could tear my tongue out for offending y

Go on says Sophia, "you may mention thing you have not told me before"—' Honour says he (this was some time a wards when he gave me the crown) I neither such a coxcomb, or such a villain think of her in any other delight but as goddess as such I will always worship adore her while I have breath—This was ma am, I will be sworn, to the best of my membrance I was in a passion with him self, till I found he meant no harm'— deed, Honour' says Sophia, 'I believe have a real affection for me I was prov the other day when I gave you warning b you have a desire to stay with me, you sh —' To be sure, ma am,' answered Mrs Hon "I shall never desire to part with your l ship To be sure, I almost cried my eyes when you gave me warning It would be very ungrateful in me to desire to leave your lady ship because as why I should never get so

tion which had wrought such an effect on Sophia that she was perhaps more obliged to her bleeding in the morning than she at the time had apprehended she should be As to the present situation of her mind I shall adhere to a rule of Horace by not attempting to describe it from despair of success Most of my readers will suggest it easily to themselves and the few who cannot would not under stand the picture or at least would deny it to be natural if ever so well drawn

BOOK V

Containing a portion of time somewhat longer than half a year

Chapter 1

Of the serious in writing and for what purpose it is introduced

Peradventure there may be no parts in this prodigious work which will give the reader less pleasure in the perusing than those which have given the author the greatest pains in composing Among these probably may be reckoned those initial essays which we have prefixed to the historical matter contained in every book and which we have determined to be essentially necessary to this kind of writing of which we have set ourselves at the head

For this our determination we do not hold ourselves strictly bound to assign any reason it being abundantly sufficient that we have laid it down as a rule necessary to be observed in all prosai-comi epic writing Who ever de manded the reasons of that nice unity of time or place which is now established to be so essential to dramatic poetry? What critic hath been ever asked why a play may not contain two days as well as one? Or why the audience (provided they travel like electors without any expense) may not be wafted fifty miles as well as five? Hath any commentator well ac counted for the limitation which an antient critic hath set to the drama which he will have contain neither more nor less than five acts? Or hath any one living attempted to explain [illegible]

drawing room! Upon all these occasions the world seems to have embraced a maxim of our law viz *cuicunque in arte sua perito creden dum est for it seems perhaps difficult to con ceive that any one should have had enough of impudence to lay down dogmatical rules in any art or science without the least founda tion In such cases therefore we are apt to conclude there are sound and good reasons at the bottom though we are unfortunately not able to see so far

Now in reality the world have paid too great a compliment to critics and have imag ined them men of much greater profundity than they really are From this complacence the critics have been emboldened to assume a dictatorial power and have so far succeeded that they are now become the masters and have the assurance to give laws to those authors from whose predecessors they originally re ceived them

The critic rightly considered is no more than the clerk whose office it is to transcribe the rules and laws laid down by those great judges whose vast strength of genius hath placed them in the light of legislators in the several sciences over which they presided This office was all which the critics of old aspired to nor did they ever dare to advance a sentence without supporting it by the author ity of the judge from whence it was borrowed

But in process of time and in ages of igno-rance the clerk began to invade the power and assume the dignity of his master The laws of writing were no longer founded on the prac tice of the author but on the dictates of the critic The clerk became the legislator and those very peremptorily gave laws whose busi ness it was at first only to transcribe them

Hence arose an obvious and perhaps an un

*Every man is to be trusted in his own art

avoidable error, for these critics being men of shallow capacities very easily mistook mere form for substance They acted as a judge would, who should adhere to the lifeless letter of law, and reject the spirit Little circum stances, which were perhaps accidental in a great author, were by these critics considered to constitute his chief merit, and transmitted as essentials to be observed by all his successors. To these encroachments, time and ignorance, the two great supporters of imposture, gave authority, and thus many rules for good writ ing have been established, which have not the least foundation in truth or nature, and which commonly serve for no other purpose than to curb and restrain genius, in the same manner as it would have restrained the dancing master, had the many excellent treatises on that art laid it down as an essential rule that every man must dance in chains

To avoid, therefore, all imputation of laying down a rule for posterity, founded only on the authority of ipse dixit *—for which, to say the truth we have not the profoundest venera tion—we shall here waive the privilege above contended for and proceed to lay before the reader the reasons which have induced us to intersperse these several digressive essays in the course of this work

And here we shall of necessity be led to open a new vein of knowledge, which if it hath been discovered, hath not, to our remembrance, been wrought on by any antient or modern [illegible]

[illegible] in constituting in us the idea of all beauty, as well natural as artificial for what demon strates the beauty and excellence of anything but its reverse? Thus the beauty of day and that of summer is set off by the horrors of night and winter And, I believe if it was pos sible for a man to have seen only the two former, he would have a very imperfect idea of their beauty

But to avoid too serious an air can it be doubted but that the finest woman in the world would lose all benefit of her charms in the eye of a man who had never seen one of another cast? The ladies themselves seem so sensible of this that they are all industrious to procure foils nay, they will become foils to themselves for I have observed (at Bath par ticularly) that they endeavour to appear as ugly as possible in the morning, in order to set off that beauty which they intend to show you in the evening

Most artists have this secret in practice though some, perhaps, have not much studied the theory The jeweller knows that the finest brilliant requires a foil, and the painter, by the contrast of his figures, often acquires great applause

A great genius among us will illustrate this matter fully I cannot, indeed, range him un der any general head of common artists, as he hath a title to be placed among those

Inventas qui vitam excoluere per artes
Who by invented arts have life improved

I mean here the inventor of that most exquisite entertainment, called the English Pantomime

This entertainment consisted of two parts, which the inventor distinguished by the names of the serious and the comic The serious ex hibited a certain number of heathen gods and heroes who were certainly the worst and dull est company into which an audience was ever introduced, and (which was a secret known to few) were actually intended so to be, in order to contrast the comic part of the entertain ment, and to display the tricks of harlequin to the better advantage

This was, perhaps, no very civil use of such personages but the contrivance was, never [illegible]

duller and dullest for the comic was certainly duller than anything before shown on the stage, and could be set off only by that super lative degree of dulness which composed the serious So intolerably serious, indeed, were these gods and heroes, that harlequin (though the English gentleman of that name is not at all related to the French family, for he is of a much more serious disposition) was always welcome on the stage as he relieved the au dience from worse company

Judicious writers have always practised this [illegible]

in the very next line

Indignor quandoque bonus dormitat Homerus Verum opere in longo fas est obrepere somnum

I grieve if e er great Homer chance to sleep, Yet slumbers on long works have right to creep

For we are not here to understand, as perhaps some have, that an author actually falls asleep while he is writing It is true, that readers are too apt to be so overtaken, but if the work was

* An assertion without proof

as long as any of Oldmixon the author himself is too well entertained to be subject to the least drowsiness. He is as Mr Pope observes

Sleepless himself to give his readers sleep

To say the truth, these soporific parts are so many scenes of serious artfully interwoven in order to contrast and set off the rest and this is the true meaning of a late facetious writer who told the public that whenever he was dull they might be assured there was a design in it.

In this light then or rather in this darkness, I would have the reader to consider these initial essays. And after this warning, if he shall be of opinion that he can find enough of serious in other parts of this history he may pass over these, in which we profess to be laboriously dull and begin the following books at the second chapter

Chapter 2

In which Mr Jones receives many friendly visits during his confinement with some fine touches of the passion of love, scarce visible to the naked eye

Tom Jones had many visitors during his confinement though some, perhaps were not very agreeable to him. Mr Allworthy saw him almost every day but though he pitied Tom's sufferings, and greatly approved the gallant behaviour which had occasioned them yet he thought this was a favourable opportunity to bring him to a sober sense of his indiscreet conduct and that wholesome advice for that purpose could never be applied at a more proper season than at the present when the mind was softened by pain and sickness and alarmed by danger and when its attention was unembarrassed with those turbulent passions which engage us in the pursuit of pleasure.

At all seasons, therefore when the good man was alone with the youth especially when the latter was totally at ease he took occasion to remind him of his former miscarriages, but in the mildest and tenderest manner and only in order to introduce the caution which he prescribed for his future behaviour on which alone," he assured him "would depend his own felicity and the kindness which he might yet promise himself to receive at the hands of his father by adoption unless he should hereafter forfeit his good opinion for as to what had past," he said, "it should be all forgiven and forgotten He therefore advised him to make a good use of this accident that so in the end it might prove a visitation for his own good"

Thwackum was likewise pretty assiduous in his visits and he too considered a sick-bed to be a convenient scene for lectures. His stile however was more severe than Mr Allworthy's he told his pupil "That he ought to look on his broken limb as a judgment from heaven on his sins. That it would become him to be daily on his knees pouring forth thanksgivings that he had broken his arm only and not his neck which latter" he said "was very probably reserved for some future occasion and that, perhaps, not very remote. For his part he said, "he had often wondered some judgment had not overtaken him before but it might be perceived by this, that Divine punishments though slow are always sure Hence likewise he advised him to foresee with equal certainty the greater evils which were yet behind and which were as sure as this of overtaking him in his state of reprobacy These are said he "to be averted only by such a thorough and sincere repentance as is not to be expected or hoped for from one so abandoned in his youth and whose mind, I am afraid is totally corrupted It is my duty however to exhort you to this repentance though I too well know all exhortations will be vain and fruitless. But liberavi animam meam I can accuse my own conscience of no neglect though it is at the same time with the utmost concern I see you travelling on to certain misery in this world, and to as certain damnation in the next."

Square talked in a very different strain he said, "Such accidents as a broken bone were below the consideration of a wise man. That it was abundantly sufficient to reconcile the mind to any of these mischances, to reflect that they are liable to befal the wisest of mankind and are undoubtedly for the good of the whole He said It was a mere abuse of words to call those things evils in which there was no moral unfitness that pain which was the worst consequence of such accidents, was the most contemptible thing in the world with more of the like sentences extracted out of the second book of Tully's Tusculan questions, and from the great Lord Shaftesbury In pronouncing these he was one day so eager that he unfortunately bit his tongue and in such a manner that it not only put an end to his discourse but created much emotion in him, and caused him to mutter an oath or two but what was worst of all, this accident gave Thwackum who was present and who held all such doctrine to be heathenish and atheistical an opportunity to clap a judgment on his back Now this was done with so malicious a sneer that it totally unhinged (if I may so say) the temper of the philosopher which the bite of his tongue had somewhat ruffled and as he was disabled from venting his wrath at his lips he had possibly found a more violent method of revenging himself had not the surgeon who was then luckily in the room contrary to his own interest interposed and preserved the peace

Mr Blifil visited his friend Jones but seldom and never alone This worthy young man however professed much regard for him, and as great concern at his misfortune but cautiously avoided any intimacy lest as he frequently hinted it might contaminate the sobriety of his own character for which purpose he had constantly in his mouth that proverb in which Solomon speaks against evil com*munication* Not that he was so bitter as Thwackum for he always expressed some hopes of Tom s reformation which he said "the unparalleled goodness shown by his uncle on this occasion must certainly effect in one not absolutely abandoned but concluded if Mr Jones ever offends hereafter I shall not be able to say a syllable in his favour

As to Squire Western he was seldom out of the sick room unless when he was engaged either in the field or over his bottle Nay he would sometimes retire hither to take his beer and it was not without difficulty that he was prevented from forcing Jones to take his beer too for no quack ever held his nostrum to be a more general panacea than he did this which he said had more virtue in it than was in all the physic in an apothecary s shop He was however by much entreaty prevailed on to forbear the application of this medicine but from serenading his patient every hunting morning with the horn under his window it was impossible to withhold him nor did he ever lay aside that hallow with which he entered into all companies when he visited Jones without any regard to the sick person s being at that time either awake or asleep

This boisterous behaviour as it meant no harm, so happily it effected none and was abundantly compensated to Jones, as soon as he was able to sit up by the company of Sophia whom the squire then brought to visit him nor was it, indeed long before Jones was able to attend her to the harpsichord where she would kindly condescend for hours together to charm him with the most delicious music unless when the squire thought proper to interrupt her by insisting on Old Sir Simon or some other of his favourite pieces

Notwithstanding the nicest guard which Sophia endeavoured to set on her behaviour she could not avoid letting some appearances now and then slip forth for love may again be likened to a disease in this, that when it is denied a vent in one part it will certainly break out in another What her lips therefore concealed her eyes her blushes and many little involuntary actions betrayed.

One day when Sophia was playing on the harpsichord and Jones was attending the squire came into the room crying, "There, Tom I have had a battle for thee below stairs with thick parson Thwackum He hath been a telling Allworthy before my face that the broken bone was a judgment upon thee D—n it says I how can that be? Did he not come by it in defence of a young woman? A judgment indeed! Pox if he never doth anything worse he will go to heaven sooner than all the parsons in the country He hath more reason to glory in it than to be ashamed of it — Indeed sir says Jones I have no reason for either but if it preserved Miss Western I shall always think it the happiest accident of my life "— "And to gu said the squire to zet Allworthy against thee vor it! D—n un if the parson had unt his petticuoats on I should have lent un o flick for I love thee dearly my boy and d—n me if there is anything in my power which I won t do for thee Sha t take thy choice of all the horses in my stable to-morrow morning except only the Chevalier and Miss Slouch" Jones thanked him but declined accepting the offer Nay added the squire sha t ha the sorrel mare that Sophy rode She cost me fifty guineas and comes six years old this grass"

If she had cost me a thousand cries Jones passionately I would have given her to the dogs Pooh! pooh! answered Western "what! because she broke thy arm? Shouldst forget and forgive I thought hadst been more a man than to bear malice against a dumb creature —Here Sophia interposed and put an end to the conversation by desiring her father s leave to play to him a request which he never refused

The countenance of Sophia had undergone more than one change during the foregoing speeches and probably she imputed the pa-

ionate resentment which Jones had expressed gainst the mare to a different motive from at from which her father had derived it Her pirits were at this time in a visible flutter d she played so intolerably ill that had not ern soon fallen asleep he must have re- t Jones however who was sufficiently ake and was not without an ear any more without eyes made some observations which being joined to all which the reader remember to have passed formerly gave im pretty strong assurances when he came to on the whole that all was not well in the tender bosom of Sophia an opinion which y young gentlemen will I doubt not ex wonder at his not having been well confirmed in long ago To confess the truth had rather too much diffidence in himself and was not forward enough in seeing the ad ances of a young lady a misfortune which can be cured only by that early town education which is at present so generally in fashion

When these thoughts had fully taken pos session of Jones they occasioned a perturba tion in his mind which in a constitution less pure and firm than his might have been at n season attended with very dangerous consequences He was truly sensible of the great worth of Sophia He extremely liked her person no less admired her accomplishments and tenderly loved her goodness In reality as he had never once entertained any thought of possessing her nor had ever given the least voluntary indulgence to his inclinations he had a much stronger passion for her than he himself was acquainted with His heart now brought forth the full secret at the same time that it assured him the adorable object re- turned his affection

Chapter 3

Which all who have no heart will think to contain much ado about nothing

The reader will perhaps imagine the sen sations which now arose in Jones to have been so sweet and delicious that they would rather tend to produce a chearful serenity in the mind than any of those dangerous effects which we have mentioned but in fact sensa tions of this kind however delicious are at their first recognition of a very tumultuous nature and have very little of the opiate in them They were moreover in the present case embittered with certain circumstances which being mixed with sweeter ingredients tended altogether to compose a draught that might be termed bitter sweet than which as nothing can be more disagreeable to the palate so nothing in the metaphorical sense can be so injurious to the mind

For first though he had sufficient founda tion to flatter himself in what he had observed in Sophia he was not yet free from doubt of misconstruing compassion or at best, esteem into a warmer regard He was far from a san guine assurance that Sophia had any such affec tion towards him as might promise his inclina tions that harvest which if they were en couraged and nursed they would finally grow up to require Besides if he could hope to find no bar to his happiness from the daughter he thought himself certain of meeting an effec- tual bar in the father who though he was a country squire in his diversions was perfectly a man of the world in whatever regarded his fortune had the most violent affection for his only daughter and had often signified in his cups the pleasure he proposed in seeing her married to one of the richest men in the county Jones was not so vain and senseless a coxcomb as to expect from any regard which Western had professed for him that he would ever be induced to lay aside these views of advancing his daughter He well knew that fortune is generally the principal if not the sole con sideration which operates on the best of par ents in these matters for friendship makes us warmly espouse the interest of others but it is very cold to the gratification of their pas sions Indeed to feel the happiness which may result from this it is necessary we should pos- sess the passion ourselves As he had therefore no hopes of obtaining her father s consent so he thought to endeavour to succeed without it and by such means to frustrate the great point of Mr Western s life was to make a very ill use of his hospitality and a very ungrateful return to the many little favours received (however roughly) at his hands If he saw such a consequence with horror and d sdain how much more was he shocked with what regarded Mr Allworthy to whom as he had more than filial obligations so had he for him more than fil al piety He knew the nature of that good man to be so averse to any baseness or treach ery that the least attempt of such a kind would make the sight of the guilty person for ever odious to his eyes and his name a detestable sound in his ears The appearance of such un surmountable difficulties was sufficient to have inspired him with despair however ardent his wishes had been but even these were controuled by compassion for another woman The idea of lovely Molly now intruded itself before him He had sworn eternal constancy in her arms and she had as often vowed never to which she would be liable and of which he would be doubly the occasion first by seducing and then by deserting her for he well knew the hatred which all her neighbours and even her own sisters bore her and how ready they would all be to tear her to pieces Indeed he had exposed her to more envy than shame or rather to the latter by means of the former for many women abused her for being a whore while they envied her her lover and her finery and would have been themselves glad to have purchased these at the same none a right of aggravating those misfortunes The meanness of her condition did not represent her misery as of little consequence in his eyes nor did it appear to justify or even to palliate his guilt in bringing that misery upon her But why do I mention justification? His own heart would not suffer him to destroy a human creature who he thought loved him and had to that love sacrificed her innocence His own good heart pleaded her cause not as a cold venal advocate but as one interested in the event and which must itself deeply share in all the agonies its owner brought on another

When this powerful advocate had sufficiently raised the pity of Jones by painting poor Molly in all the circumstances of wretchedness it artfully called in the assistance of another passion and represented the girl in all the amiable colours of youth health and beauty as one greatly the object of desire and much more long sleepless night and in the morning the result of the whole was to abide by Molly and to think no more of Sophia

In this virtuous resolution he continued all the next day till the evening cherishing the idea of Molly and driving Sophia from his thoughts but in the fatal evening a very trifling accident set all his passions again on float, and worked so total a change in his mind that we think it decent to communicate it in a fresh chapter

Chapter 4

A little chapter, in which is contained a little incident

AMONG other visitants who paid their compliments to the young gentleman in his confinement, Mrs Honour was one The reader perhaps when he reflects on some expressions which have formerly dropt from her may conceive that she herself had a very particular affection for Mr Jones but, in reality it was no such thing Tom was a handsome young fellow and for that species of men Mrs Honour had some regard but this was perfectly indiscriminate for having being crossed in the love which she bore a certain nobleman s footman who had basely deserted her after a promise of marriage she had so securely kept together the broken remains of her heart, that no man had ever since been able to possess himself of any single fragment She viewed all handsome men with that equal regard and benevolence which a sober and virtuous mind bears to all the good She might indeed be called a lover of men as Socrates was a lover of mankind preferring one to another for corporeal as he for mental qualifications but never carrying this preference so far as to cause any perturbation in the philosophical serenity of her temper

The day after Mr Jones had that conflict with himself which we have seen in the preceding chapter Mrs Honour came into his room and finding him alone began in the following manner — La sir where do you think I have been? I warrants you you would not guess in fifty years but if you did guess to be sure I must not tell you neither — Nay if it be something which you must not tell me said Jones I shall have the curiosity to enquire and I know you will not be so barbarous to refuse me — I don t know cries she why I should refuse you neither for that matter for to be sure you won t mention it any more. And for that matter if you knew where I have been unless you knew what I have been about it would not signify much Nay I don t see why it should be kept a secret for my part for to be sure she is the best lady in the world Upon this Jones began to beg earnestly to be let into this secret and faithfully promised not to divulge it She then proceeded thus — Why you must know, sir my young lady sent me to enquire after Molly Seagrim and to see whether the wench wanted anything to be sure I did not care to go methinks but servants must do what they are ordered —How could you under value yourself so Mr Jones?—So my lady bid me go and carry her some linen and other things She is too good If such forward sluts were sent to Bridewel it would be better for them I told my lady says I madam your la ship is encouraging idleness — And was my Sophia so good?' says Jones My Sophia! I assure you marry come up answered Hon our And yet if you knew all—indeed if I was as Mr Jones I should look a little higher than such trumpery as Molly Seagrim 'What do you mean by these words replied Jones if I knew all? I mean what I mean says Hon our Don t you remember putting your hands in my lady's muff once? I vow I could almost find in my heart to tell if I was certain my lady would never come to the hearing on t Jones then made several solemn protestations And Honour proceeded—'Then to be sure my lady gave me that muff and afterwards upon hearing what you had done —— Then you told her what I had done? interrupted Jones If I did sir answered she you need not be angry with me Many s the man would have given his head to have had my lady told if they had known —for to be sure the biggest lord in the land might be proud—but I pro test I have a great mind not to tell you Jones fell to entreaties and soon prevailed on her to go on thus You must know then sir that my lady had given this muff to me but about a day or two after I had told her the story she quarrels with her new muff and to be sure it is the prettiest that ever was seen Honour says she, this is an odious muff it is too big for me I can t wear it till I can get another you must let me have my old one again and you may have this in the room on t—for she s a good lady and scorns to give a th ng and take a thing I promise you that So to be sure I fetched it her back again and I believe she hath worn it upon her arm almost ever since and I warrants hath given it many a kiss when nobody hath seen her

Here the conversation was interrupted by Mr Western himself who came to summon Jones to the harpsichord whither tl e poor young fellow went all pale and trembling This Western observed but on seeing Mrs Honour imputed it to a wrong cause and having given Jones a hearty curse between jest and earnest he bid him beat abroad and not poach up the game in his warren

Sophia looked this evening with more than usual beauty and we may believe it was no small addition to her charms in the eye of Mr Jones that she now happened to have on her right arm this very muff

She was playing one of her father s favourite tunes and he was leaning on her chair when the muff fell over her fingers and put her out This so disconcerted the squire that he snatched the muff from her and with a hearty curse threw it into the fire Sophia instantly started up and with the utmost eagerness re covered it from the flames

Though this incident will probably appear of little consequence to many of our readers yet trifling as it was it had so violent an effect on poor Jones that we thought it our duty to relate it In reality there are many little cir cumstances too often omitted by injudicious historians from which events of the utmost importance arise The world may indeed be considered as a vast machine in which the great wheels are originally set in motion by those which are very minute and almost im perceptible to any but the strongest eyes

Thus not all the charms of the incompa rable Sophia not all the dazzling brightness and languishing softness of her eyes the har mony of her voice and of her person not all her wit good humour greatness of mind or sweetness of disposit on had been able so absolutely to conquer and enslave the heart of poor Jones as this little incident of the muff Thus the poet sweetly sings of Troy—

— Captique dol s lachrymisque coacti Quos neque Tyd des nec Larissæus Ach lles Non anni dom ere decem non mille Carinæ

What D omede or Thetis greater son
A thousand sh ps nor ten years siege had done False tears and fawning words the city won.

The citadel of Jones was now taken by sur pr se All those considerations of honour and prudence which our heroe had lately with so much military v isdom placed as guards over the avenues of his heart ran away from their posts and the god of love marched in in tri umph

Chapter 5

A very long chapter containing a very great incident

But though this victorious deity easily ex pelled his avowed enemies from the heart of Jones he found it more difficult to supplant the garrison which he himself had placed there To lay aside all allegory the concern for what must become of poor Molly greatly disturbed and perplexed the mind of the worthy youth The superior merit of Sophia totally eclipsed or rather extinguished all the beauties of the poor girl but compassion instead of contempt succeeded to love He was convinced the girl had placed all her affections and all her prospect of future happiness in him only For this he had he knew given sufficient occasion by the utmost profusion of tenderness towards her a tenderness which he had taken every means to persuade her he would always maintain She on her side had assured him of her firm belief in his promise and had with the most solemn vows declared that on his fulfilling or breaking these promises it depended whether she should be the happiest or most miserable of womankind And to be the author of this highest degree of misery to a human being was a thought on power as having been at her own expense the object of his pleasure as sighing and languishing for him even at that very instant Shall then says he my recovery for which she hath so ardently wished shall my presence which she hath so eagerly expected instead of giving her that joy with which she hath flattered herself cast her at once down into misery and despair? Can I be such a villain? Here when

mind and bore away every obstacle before it

At length it occurred to him that he might possibly be able to make Molly amends another way namely by giving her a sum of money This nevertheless he almost despaired of her accepting when he recollected the frequent and vehement assurances he had received from her that the world put in balance with him would make her no amends for his loss However her extreme poverty and chiefly avowed tenderness she might in time be brought to content herself with a fortune superior to her expectation and which might indulge her vanity by setting her above all her equals He resolved therefore to take the first opportunity of making a proposal of this kind

One day accordingly when his arm was so well recovered that he could walk easily with it slung in a sash he stole forth at a season when the squire was engaged in his field exercises and visited his fair one Her mother and sisters whom he found taking their tea informed him first that Molly was not at home but afterwards the eldest sister acquainted him with a malicious smile that she was abov stairs a bed Tom had no objection to this situation of his mistress and immediately ascende the ladder which led towards her bed-chamber but when he came to the top he to his grea surprise found the door fast nor could he fo some time obtain any answer from within fo Molly as she herself afterwards informed him was fast asleep

The extremes of grief and joy have been re marked to produce very similar effects an when either of these rushes on us by surprize it is apt to create such a total perturbation an confusion that we are often thereby depriv of the use of all our faculties It cannot there fore be wondered at that the unexpected sigh of Mr Jones should so strongly operate on th mind of Molly and should overwhelm he with such confusion that for some minutes sh was unable to express the great raptures wit which the reader will suppose she was affecte on this occasion As for Jones he was so en tirely possessed and as it were enchanted b the presence of his beloved object that he fo a while forgot Sophia and consequently th principal purpose of his visit

This however soon recurred to his memory and after the first transports of their meetin were over he found means by degrees to intro duce a discourse on the fatal consequence which must attend their amour if Mr Al worthy who had strictly forbidden him eve seeing her more should discover that he sti carried on this commerce Such a discover which his enemies gave him reason to thin would be unavoidable must he said end i his ruin and consequently in hers Since there fore their hard fates had determined that the must separate he advised her to bear it wit resolution and swore he would never omit ar opportunity through the course of his lif

if ever that should be in his power concludin at last that she might soon find some man wh would marry her and who would make he much happier than she could be by leading disreputable life with him

Molly remained a few moments in silence and then bursting into a flood of tears she be gan to upbraid him in the following words

And this is your love for me to forsake me in this manner now you have ruined me! How often when I have told you that all men are false and perjury alike and grow tired of us as soon as ever they have had their wicked wills of us how often have you sworn you would never forsake me! And can you be such a per jury man after all? What signifies all the riches in the world to me without you now you have gained my heart so you have—you have—? Why do you mention another man to me? I can never love any other man as long as I live All other men are nothing to me If the greatest squire in all the country would come a suiting to me to morrow I would not give my com pany to him No I shall always hate and de spise the whole sex for your sake —

She was proceeding thus when an accident put a stop to her tongue before it had run out half its career The room or rather garret in which Molly lay being up one pair of stairs that is to say at the top of the house was of a sloping figure resembling the great Delta of the Greeks The English reader may perhaps form a better idea of it by being told that it was impossible to stand upright anywhere but in the middle Now as this room wanted the conveniency of a closet Molly had to supply that defect nailed up an old rug against the rafters of the house which enclosed a little hole where her best apparel such as the re mains of that sack which we have formerly mentioned some caps and other things with which she had lately provided herself were hung up and secured from the dust

This enclosed place exactly fronted the foot of the bed, to which indeed the rug hung so near that it served in a manner to supply the want of curtains Now whether Molly in the agonies of her rage pushed this rug with her feet or Jones might touch it or whether the pin or nail gave way of its own accord I am not certain but as Molly pronounced those last words which are recorded above the wicked rug got loose from its fastening and discovered everything hid behind it where among other female utensils appeared—(with shame I write it, and with sorrow will it be read)—the philos opher Square in a posture (for the place would not near admit his standing upright) as ridicu lous as can possibly be conceived

The posture indeed in which he stood was not greatly unlike that of a soldier who is tied neck and heels or rather resembling the atti tude in which we often see fellows in the pub lic streets of London who are not suffering but deserving punishment by so standing He had a nightcap belonging to Molly on his head and his two large eyes the moment the rug fell stared directly at Jones so that when the idea of philosophy was added to the figure now discovered it would have been very diffi cult for any spectator to have refrained from immoderate laughter

I question not but the surprize of the reader will be here equal to that of Jones as the sus picions which must arise from the appearance of this wise and grave man in such a place may seem so inconsistent with that character which he hath doubtless maintained hitherto in the opinion of every one

But to confess the truth this inconsistency is rather imaginary than real Philosophers are composed of flesh and blood as well as other human creatures and however sublimated and refined the theory of these may be a little practical frailty is as incident to them as to other mortals It is indeed in theory only and not in practice as we have before hinted that consists the difference for though such great beings think much better and more wisely they always act exactly like other men They know very well how to subdue all appetites and passions and to despise both pain and pleasure and this knowledge affords much de lightful contemplation and is easily acquired but the practice would be vexatious and troublesome and therefore the same wisdom which teaches them to know this teaches them to avoid carrying it into execution

Mr Square happened to be at church on that Sunday when as the reader may be pleased to remember the appearance of Molly in her sack had caused all that disturbance Here he first observed her and was so pleased with her beauty that he prevailed with the young gentlemen to change their intended ride that evening that he might pass by the habita tion of Molly and by that means might obtain a second chance of seeing her This reason however as he did not at that time mention to any so neither did we think proper to com municate it then to the reader

Among other particulars which constituted the unfitness of things in Mr Square's opinion danger and difficulty were two The difficulty therefore which he apprehended there might be in corrupting this young wench and the danger which would accrue to his character on the discovery, were such strong dissuasives, that it is probable he at first intended to have contented himself with the pleasing ideas which the sight of beauty furnishes us with. These the gravest men, after a full meal of serious meditation, often allow themselves by way of dessert: for which purpose, certain books and pictures find their way into the most private recesses of their study, and a certain liquorish part of natural philosophy is often the principal subject of their conversation

But when the philosopher heard, a day or two afterwards that the fortress of virtue had already been subdued, he began to give a larger scope to his desires His appetite was not of that squeamish kind which cannot feed [illegible]

pursued and obtained her

The reader will be mistaken if he thinks Molly gave Square the preference to her younger lover on the contrary, had she been confined to the choice of one only, Tom Jones would undoubtedly have been, of the two, the victorious person Nor was it solely the consideration that two are better than one (though this had its proper weight) to which Mr Square owed his success the absence of Jones during his confinement was an unlucky circumstance, and in that interval some well chosen presents from the philosopher so softened and unguarded the girl's heart, that a favourable opportunity became irresistible, and Square triumphed over the poor remains of virtue which subsisted in the bosom of Molly

It was now about a fortnight since this conquest, when Jones paid the above-mentioned [illegible]

most of her power, but such was the envy and hatred which the elder sister bore towards Molly that, notwithstanding she had some part of the booty she would willingly have parted with this to ruin her sister and spoil her trade Hence she had acquainted Jones with her being above-stairs in bed in hopes that he might have caught her in Square's arms This, however, Molly found means to prevent, as the door was fastened, which gave her an oppor [illegible]

covered

Square no sooner made his appearance than Molly flung herself back in her bed, cried out she was undone, and abandoned herself to despair This poor girl, who was yet but a novice in her business, had not arrived to that perfection of assurance which helps off a town lady in any extremity, and either prompts her with an excuse, or else inspires her to brazen out the matter with her husband, who, from love of quiet, or out of fear of his reputation—and sometimes, perhaps, from fear of the gallant, who, like Mr Constant in the play, wears a sword—is glad to shut his eyes, and content to put his horns in his pocket Molly, on the contrary, was silenced by this evidence, and very fairly gave up a cause which she had hitherto maintained with so many tears, and with such solemn and vehement protestations of the purest love and constancy

As to the gentleman behind the arras, he was not in much less consternation He stood for a while motionless, and seemed equally at a loss what to say, or whither to direct his eyes Jones though perhaps the most astonished of the three, first found his tongue, and being immediately recovered from those uneasy sensations which Molly by her upbraidings had occasioned he burst into a loud laughter, and then saluting Mr Square, advanced to take him by the hand and to relieve him from his place of confinement.

Square being now arrived in the middle of the room in which part only he could stand upright, looked at Jones with a very grave [illegible]

blame I am not guilty of corrupting innocence I have done nothing for which that part of the world which judges of matters by the rule of right, will condemn me Fitness is governed by the nature of things, and not by customs, forms or municipal laws Nothing is indeed unfit which is not unnatural' —' Well reasoned, old boy' answered Jones 'but why dost thou think that I should desire to expose thee? I promise thee I was never better pleased with thee in my life, and unless thou hast a mind to discover it thyself, this affair may remain a profound secret for me."—"Nay, Mr

Jones replied Square I would not be thought to undervalue reputation Good fame is a species of the kalon and it is by no means fitting to neglect it Besides to murder one s own reputation is a kind of suicide a detestable and odious vice If you think proper therefore to conceal any infirmity of mine (for such I may have since no man is perfectly perfect), I promise you I will not betray myself Things may be fitting to be done which are not fit ting to be boasted of for by the perverse judg ment of the world that often becomes the subject of censure which is in truth not only in nocent but laudable — Right! cries Jones what can be more innocent than the indul gence of a natural appetite? or what more laud able than the propagation of our species? — "To be serious with you answered Square 'I profess they always appeared so to me — And yet said Jones you was of a different opinion when my affair with this girl was first discovered — Why I must confess says Square as the matter was misrepresented to me by that parson Thwackum I might con demn the corruption of innocence it was that sir it was that—and that— for you must know Mr Jones in the consideration of fitness very minute circumstances sir very minute circum stances cause great alteration — Well cries Jones "be that as it will it shall be your own fault as I have promised you if you ever hear any more of this adventure Behave kindly to the girl and I will never open my lips concern ing the matter to any one And Molly do you be faithful to your friend and I will not only forgive your infidelity to me but will do you all the service I can So saying he took a hasty leave and slipping down the ladder re tired with much expedition

Square was rejoiced to find this adventure was likely to have no worse conclus on and as for Molly being recovered from her confu sion she began at first to upbraid Square with having been the occasion of her loss of Jones but that gentleman soon found the means of mitigating her anger partly by caresses and partly by a small nostrum from his purse of wonderful and approved efficacy in purging off the ill humours of the mind and in restor ing it to a good temper

She then poured forth a vast profusion of tenderness towards her new lover turned all she had said to Jones and Jones himself into rid cule, and vowed though he once had the possession of her person that none but Square had ever been master of her heart.

Chapter 6

By comparing which with the former the reader may possibly correct some abuse which he hath formerly been guilty of in the application of the word love

THE INFIDELITY of Molly which Jones had now discovered, would perhaps have vindi cated a much greater degree of resentment than he expressed on the occasion, and if he had abandoned her directly from that moment very few I believe would have blamed him

Certain however it is that he saw her in the light of compassion and though his love to her was not of that kind which could give him any great uneasiness at her inconstancy yet was he not a little shocked on reflecting that he had himself originally corrupted her inno cence for to this corruption he imputed all the vice into which she appeared now so likely to plunge herself

This consideration gave him no little un easiness till Betty the elder sister was so kind some time afterwards entirely to cure him by a hint that one Will Barnes and not h mself had been the first seducer of Molly and that the little child which he had hitherto so cer tainly concluded to be his own might very probably have an equal title at least to claim Barnes for its father

Jones eagerly pursued this scent when he had first received it and in a very short time was sufficiently assured that the girl had told him truth not only by the confession of the fellow but at last by that of Molly herself

This Will Barnes was a country gallant and had acquired as many trophies of this kind as any ensign or attorney s clerk in the kingdom He had indeed reduced several women to a state of utter profligacy had broke the hearts of some and had the honour of occasioning the violent death of one poor girl who had either drowned herself or what was rather more probable had been drowned by him

Among other of his conquests this fellow had triumphed over the heart of Betty Sea grim He had made love to her long before Molly was grown to be a fit object of that pastime but had afterwards deserted her and applied to her sister with whom he had almost immediate success Now Will had in reality the sole possession of Molly's affection while Jones and Square were almost equally sacri fices to her interest and to her pride of Betty, though we did not think it necessary to assign this cause sooner, as envy itself alone was adequate to all the effects we have mentioned

Hence had grown that implacable hatred which we have before seen raging in the mind

Jones was become perfectly easy by possession of this secret with regard to Molly, but as to Sophia he was far from being in a state of tranquillity, nay, indeed he was under the most violent perturbation, his heart was now, if I may use the metaphor, entirely evacuated, and Sophia took absolute possession of it He loved her with an unbounded passion, and plainly saw the tender sentiments she had for him, yet could not this assurance lessen his despair of obtaining the consent of her father, nor the horrors which attended his pursuit of her by any base or treacherous method

The injury which he must thus do to Mr Western, and the concern which would accrue to Mr Allworthy, were circumstances that tormented him all day and haunted him on his pillow at night His life was a constant struggle between honour and inclination which alternately triumphed over each other in his mind He often resolved in the absence of Sophia, to leave her father s house and to see her no more, and as often in her presence, forgot all those resolutions and determined to pursue her at the hazard of his life and at the forfeiture of what was much dearer to him

This conflict began soon to produce very strong and visible effects for he lost all his usual sprightliness and gaiety of temper, and became not only melancholy when alone but dejected and absent in company nay, if ever he put on a forced mirth to comply with Mr Western s humour the constraint appeared so plain that he seemed to have been giving the strongest evidence of what he endeavoured to conceal by such ostentation

It may perhaps be a question whether the art which he used to conceal his passion, or the means which honest nature employed to reveal it, betrayed him most for while art made him more than ever reserved to Sophia, and forbad him to address any of his discourse to her, nay to avoid meeting her eyes with the utmost caution nature was no less busy in his whole frame, trembled And if any discourse tended, however remotely, to raise the idea of love, an involuntary sigh seldom failed to steal from his bosom Most of which accidents nature was wonderfully industrious to throw daily in his way

All these symptoms escaped the notice of the squire, but not so of Sophia She soon per recognition is, I suppose, that sympathy which hath been so often noted in lovers, and which will sufficiently account for her being so much quicker sighted than her father

But, to say the truth, there is a more simple and plain method of accounting for that prodigious superiority of penetration which we must observe in some men over the rest of the human species, and one which will serve not only in the case of lovers, but of all others From whence is it that the knave is generally heads and their thoughts are turned the same way Thus, that Sophia saw, and that Western did not see, the plain symptoms of love in Jones can be no wonder, when we consider that the idea of love never entered into the head of the father, whereas the daughter, at present, thought of nothing else

When Sophia was well satisfied of the violent passion which tormented poor Jones and no less certain that she herself was its object, she had not the least difficulty in discovering the true cause of his present behaviour This highly endeared him to her, and raised in her mind two of the best affections which any lover can wish to raise in a mistress—these were, esteem and pity—for sure the most outrageously rigid among her sex will excuse her pitying a man whom she saw miserable on her own account nor can they blame her for esteeming one who visibly from the most honourable motives endeavoured to smother a flame in his own bosom which like the famous Spartan theft, was preying upon and consuming his very vitals Thus his backwardness, his shunning her, his coldness, and his silence, were the forwardest, the most diligent, the warmest and most eloquent advocates, and wrought

so violently on her sensible and tender heart that she soon felt for him all those gentle sensations which are consistent with a virtuous and elevated female mind In short, all which esteem gratitude and pity can inspire in such towards an agreeable man—indeed all which the nicest delicacy can allow In a word she was in love with him to distraction

One day this young couple accidentally met in the garden at the end of the two walks which were both bounded by that canal in which Jones had formerly risqued drowning to retrieve the little bird that Sophia had there lost.

This place had been of late much frequented by Sophia Here she used to ruminate with a mixture of pain and pleasure on an incident which however trifling in itself had possibly sown the first seeds of that affection which was now arrived to such maturity in her heart

Here then this young couple met They were almost close together before either of them knew anything of the other s approach A bystander would have discovered sufficient marks of confusion in the countenance of each but they felt too much themselves to make any observation As soon as Jones had a little recovered his first surprize he accosted the young lady with some of the ordinary forms of salutation which she in the same manner returned and their conversation began as usual on the delicious beauty of the morning Hence they past to the beauty of the place on which Jones launched forth very high encomiums When they came to the tree whence he had formerly tumbled into the canal Sophia could not help reminding him of that accident and said I fancy Mr Jones you have some little shuddering when you see that water — I assure you madam answered Jones the concern you felt at the loss of your little bird will always appear to me the highest circumstance in that adventure Poor little Tommy! there is the branch he stood upon How could the little wretch have the folly to fly away from that state of happiness in which I had the honour to place him? His fate as a just punishment for his ingratitude — Upon my word Mr Jones said she your gallantry very narrowly escaped as severe a fate Sure the remembrance must affect you — Indeed, madam answered he if I have any reason to reflect with sorrow on it it is perhaps that the water had not been a little deeper by which I might have escaped many bitter heart aches that Fortune seems to have in store for me — Fie Mr Jones! replied Sophia I am sure you cannot be in earnest now This affected contempt of life is only an excess of your complacence to me You would endeavour to lessen the obligation of having twice ventured it for my sake Beware the third time" She spoke these last words with a smile and a softness inexpressible Jones answered with a sigh "He feared it was already too late for caution and then looking tenderly and stedfastly on her he cried Oh Miss Western! can you desire me to live? Can you wish me so ill? Sophia looking down on the ground answered with some hesitation Indeed Mr Jones I do not wish you ill — Oh I know too well that heavenly temper cries Jones 'that divine goodness which is beyond every other charm — Nay now answered she I understand you not I can stay no longer"— I—I would not be understood! cries he nay I can t be understood I know not what I say Meeting you here so unexpectedly I have been unguarded for Heaven s sake pardon me if I have said anything to offend you I did not mean it Indeed I would rather have died—nay the very thought would kill me — You surprize me answered she How can you possibly think you have offended me? — Fear madam says he easily runs into madness and there is no degree of fear like that which I feel of offending you How can I speak then? Nay don t look angrily at me one frown will destroy me I mean nothing Blame my eyes or blame those beauties What am I saying? Pardon me if I have said too much My heart overflowed I have struggled with my love to the utmost and have endeavoured to conceal a fever which preys on my vitals and will I hope soon make it impossible for me ever to offend you more

Mr Jones now fell a trembling as if he had been shaken with the fit of an ague Sophia who was in a situation not very different from his answered in these words Mr Jones I will not affect to misunderstand you indeed I understand you too well but for Heaven s sake if you have any affection for me let me make the best of my way into the house I wish I may be able to support myself thither

Jones who was hardly able to support himself offered her his arm which she condescended to accept but begged he would not mention a word more to her of this nature at present He promised he would not insisting only on her forgiveness of what love without the leave of his will had forced from him this she told him he knew how to obtain by his future behaviour and thus this young pair tottered and trembled along the lover not once daring to squeeze the hand of his mistress though it was locked in his

Sophia immediately retired to her chamber, where Mrs Honour and the hartshorn were summoned to her assistance As to poor Jones the only relief to his distempered mind was an unwelcome piece of news which as it opens a scene of different nature from those in which the reader hath lately been conversant will be communicated to him in the next chapter

Chapter 7

In which Mr Allworthy appears on a sick bed other reason was easily persuaded to continue at his house which he did sometimes for a fortnight together without paying a single visit at Mr Allworthy s nay without ever hearing from thence

Mr Allworthy had been for some days in his bed or prevent his several faculties from performing their ordinary functions —a conduct which we would by no means be thought to approve or recommend to imitation for surely the gentlemen of the Æsculapian art are in the right in advising that the moment the disease has entered at one door the physician should be introduced at the other what else is meant by that old adage Venienti occurrite morbo? Oppose a distemper at its first approach Thus the doctor and the disease meet in fair and equal conflict whereas by giving time to the latter we often suffer him to fortify and entrench himself like a French army so that the learned gentleman finds it very difficult and sometimes impossible to come at the enemy Nay sometimes by gaining time the disease applies to the French military politics and corrupts nature over to his side and then all the powers of physic must arrive too late Agreeable to these observations was I remember the complaint of the great Doctor Misaubin who used very pathetically to lament the late applications which were made to his skill saying Bygar me believe my pation take me for de undertaker for dey never send for me till de physicion have kill dem

Mr Allworthy s distemper by means of this neglect gained such ground that when the increase of his fever obliged him to send for assistance the doctor at his first arrival shook his head wished he had been sent for sooner and intimated that he thought him in very imminent danger Mr Allworthy, who had settled all his affairs in this world and was as well prepared as it is possible for human nature to be for the other received this information with the utmost calmness and unconcern He could indeed whenever he laid himself down to rest say with Cato in the tragical poem—

Let guilt or fear Disturb man s rest Cato knows neither of them Indifferent in his choice to sleep or die

In reality he could say this with ten times more reason and confidence than Cato or any other proud fellow among the antient or modern heroes for he was not only devoid of fear but might be considered as a faithful labourer when at the end of harvest he is summoned to receive his reward at the hands of a bountiful master

The good man gave immediate orders for all his family to be summoned round him. None of these were then abroad but Mrs Blifil who had been some time in London and Mr Jones whom the reader hath just parted from at Mr Western s and who received this summons just as Sophia had left him

The news of Mr Allworthy s danger (for the servant told him he was dying) drove all thoughts of love out of his head He hurried instantly into the chariot which was sent for him and ordered the coachman to drive with all imaginable haste nor did the idea of Sophia I believe once occur to him on the way

And now the whole family namely Mr Blifil Mr Jones Mr Thwackum Mr Square and some of the servants (for such were Mr Allworthy s orders) being all assembled round his bed the good man sat up in it and was beginning to speak when Blifil fell to blubbering and began to express very loud and bitter lamentations Upon this Mr Allworthy shook him by the hand and said Do not sorrow thus my dear nephew at the most ordinary of all human occurrences When misfortunes befal our friends we are justly grieved for those are accidents which might often have been avoided and which may seem to render the lot of one man more peculiarly unhappy than that of others but death is certainly unavoidable and is that common lot in which alone the fortunes of all men agree nor is the time when this happens to us very material If the wisest of men hath compared life to a span surely we may be allowed to consider it as a day It is my fate to leave it in the evening but those who are taken away earlier have only lost a few hours at the best little worth lamenting and much oftener hours of labour and fatigue of pain and sorrow One of the Roman poets I remember likens our leaving life to our departure from a feast —a thought which hath often occurred to me when I have seen men struggling to protract an entertainment and to enjoy the company of their friends a few moments longer Alas! how short is the most protracted of such enjoyments! how immaterial the difference between him who retires the soonest and him who stays the latest! This is seeing life in the best view and this unwillingness to quit our friends is the most amiable motive from which we can derive the fear of death and yet the longest enjoyment which we can hope for of this kind is of so trivial a duration that it is to a wise man truly contemptible Few men I own think in this manner for, indeed few men think of death till they are in its jaws However gigantic and terrible an object this may appear when it approaches them they are nevertheless incapable of seeing it at any distance nay though they have been ever so much alarmed and frightened when they have apprehended themselves in danger of dying they are no sooner cleared from this apprehension than even the fears of it are erased from their minds But alas! he who escapes from death is not pardoned he is only reprieved and reprieved to a short day

Grieve therefore no more my dear child on this occasion an event which may happen every hour which every element nay almost every particle of matter that surrounds us is capable of producing and which must and will most unavoidably reach us all at last ought neither to occasion our surprize nor our lamentation

"My physician having acquainted me (which I take very kindly of him) that I am in danger of leaving you all very shortly I have determined to say a few words to you at this our parting before my distemper which I find grows very fast upon me puts it out of my power

But I shall waste my strength too much I intended to speak concerning my will which though I have settled long ago I think proper to mention such heads of it as concern any of you that I may have the comfort of perceiving you are all satisfied with the provision I have there made for you

Nephew Blifil I leave you the heir to my whole estate except only £500 a year which is to revert to you after the death of your mother and except one other estate of £500 a year and the sum of £6000 which I have bestowed in the following manner

'The estate of £500 a year I have given to you Mr Jones and as I know the inconvenience which attends the want of ready money I have added £1000 in specie In this I know not whether I have exceeded or fallen short of your expectation Perhaps you will think I have given you too little, and the world will be as ready to condemn me for giving you too much but the latter censure I despise and as to the former unless you should entertain that common error which I have often heard in my life pleaded as an excuse for a total want of charity namely that instead of raising gratitude by voluntary acts of bounty we are apt to raise demands which of all others are the most boundless and most difficult to satisfy — Pardon me the bare mention of this I will not suspect any such thing

Jones flung himself at his benefactor's feet and taking eagerly hold of his hand assured him his goodness to him both now and all other times, had so infinitely exceeded not only his merit but his hopes that no words could express his sense of it And I assure you sir said he your present generosity hath left me no other concern than for the present melancholy occasion Oh my friend my father! Here his words choaked him and he turned away to hide a tear which was starting from his eyes

Allworthy then gently squeezed his hand and proceeded thus I am convinced my child that you have much goodness generosity and honour in your temper if you will add prudence and religion to these, you must be happy for the three former qualities I admit make you worthy of happiness but they are the latter only which will put you in possession of it

One thousand pound I have given to you Mr Thwackum a sum I am convinced which greatly exceeds your desires as well as your wants However you will receive it as a memorial of my friendship and whatever superfluities may redound to you that piety which you so rigidly maintain will instruct you how to dispose of them

A like sum Mr Square I have bequeathed to you This I hope will enable you to pursue your profession with better success than hitherto I have often observed with concern that distress is more apt to excite contempt than commiseration especially among men of business with whom poverty is understood to indicate want of ability But the little I have been able to leave you will extricate you from those difficulties with which you have formerly struggled and then I doubt not but you will meet with sufficient prosperity to supply what a man of your philosophical temper will require

I find myself growing faint so I shall refer you to my will for my disposition of the residue My servants will there find some tokens to remember me by and there are a few charities which I trust my executors will see faithfully performed Bless you all I am setting out a little before you —

Here a footman came hastily into the room and said there was an attorney from Salisbury who had a particular message which he said he must communicate to Mr Allworthy himself that he seemed in a violent hurry and protested he had so much business to do that if he could cut himself into four quarters all would not be sufficient

Go child said Allworthy to Blifil see what the gentleman wants I am not able to do any business now nor can he have any with me in which you are not at present more concerned than myself Besides, I really am—I am incapable of seeing any one at present or of any longer attention He then saluted them all saying perhaps he should be able to see them again but he should be now glad to compose himself a little finding that he had too much exhausted his spirits in discourse

Some of the company shed tears at their parting and even the philosopher Square wiped his eyes albeit unused to the melting mood As to Mrs Wilkins she dropt her pearls as fast as the Arabian trees their medicinal gums for this was a ceremonial which that gentlewoman never omitted on a proper occasion

After this Mr Allworthy again laid himself down on his pillow and endeavoured to compose himself to rest

Chapter 8

Containing matter rather natural than pleasing

Besides grief for her master there was another source for that briny stream which so plentifully rose above the two mountainous cheek bones of the housekeeper She was no sooner retired than she began to mutter to herself in the following pleasant strain Sure master might have made some difference methinks between me and the other servants. I suppose he hath left me mourning but i fackins! if that be all the devil shall wear it for him for me I'd have his worship know I am no beggar I have saved five hundred pound in his service and after all to be used in this manner—It is a fine encouragement to servants to be honest, and to be sure if I have taken a little something now and then others have taken ten times as much and now we are all put in a lump together If so be that it be so the legacy may go to the devil with him that gave it No I won t give it up neither because that will please some folks No I ll buy the gayest gown I can get and dance over the old curmudgeon s grave in it This is my reward for taking his part so often when all the country have cried shame of him for breeding up his bastard in that manner but he is going now where he must pay for all It would have become him better to have repented of his sins on his deathbed than to glory in them and give away his estate out of his own family to a misbegotten child Found in his bed forsooth! a pretty story! ay ay those that hide know where to find Lord forgive him! I warrant he hath many more bastards to answer for if the truth was known One comfort is, they will all be known where he is a going now — The servants will find some token to remember me by Those were the very words, I shall never forget them if I was to live a thousand years Ay ay I shall remember you for huddling me among the servants One would have thought he might have mentioned my name as well as that of Square but he is a gentleman forsooth though he had not clothes on his back when he came hither first Marry come up with such gentlemen! though he hath lived here this many years I don t believe there is arrow a servant in the house ever saw the colour of his money The devil shall wait upon such a gentleman for me Much more of the like kind she muttered to herself but this taste shall suffice to the reader

Neither Thwackum nor Square were much better satisfied with their legacies Though they breathed not their resentment so loud yet from the discontent which appeared in their countenances as well as from the following dialogue we collect that no great pleas ure reigned in their minds

About an hour after they had left the sick room Square met Thwackum in the hall and accosted him thus Well sir have you heard any news of your friend since we parted from him? — If you mean Mr Allworthy answered Thwackum I think you might rather give him the appellation of your friend for he seems to me to have deserved that title — The title is as good on your side replied Square for his bounty such as it is hath been equal to both — I should not have mentioned it first cries Thwackum but since you begin I must inform you I am of a different opinion There is a wide distinction between voluntary favours and rewards The duty I have done in this family and the care I have taken in the education of his two boys are services for which some men might have expected a greater return I would not have you imagine I am therefore dissatisfied for St Paul hath taught me to be content with the little I have Had the modicum been less I should have known my duty But though the Scriptures obliges me to remain contented it doth not enjoin me to shut my eyes to my own merit nor restrain me from seeing when I am injured by an unjust comparison "— Since you provoke me returned Square that injury is done to me nor did I ever imagine Mr Allworthy had held my friendship so light as to put me in balance with one who received his wages I know to what it is owing it proceeds from those narrow principles which you have been so long endeavouring to infuse into him in contempt of everything which is great and noble The beauty and loveliness of friendship is too strong for dim eyes nor can it be perceived by any other medium than that unerring rule of right which you have so often endeavoured to ridicule, that you have perverted your friend's understanding — I wish cries Thwackum in a rage I wish for the sake of his soul your damnable doctrines have not perverted his faith It is to this I impute his present behaviour so unbecoming a Christian Who but an atheist could think of leaving the world without having first made up his account? without confessing his sins and receiving that absolution which he knew he had one in the house duly authorized to give him? He will feel the want of these necessaries when it is too late, when he is arrived at that place where there is wailing and gnashing of teeth It is then he will find in what mighty stead that heathen goddess that virtue which you and all other deists of the age adore will stand him. He will then summon his priest when there is none to be found and will lament the want of that absolution without which no sinner can be safe — If it be so material says Square why don t you present it him of your own accord? It hath no virtue cries Thwackum but to those who have sufficient grace to require it But why do I talk thus to a heathen and an unbeliever? It is you that taught him this lesson for which you have been well rewarded in this world as I doubt not your disciple will soon be in the other — I know not what you mean by reward said Square but if you hint at that pitiful memorial of our friendship which he hath thought fit to bequeath me I despise it and nothing but the unfortunate situation of my circumstances should prevail on me to accept it

The physician now arrived and began to inquire of the two disputants how we all did above stairs? In a miserable way answered Thwackum It is no more than I expected cries the doctor but pray what symptoms have appeared since I left you? — No good ones I am afraid replied Thwackum after what past at our departure I think there were little hopes The bodily physician perhaps misunderstood the curer of souls and before they came to an explanation Mr Blifil came to them with a most melancholy countenance and acquainted them that he brought sad news that his mother was dead at Salisbury that she had been seized on the road home with the gout in her head and stomach which had carried her off in a few hours Good lack a-day says the doctor One cannot answer for events but I wish I had been at hand to have been called in The gout is a distemper which it is difficult to treat yet I have been remarkably successful in it Thwackum and Square both condoled with Mr Blifil for the loss of his mother which the one advised him to bear like a man and the other like a Christian The young gentleman said he knew very well we were all mortal and he would endeavour to submit to his loss as well as he could That he could not however help complaining a little against the peculiar severity of his fate which brought the news of so great a calamity to him by surprize and that at a time when he hourly expected the severest blow he was capable of feeling from the malice of fortune He said the present occasion would put to the test those excellent rudiments which he had learnt from Mr Thwackum and

Square and it would be entirely owing to them if he was enabled to survive such misfortunes

It was now debated whether Mr Allworthy should be informed of the death of his sister This the doctor violently opposed in which I believe the whole college would agree with him but Mr Blifil said he had received such positive and repeated orders from his uncle never to keep any secret from him for fear of the disquietude which it might give him that he durst not think of disobedience whatever might be the consequence He said for his part considering the religious and philosophic temper of his uncle he could not agree with the doctor in his apprehensions He was therefore resolved to communicate it to him for if his uncle recovered (as he heartily prayed he might) he knew he would never forgive an endeavour to keep a secret of this kind from him

The physician was forced to submit to these resolutions which the two other learned gentlemen very highly commended So together moved Mr Blifil and the doctor toward the sickroom where the physician first entered and approached the bed in order to feel his patient s pulse which he had no sooner done than he declared he was much better that the last application had succeeded to a miracle and had brought the fever to intermit so that he said there appeared now to be as little danger as he had before apprehended there were hopes

To say the truth Mr Allworthy s situation had never been so bad as the great caution of the doctor had represented it but as a wise general never despises his enemy however inferior that enemy s force may be so neither doth a wise physician ever despise a distemper however inconsiderable As the former preserves the same strict discipline places the same guards and employs the same scouts though the enemy be never so weak so the latter maintains the same gravity of countenance and shakes his head with the same significant air let the distemper be never so trifling And both among many other good ones may assign this solid reason for their conduct that by these means the greater glory redounds to them if they gain the victory and the less disgrace if by any unlucky accident they should happen to be conquered

Mr Allworthy had no sooner lifted up his eyes and thanked Heaven for these hopes of his recovery than Mr Blifil drew near with a very dejected aspect and having applied his handkerchief to his eye either to wipe away his tears or to do as Ovid somewhere expresses himself on another occasion

Si nullus erit tamen excute nullum
If there be none then wipe away that none

he communicated to his uncle what the reader hath been just before acquainted with

Allworthy received the news with concern with patience and with resignation He drop a tender tear then composed his countenance and at last cried The Lord s will be done i everything

He now enquired for the messenger bu Blifil told him it had been impossible to d*tain him a moment for he appeared* by th great hurry he was in to have some busine of importance on his hands that he co plained of being hurried and driven and to out of his life and repeated many times th if he could divide himself into four quarte he knew how to dispose of every one

Allworthy then desired Blifil to take ca of the funeral He said he would have l sister deposited in his own chapel and as the particulars he left them to his own disc tion only mentioning the person whom would have employed on this occasion

Chapter 9

Which among other things, may serve as a comment on that saying of Æschines that drunkenness shows the mind of a man as mirrour reflects his person

The reader may perhaps wonder at h*ing nothing of* Mr Jones in the last chap In fact his behaviour was so different fi that of the persons there mentioned that chose not to confound his name with their

When the good man had ended his spe Jones was the last who deserted the ro Thence he retired to his own apartmen give vent to his concern but the restlessne his mind would not suffer him to remain there he slipped softly therefore to Allwor chamber-door where he listened a cons able time without hearing any kind of mo within unless a violent snoring which at his fears misrepresented as groans Th alarmed him that he could not forbear e ing the room where he found the good in the bed in a sweet composed sleep an nurse snoring in the above mentioned h manner at the bed s feet He immediately the only method of silencing this thor

bass whose music he feared might disturb Mr Allworthy and then sitting down by the nurse he remained motionless till Blifil and the doctor came in together and waked the sick man in order that the doctor might feel his pulse and that the other might communicate to him that piece of news which had Jones been apprized of it would have had great difficulty of finding its way to Mr Allworthy s ear at such a season

When he first heard Blifil tell his uncle this story Jones could hardly contain the wrath which kindled in him at the other s indiscretion especially as the doctor shook his head, and declared his unwillingness to have the matter mentioned to his patient But as his passion did not so far deprive him of all use of his understanding as to hide from him the consequences which any violent expression towards Blifil might have on the sick this apprehension stilled his rage at the present and he grew afterwards so satisfied with finding that this news had in fact produced no mischief that he suffered his anger to die in his own bosom without ever mentioning it to Blifil

The physician dined that day at Mr Allworthy s and having after dinner visited his patient he returned to the company and told them that he had now the satisfaction to say with assurance that his patient was out of all danger that he had brought his fever to a perfect intermission and doubted not by throwing in the bark to prevent its return

This account so pleased Jones and threw him into such immoderate excess of rapture that he might be truly said to be drunk with joy—an intoxication which greatly forwards the effects of wine and as he was very free too with the bottle on this occasion (for he drank many bumpers to the doctor s health as well as to other toasts) he became very soon literally drunk

Jones had naturally violent animal spirits these being set on float and augmented by the spirit of wine produced most extravagant effects. He kissed the doctor and embraced him with the most passionate endearments swearing that next to Mr Allworthy himself he loved him of all men living Doctor added he "you deserve a statue to be erected to you at the public expense for having preserved a man who is not only the darling of all good men who know him but a blessing to society the glory of his country and an honour to human nature D—n me if I don t love him better than my own soul."

More shame for you cries Thwackum Though I think you have reason to love him for he hath provided very well for you And perhaps it might have been better for some folks that he had not lived to see just reason of revoking his gift

Jones now looking on Thwackum with inconceivable disdain answered And doth thy mean soul imagine that any such considerations could weigh with me? No let the earth open and swallow her own dirt (if I had millions of acres I would say it) rather than swallow up my dear glorious friend

Quis desiderio sit pudor aut modus
*Tam chari capitis?

The doctor now interposed and prevented the effects of a wrath which was kindling between Jones and Thwackum after which the former gave a loose to mirth sang two or three amorous songs and fell into every frantic disorder which unbridled joy is apt to inspire but so far was he from any disposition to quarrel that he was ten times better humoured if possible than when he was sober

To say truth nothing is more erroneous than the common observation that men who are ill natured and quarrelsome when they are drunk are very worthy persons when they are sober for drink, in reality doth not reverse nature, or create passions in men which did not exist in them before It takes away the guard of reason and consequently forces us to produce those symptoms which many when sober have art enough to conceal It heightens and inflames our passions (generally indeed that passion which is uppermost in our mind) so that the angry temper, the amorous the generous the good humoured the avaricious and all other dispositions of men are in their cups heightened and exposed

And yet as no nation produces so many drunken quarrels especially among the lower people as England (for indeed with them to drink and to fight together are almost synonymous terms) I would not methinks have it thence concluded that the English are the worst natured people alive Perhaps the love of glory only is at the bottom of this so that the fair conclusion seems to be that our countrymen have more of that love, and more of bravery than any other plebeians And this the

* What modesty or measure can set bounds to our desire of so dear a friend? The word desiderio here cannot be easily translated It includes our desire of enjoying our friend again, and the grief which attends that desire rather as there is seldom anything ungenerous unfair or ill natured exercised on these occasions nay it is common for the combatants to express good will for each other even at the time of the conflict and as their drunken mirth generally ends in a battle, so do most of their battles end in friendship

But to return to our history Though Jones had shown no design of giving offence yet Mr Blifil was highly offended at a behaviour which was so inconsistent with the sober and prudent reserve of his own temper He bore it too with the greater impatience as it appeared to him very indecent at this season When as he said the house was a house of mourning on the account of his dear mother and if it had pleased Heaven to give him some prospect of Mr Allworthy s recovery it would become them better to express the exultations of their hearts in thanksgiving than in drunkenness and riots which were properer methods to encrease the Divine wrath than to avert it Thwackum who had swallowed more liquor than Jones but without any ill effect on his brain seconded the pious harangue of Blifil but Square for reasons which the reader may probably guess was totally silent

Wine had not so totally overpowered Jones as to prevent his recollecting Mr Blifil s loss the moment it was mentioned As no person therefore was more ready to confess and condemn his own errors he offered to shake Mr Blifil by the hand and begged his pardon saying His excessive joy for Mr Allworthy s recovery had driven every other thought out of his mind

Blifil scornfully rejected his hand and with much indignation answered It was little to be wondered at if tragical spectacles made no impression on the blind but for his part he had the misfortune to know who his parents were and consequently must be affected with their loss

Jones who notwithstanding his good humour had some mixture of the irascible in his constitution leaped hastily from his chair and catching hold of Blifil s collar cried out D—n you for a rascal do you insult me with the misfortune of my birth? He accompanied these words with such rough actions that they soon got the better of Mr Blifil s peaceful temper and a scuffle immediately ensued which might have produced mischief had it not been prevented by the interposition of Thwackum and the physician for the philosophy of Square rendered him superior to all emotions and he very calmly smoaked his pipe as was his custom in all broils unless when he apprehended some danger of having it broke in his mouth

The combatants being now prevented from executing present vengeance on each other betook themselves to the common resources of disappointed rage and vented their wrath in threats and defiance In this kind of conflict Fortune which in the personal attack seemed to incline to Jones was now altogether as favourable to his enemy

A truce nevertheless was at length agreed on by the mediation of the neutral parties and the whole company again sat down at the table where Jones being prevailed on to ask pardon and Blifil to give it peace was restored and everything seemed in statu quo

But though the quarrel was in all appearance perfectly reconciled the good humour which had been interrupted by it was by no means restored All merriment was now at an end and the subsequent discourse consisted only of grave relations of matters of fact and of as grave observations upon them a species of conversation in which though there is much of dignity and instruction there is but little entertainment As we presume therefore to convey only this last to the reader we shall pass by whatever was said till the rest of the company having by degrees dropped off left only Square and the physician together; at which time the conversation was a little heightened by some comments on what had happened between the two young gentlemen both of whom the doctor declared to be no better than scoundrels to which appellation the philosopher very sagaciously shaking his head agreed

Chapter 10

Showing the truth of many observations of Ovid and of other more grave writers who have proved beyond contradiction that wine is often the forerunner of incontinency

Jones retired from the company in which we have seen him engaged into the fields where he intended to cool himself by a walk in the open air before he attended Mr Allworthy There whilst he renewed those meditations on his dear Sophia which the dangerous illness of his friend and benefactor had for some time interrupted an accident happened which with sorrow we relate and with sorrow doubtless will it be read however that historic truth to which we profess so inviolable an attachment

obliges us to communicate it to posterity

It was now a pleasant evening in the latter end of June when our heroe was walking in a most delicious grove where the gentle breezes fanning the leaves together with the sweet trilling of a murmuring stream and the melodious notes of nightingales formed altogether the most enchanting harmony In this scene so sweetly accommodated to love he meditated on his dear Sophia While his wanton fancy roamed unbounded over all her beauties and his lively imagination painted the charming maid in various ravishing forms his warm heart melted with tenderness and at length throwing himself on the ground by the side of a gently murmuring brook he broke forth into the following ejaculation

O Sophia would Heaven give thee to my arms how blest would be my condition! Curst be that fortune which sets a distance between us Was I but possessed of thee one only suit of rags thy whole estate is there a man on earth whom I would envy! How contemptible would the brightest Circassian beauty drest in all the jewels of the Indies appear to my eyes! But why do I mention another woman? Could I think my eyes capable of looking at any other with tenderness these hands should tear them from my head No my Sophia if cruel fortune separates us for ever my soul shall doat on thee alone The chastest constancy will I ever preserve to thy image Though I should never have possession of thy charming person still shalt thou alone have possession of my thoughts my love my soul Oh! my fond heart is so wrapt in that tender bosom that the brightest beauties would for me have no charms nor would a hermit be colder in their embraces Sophia Sophia alone shall be mine What raptures are in that name! I will engrave it on every tree

At these words he started up and beheld—not his Sophia—no nor a Circassian maid richly and elegantly attired for the grand Signior s seraglio No without a gown in a shift that was somewhat of the coarsest and none of the cleanest bedewed likewise with some odoriferous effluvia the produce of the day s labour with a pitchfork in her hand Molly Seagrim approached Our hero had his penknife in his hand which he had drawn for the before mentioned purpose of carving on the bark when the girl coming near him cryed out with a smile You don t intend to kill me squire, I hope! — Why should you think I would kill you? answered Jones.

"Nay" replied she after your cruel usage of me when I saw you last killing me would perhaps be too great kindness for me to expect"

Here ensued a parley which as I do not think myself obliged to relate it I shall omit It is sufficient that it lasted a full quarter of an hour at the conclusion of which they retired into the thickest part of the grove

Some of my readers may be inclined to think this event unnatural However the fact is true and perhaps may be sufficiently accounted for by suggesting, that Jones probably thought one woman better than none and Molly as probably imagined two men to be better than one Besides the before mentioned motive assigned to the present behaviour of Jones the reader will be likewise pleased to recollect in his favour that he was not at this time perfect master of that wonderful power of reason which so well enables grave and wise men to subdue their unruly passions and to decline any of these prohibited amusements Wine now had totally subdued this power in Jones He was indeed in a condition in which if reason had interposed though only to advise she might have received the answer which one Cleostratus gave many years ago to a silly fellow who asked him if he was not ashamed to be drunk? Are not you said Cleostratus ashamed to admonish a drunken man? —To say the truth in a court of justice drunkenness must not be an excuse yet in a court of conscience it is greatly so and therefore Aristotle who commends the laws of Pittacus by which drunken men received double punishment for their crimes, allows there is more of policy than justice in that law Now if there are any transgressions pardonable from drunkenness they are certainly such as Mr Jones was at present guilty of on which head I could pour forth a vast profusion of learning, if I imagined it would either entertain my reader or teach him anything more than he knows already For his sake therefore I shall keep my learning to myself and return to my history

It hath been observed that Fortune seldom doth things by halves To say truth there is no end to her freaks whenever she is disposed to gratify or displease No sooner had our heroe retired with his Dido but

Speluncam Bl fl d x et divinus eandem Deveniunt——*

the parson and the young squire who were

* A play on The Æneid IV 124 "Dido and the Trojan prince to the same cave shall come"

taking a serious walk arrived at the stile which leads into the grove and the latter caught a view of the lovers just as they were sinking out of sight

Blifil knew Jones very well though he was at above a hundred yards distance and he was as positive to the sex of his companion though not to the individual person He started blessed himself and uttered a very solemn ejaculation

Thwackum expressed some surprize at these sudden emotions and asked the reason of them To which Blifil answered He was certain he had seen a fellow and wench retire together among the bushes, which he doubted not was with some wicked purpose As to the name of Jones he thought proper to conceal it and why he did so must be left to the judgment of the sagacious reader for we never chuse to assign motives to the actions of men when there is any possibility of our being mistaken

The parson who was not only strictly chaste in his own person but a great enemy to the opposite vice in all others fired at this information He desired Mr Blifil to conduct him immediately to the place which as he approached he breathed forth vengeance mixed with lamentations nor did he refrain from casting some oblique reflections on Mr Allworthy insinuating that the wickedness of the country was principally owing to the encouragement he had given to vice by having exerted such kindness to a bastard and by having mitigated that just and wholesome rigour of the law which allots a very severe punishment to loose wenches

The way through which our hunters were to pass in pursuit of their game was so beset with briars that it greatly obstructed their walk and caused besides such a rustling that Jones had sufficient warning of their arrival before they could surprize him nay indeed so incapable was Thwackum of concealing his indignation and such vengeance did he utter forth every step he took that this alone must have abundantly satisfied Jones that he was (to use the language of sportsmen) found sitting

Chapter 11

In which a simile in Mr Pope's period of a mile introduces as bloody a battle as can possibly be fought without the assistance of steel or cold iron

As in the season of rutting (an uncouth phrase by which the vulgar denote that gentle dalliance which in the well wooded * forest of Hampshire passes between lovers of the ferine kind) if while the lofty-crested stag meditates the amorous sport a couple of puppies or any other beasts of hostile note should wander so near the temple of Venus Ferina that the fair hind should shrink from the place touched with that somewhat either of fear or frolic of nicety or skittishness with which nature hath bedecked all females or hath at least instructed them how to put it on lest through the indelicacy of males the Samean mysteries should be pryed into by unhallowed eyes for at the celebration of these rites the female priestess cries out with her in Virgil (who was then probably hard at work on such celebration)

> —Procul o procul este profani
> Proclamat vates totoque absistite luco.
>
> —Far hence be souls profane
> The sibyl cry'd and from the grove abstain > —Dryden

If I say while these sacred rites which are in common to genus omne animantium are in agitation between the stag and his mistress, any hostile beasts should venture too near on the first hint given by the frighted hind fierce and tremendous rushes forth the stag to the entrance of the thicket there stands he sentinel over his love stamps the ground with his foot and with his horns brandished aloft in air proudly provokes the apprehended foe to combat

Thus, and more terrible when he perceived the enemy's approach leaped forth our heroe Many a step advanced he forwards in order to conceal the trembling hind and if possible to secure her retreat. And now Thwackum having first darted some livid lightning from his fiery eyes began to thunder forth "Fie upon it! Fie upon it! Mr Jones Is it possible you should be the person? — You see" answered Jones it is possible I should be here — And who said Thwackum is that wicked slut with you? — If I have any wicked slut with me cries Jones it is possible I shall not let you know who she is — I command you to tell me immediately says Thwackum "and I would not have you imagine young man that your age though it hath somewhat abridged the purpose of tuition hath totally taken away the authority of the master The relation of the master and scholar is indelible as indeed, all other relations are for they all derive their original from heaven I would have you think yourself, therefore, as much obliged to obey me now as when I taught you your first rudiments — I believe you would cries Jones, but that will not happen unless you had the same birchen argument to convince me — 'Then I must tell you plainly said Thwackum "I am resolved to discover the wicked wretch — And I must tell you plainly returned Jones "I am resolved you shall not" Thwackum then offered to advance and Jones laid hold of his arms which Mr Blifil endeavoured to rescue declaring he would not see his old master insulted

* This is an ambiguous phrase and may mean either a forest well cloathed with wood or well stript of it.

Jones now finding himself engaged with two thought it necessary to rid himself of one of his antagonists as soon as possible He therefore applied to the weakest first and letting the parson go he directed a blow at the young squire s breast which luckily taking place reduced him to measure his length on the ground

Thwackum was so intent on the discovery that the moment he found himself at liberty he stept forward directly into the fern without any great consideration of what might in the meantime befal his friend but he had advanced a very few paces into the thicket before Jones having defeated Blifil overtook the parson and dragged him backward by the skirt of his coat

This parson had been a champion in his youth and had won much honour by his fist both at school and at the university He had now indeed for a great number of years declined the practice of that noble art yet was his courage full as strong as his faith and his body no less strong than either He was moreover as the reader may perhaps have conceived, somewhat irascible in his nature When he looked back therefore and saw his friend stretched out on the ground and found himself at the same time so roughly handled by one who had formerly been only passive in all conflicts between them (a circumstance which highly aggravated the whole) his patience at length gave way he threw himself into a posture of offence and collecting all his force attacked Jones in the front with as much impetuosity as he had formerly attacked him in the rear

Our heroe received the enemy s attack with the most undaunted intrepidity and his bosom resounded with the blow This he presently returned with no less violence aiming likewise at the parson s breast but he dexterously drove down the fist of Jones so that it reached only his belly where two pounds of beef and as many of pudding were then deposited and whence consequently no hollow sound could proceed Many lusty blows much more pleasant as well as easy to have seen than to read or describe were given on both sides at last a violent fall in which Jones had thrown his knees into Thwackum s breast so weakened the latter that victory had been no longer dubious had not Blifil who had now recovered his strength again renewed the fight and by engaging with Jones given the parson a moment s time to shake his ears and to regain his breath

And now both together attacked our heroe whose blows did not retain that force with which they had fallen at first so weakened was he by his combat with Thwackum for though the pedagogue chose rather to play solos on the human instrument, and had been lately used to those only yet he still retained enough of his antient knowledge to perform his part very well in a duet

The victory according to modern custom was like to be decided by numbers when on a sudden a fourth pair of fists appeared in the battle and immediately paid their compliments to the parson and the owner of them at the same time crying out Are not you ashamed and be d—n d to you, to fall two of you upon one?

The battle which was of the kind that for distinction s sake is called royal now raged with the utmost violence during a few minutes till Blifil being a second time laid sprawling by Jones Thwackum condescended to apply for quarter to his new antagonist who was now found to be Mr Western himself for in the heat of the action none of the combatants had recognized him

In fact that honest squire happening in his afternoon s walk with some company to pass through the field where the bloody battle was fought and having concluded from seeing three men engaged that two of them must be on a side he hastened from his companions and with more gallantry than policy espoused the cause of the weaker party By which generous proceeding he very probably prevented Mr Jones from becoming a victim to the wrath of Thwackum and to the pious friendship which Blifil bore his old master for besides the disadvantage of such odds Jones had not yet sufficiently recovered the former strength of his broken arm. This reinforcement however soon put an end to the action and Jones with his ally obtained the victory

Chapter 12

In which is seen a more moving spectacle than all the blood in the bodies of Thwackum and Blifil and of twenty other such is capable of producing

THE rest of Mr Western s company were now come up being just at the instant when the action was over These were the honest clergyman whom we have formerly seen at Mr Western s table Mrs Western the aunt of Sophia and lastly the lovely Sophia herself

At this time the following was the aspect of the bloody field In one place lay on the ground all pale and almost breathless the vanquished Blifil Near him stood the conqueror Jones almost covered with blood part of which was naturally his own and part had been lately the property of the Reverend Mr Thwackum In a third place stood the said Thwackum like King Porus sullenly submitting to the conqueror The last figure in the piece was Western the Great most gloriously forbearing the vanquished foe hartshorn and was herself about to apply it to his nostrils when on a sudden the attention of the whole company was diverted from poor Blifil whose spirit if it had any such design might have now taken an opportunity of stealing off to the other world without any ceremony

For now a more melancholy and a more

for her father or from some other reason had fallen down in a swoon before any one could get to her assistance

Mrs Western first saw her and screamed Immediately two or three voices cried out Miss Western is dead Hartshorn water every remedy was called for almost at one and the same instant

The reader may remember that in our description of this grove we mentioned a murmuring brook which brook did not come there as such gentle streams flow through vulgar romances with no other purpose than to murmur No! Fortune had decreed to ennoble this little brook with a higher honour than any of those which wash the plains of Arcadia ever deserved

Jones was rubbing Blifil s temples for he began to fear he had given him a blow too much when the words Miss Western and Dead rushed at on e on his ear He started for water in the dry paths he caught up in his arms and then ran away with her over the field to the rivulet above mentioned where plunging himself into the water he contrived to besprinkle her face head and neck very plentifully reached the waterside She stretched our her arms opened her eyes and cried Oh! heavens! just as her father aunt and the parson came up

Jones who had hitherto held this lovely burthen in his arms now relinquished his hold but gave her at the same instant a tender caress which had her senses been then perfectly restored could not have escaped her observation As she expressed therefore no displeasure at this freedom we suppose she was not sufficiently recovered from her swoon at the time

This tragical scene was now converted into a sudden scene of joy In this our heroe was certainly the principal character for as he probably felt more ecstatic delight in having saved Sophia than she herself received from being saved so neither were the congratulations paid to her equal to what were conferred on Jones especially by Mr Western himself who after having once or twice embraced his daughter fell to hugging and kissing Jones. He called him the preserver of Sophia, and declared there was nothing except her or his estate which he would not give him but upon recollection he afterwards excepted his fox hounds the Chevalier and Miss Slouch (for so he called his favourite mare)

All fears for Sophia being now removed Jones became the object of the squire s consideration – Come my lad says Western d off thy quoat and wash thy fcace for att in a devilish pickle I promise thee Come come wash thyself and shat go huome with me and we l zee to vind thee another quoat

Jones immediately complied threw off his coat went down to the water and washed both his face and bosom for the latter was as much exposed and as bloody as the former But though the water could clear off the blood it could not remove the black and blue marks which Thwackum had imprinted on both his face and breast and which, being discerned by Sophia drew from her a sigh and a look full of inexpressible tenderness

Jones received this full in his eyes and it had infinitely a stronger effect on him than all the contusions which he had received before An effect however widely different for so soft and balmy was it, that had all his former blows been stabs it would for some minutes have prevented his feeling their smart

The company now moved backwards and soon arrived where Thwackum had got Mr Blifil again on his legs Here we cannot suppress a pious wish that all quarrels were to be decided by those weapons only with which Nature knowing what is proper for us hath supplied us and that cold iron was to be used in digging no bowels but those of the earth Then would war the pastime of monarchs be almost inoffensive and battles between great armies might be fought at the particular desire of several ladies of quality who together with the kings themselves might be actual spectators of the conflict Then might the field be this moment well strewed with human carcasses and the next the dead men or infinitely the greatest part of them might get up like Mr Bayes s troops and march off either at the sound of a drum or fiddle as should be previously agreed on

I would avoid if possible treating this matter ludicrously lest grave men and politicians whom I know to be offended at a jest may cry pish at it but in reality might not a battle be as well decided by the greater number of broken heads bloody noses and black eyes as by the greater heaps of mangled and murdered human bodies? Might not towns be contended for in the same manner? Indeed this may be thought too detrimental a scheme to the French interest since they would thus lose the advantage they have over other nations in the superiority of their engineers but when I consider the gallantry and generosity of that people I am persuaded they would never decline putting themselves upon a par with their adversary or as the phrase is making them selves his match

But such reformations are rather to be wished than hoped for I shall content myself therefore with this short hint and return to my narrative

Western began now to inquire into the orig nal rise of this quarrel To which neither Blifil nor Jones gave any answer but Thwackum said surlily I believe the cause is not far off if you beat the bushes well you may find her – Find her? replied Western what! have you been fighting for a wench? – Ask the gentleman in his waistcoat there said Thwackum he best knows Nay then " cries Western it is a wench certainly – Ah Tom Tom thou art a liquorish dog But come gentlemen be all friends and go home with me and make final peace over a bottle I ask your pardon sir says Thwackum it is no such slight matter for a man of my character to be thus injuriously treated and buffeted by a boy only because I would have done my duty in endeavouring to detect and bring to justice a wanton harlot but indeed the principal fault lies in Mr Allworthy and yourself for if you put the laws in execution as you ought to do you will soon rid the country of these vermin

I would as soon rid the country of foxes cries Western I think we ought to encourage the recruiting those numbers which we are every day losing in the war – But where is she? Prithee Tom show me He then began to beat about in the same language and in the same manner as if he had been beating for a hare and at last cried out Soho! Puss is not far off Here s her form upon my soul I believe I may cry stole away And indeed so he might for he had now discovered the place whence the poor girl had at the beginning of the fray stolen away upon as many feet as a hare generally uses in travelling

Sophia now desired her father to return home saying she found herself very faint and apprehended a relapse The squire immediately compl ed with his daughter s request (for he was the fondest of parents) He earnestly endeavoured to prevail with the whole company to go and sup with him but Blifil and Thwackum absolutely refused the former saying there were more reasons than he could then mention why he must decline this honour and the latter declaring (perhaps rightly) that it was not proper for a person of his function to be seen at any place in his present condition

Jones was incapable of refusing the pleasure of being with his Sophia so on he marched with Squire Western and his ladies the parson [illegible] him to depart but Thwackum would not accept the favour and with no great civility pushed him after Mr Western

Thus ended this bloody fray and thus shall end the fifth book of this history

• • •

BOOK VI

Containing about three weeks

Chapter 1

Of love

In our last book we have been obliged to deal pretty much with the passion of love and in our succeeding book shall be forced to handle this subject still more largely It may not therefore in this place be improper to apply ourselves to the examination of that modern doctrine by which certain philosophers among many other wonderful discoveries pretend to have found out that there is no such passion in the human breast

Whether these philosophers be the same they are not rather the same with those who some years since very much alarmed the world by showing that there were no such things as virtue or goodness really existing in human nature and who deduced our best actions from pride I will not here presume to determine In reality I am inclined to suspect that all these several finders of truth are the very identical men who are by others called the finders of gold The method used in both these searches after truth and after gold being indeed one and the same viz the searching, rummaging and examining into a nasty place indeed in the former instances into the nastiest of all places A BAD MIND

But though in this particular and perhaps in their success the truth finder and the gold finder may very properly be compared together yet in modesty surely there can be no comparison between the two for who ever heard of a gold finder that had the impudence or folly to assert from the ill success of his search that there was no such thing as gold in the world? whereas the truth finder having raked out that jakes his own mind and being there capable of tracing no ray of divinity nor anything virtuous or good or lovely or loving very fairly honestly and logically concludes that no such things exist in the whole creation

To avoid however all contention if possible with these philosophers if they will be called so and to show our own disposition to accommodate matters peaceably between us we shall here make them some concessions, which may possibly put an end to the dispute

First we will grant that many minds and perhaps those of the philosophers are entirely free from the least traces of such a passion

Secondly that what is commonly called love namely the desire of satisfying a voracious appetite with a certain quantity of delicate white human flesh is by no means that passion for which I here contend This is indeed more properly hunger and as no glutton is ashamed to apply the word love to his appetite and to say he LOVES such and such dishes so may the lover of this kind with equal propriety say he HUNGERS after such and such women

Thirdly I will grant which I believe will be a most acceptable concession that this love for which I am an advocate though it satisfies itself in a much more delicate manner doth nevertheless seek its own satisfaction as much as the grossest of all our appetites

And lastly that this love when it operates towards one of a different sex is very apt towards its complete gratification to call in the aid of that hunger which I have mentioned above and which it is so far from abating that it heightens all its delights to a degree scarce imaginable by those who have never been susceptible of any other emotions than what have proceeded from appetite alone

In return to all these concessions I desire of the philosophers to grant that there is in some (I believe in many) human breasts a kind and benevolent disposition which is gratified by contributing to the happiness of others That in this gratification alone as in friendship in parental and filial affection as indeed in general philanthropy there is a great and exquisite delight That if we will not call such disposition love we have no name for it That though the pleasures arising from such pure love may be heightened and sweetened by the assistance of amorous desires yet the former can subsist alone nor are they destroyed by the intervention of the latter Lastly that esteem and gratitude are the proper motives to love as youth and beauty are to desire and therefore though such desire may naturally cease when age or sickness overtakes its object yet these can have no effect on love nor ever shake or remove from a good mind that sensation or passion which hath gratitude and esteem for its basis

To deny the existence of a passion of which we often see manifest instances seems to be very strange and absurd and can indeed proceed only from that self admonition which we have mentioned above but how unfair is this! Doth the man who recognizes in his own heart no traces of avarice or ambition conclude therefore that there are no such passions in human nature? Why will we not modestly observe the same rule in judging of the good as well as the evil of others? Or why in any case will we as Shakespear phrases it, put the world in our own person?

Predominant vanity is I am afraid too much concerned here This is one instance of that adulation which we bestow on our own minds and this almost universally For there is scarce any man how much soever he may despise the character of a flatterer but will condescend in the meanest manner to flatter himself

To those therefore I apply for the truth of the above observations whose own minds can bear testimony to what I have advanced

Examine your heart my good reader and resolve whether you do believe these matters with me If you do you may now proceed to their exemplification in the following pages if you do not you have I assure you already read more than you have understood and it would be wiser to pursue your business or your pleasures (such as they are) than to throw away any more of your time in reading what you can neither taste nor comprehend To treat of the effects of love to you must be as absurd as to discourse on colours to a man born blind since possibly your idea of love may be as absurd as that which we are told such blind man once entertained of the colour scarlet that colour seemed to him to be very much like the sound of a trumpet and love probably may in your opinion very greatly resemble a dish of soup or a surloin of roast beef

Chapter 2

The character of Mrs Western Her great learning and knowledge of the world and an instance of the deep penetration which she derived from those advantages

THE reader hath seen Mr Western his sister and daughter with young Jones and the parson going together to Mr Western s house where the greater part of the company spent the evening with much joy and festivity Sophia was indeed the only grave person for as to Jones though love had now gotten entire possession of his heart yet the pleasing reflection on Mr Allworthy's recovery and the presence of his mistress joined to some tender looks which she now and then could not refrain from giving him so elevated our heroe that he joined the mirth of the other three who were perhaps as good humoured people as any in the world

Sophia retained the same gravity of countenance the next morning at breakfast whence she retired likewise earlier than usual leaving her father and aunt together The squire took no notice of this change in his daughter s disposition To say the truth though he was somewhat of a politician and had been twice a candidate in the country interest at an election he was a man of no great observation His sister was a lady of a different turn She had lived about the court and had seen the world Hence she had acquired all that knowledge which the said world usually communicates and was a perfect mistress of manners, customs ceremonies and fashions Nor did her erudition stop here She had considerably improved her mind by study she had not only read all the modern plays operas oratorios poems and romances—in all which she was a critic but had gone through Rapin s History of England Eachard s Roman History and many French Mémoires pour servir à l His toire to these she had added most of the political pamphlets and journals published within the last twenty years. From which she had attained a very competent skill in politics, and could discourse very learnedly on the affairs of Europe She was moreover excellently well skilled in the doctrine of amour and knew better than anybody who and who were together a knowledge which she the more easily attained as her pursuit of it was never diverted by any affairs of her own for either she had no inclinations or they had never been solicited which last is indeed very probable for her masculine person which was near six foot high added to her manner and learning possibly prevented the other sex from regarding her notwithstanding her petticoats in the light of a woman However as she had considered the matter scientifically she perfectly well knew though she had never practised them all the arts which fine ladies use when they desire to give encouragement or to conceal liking with all the long appendage of smiles ogles glances &c as they are at present practised in the beau monde To sum the whole no species of disguise or affectation had escaped her notice but as to the plain simple workings of honest nature as she had never seen any such she could know but little of them

By means of this wonderful sagacity Mrs Western had now as she thought made a discovery of something in the mind of Sophia The first hint of this she took from the behaviour of the young lady in the field of battle and the suspicion which she then con carried the secret a whole fortnight in her bosom giving only some oblique hints by simpering winks nods and now and then dropping an obscure word which indeed sufficiently alarmed Sophia but did not at all affect her brother

Being at length however thoroughly satisfied of the truth of her observation she took an opportunity one morning when she was alone with her brother to interrupt one of his whistles in the following manner —

Pray brother have you not observed something very extraordinary in my niece lately? — No not I answered Western is anything the matter with the girl? — I think there is replied she and something of much consequence too — Why she doth not complain of anything' cries Western and she hath had the small pox. — Brother returned she girls are liable to other distempers besides the small pox and sometimes possibly to much worse Here Western interrupted her with much earnestness and begged her if anything ailed his daughter to acquaint him immediately adding she knew he loved her more than his own soul and that he would send to the world s end for the best physician to her Nay nay' answered she smiling the distemper is not so terrible but I believe brother you are convinced I know the world and I promise you I was never more deceived in my life if my niece be not most desperately in love — How! in love! cries Western in a passion in love without acquainting me! I ll disinherit her I ll turn her out of doors stark naked without a farthing Is all my kindness vor ur and vondness o ur come to th s, to fall in love without asking me leave? — But you will not answered Mrs Western turn this daughter whom you love better than your own soul out of doors before you know whether you shall approve her choice marries the man I would ha' her she may love whom she pleases I shan t trouble my head about that That is spoken answered the sister like a sensible man but I believe the very person she hath chosen would be the very person you would choose for her I will disclaim all knowledge of the world if it is not so and I believe brother you will allow I have some — Why lookee sister said Western I do believe you have as much as any woman and to be sure those are women s matters You know I don t love to hear you talk about politics they belong to us and petticoats should not meddle but come who is the man? — Marry! said she you may find him out yourself if you please You who are so great a politician can be at no great loss The judgment which can penetrate into the cabinets of princes and discover the secret springs which move the great state wheels in all the political machines of Europe must surely with very little difficulty find out what passes in the rude uninformed mind of a girl — Sister" cries the squire I have often warn d you not to talk the court gibberish to me I tell you I don t understand the lingo but I can read a journal or the London Evening Post Perhaps indeed there may be now and tan a verse which I can t make much of because half the letters are left out yet I know very well what is meant by that and that our affairs

don t go so well as they should do because of bribery and corruption ' — I pity your country ignorance from my heart cries the lady — 'Do you?' answered Western and I pity your town learning I had rather be anything than a courtier and a Presbyterian and a Hanoverian too as some people I believe are — If you mean me answered she you know I am a woman brother and it signifies nothing what I am Besides— — I do know you are a woman' cries the squire and it s well for thee that art one if hadst been a man I promise thee I had lent thee a flick long ago — Ay there said she in that flick lies all your fancied superiority Your bodies and not your brains are stronger than ours Believe me it is well for you that you are able to beat us or such is the superiority of our understanding we should make all of you what the brave and wise and witty and polite are already—our slaves — I am glad I know your mind answered the squire But we ll talk more of this matter another time At present do tell me what man is it you mean about my daughter? — Hold a moment said she while I digest that sovereign contempt I have for your sex or else I ought to be angry too with you There——I have made a shift to gulp it down And now good politic sir what think you of Mr Blifil? Did she not faint away on seeing him lie breathless on the ground? Did she not after he was recovered turn pale again the moment we came up to that part of the field where he stood? And pray what else should be the occasion of all her melancholy that night at supper the next morning and indeed ever since? — Fore George! cries the squire now you mind me on t I remember it all It is certainly so and I am glad on t with all my heart I knew Sophy was a good girl and would not fall in love to make me angry I was never more rejoiced in my life for nothing can lie so handy together as our two estates I had this matter in my head some time ago for certainly the two estates are in a manner joined together in matrimony already and it would be a thousand pities to part them It is true indeed there be larger estates in the kingdom but not in this county and I had rather bate something than marry my daughter among strangers and foreigners Besides most o zuch great estates be in the hands of lords and I heate the very name of themmun Well but sister what would you advise me to do for I tell you women know these matters better than we do — Oh your humble servant sir answered the lady we are obliged to you for allowing us a capacity in anything Since you are pleased then most politic sir to ask my advice I think you may propose the match to Allworthy yourself There is no indecorum in the proposal s coming from the parent of either side King Alcinous in Mr Pope s Odyssey offers his daughter to Ulysses I need not caution so politic a person not to say that your daughter is in love that would indeed be against all rules — Well said the squire I will propose it but I shall certainly lend un a flick if he should refuse me Fear not cries Mrs Western the match is too advantageous to be refused " I don t know that answered the squire Allworthy is a queer b—ch and money hath no effect o un Brother said the lady your politics astonish me Are you really to be imposed on by professions? Do you think Mr Allworthy hath more contempt for money than other men because he professes more? Such credulity would better become one of us weak women than that wise sex which heaven hath formed for politicians Indeed brother you would make a fine plenipo to negotiate with the French They would soon persuade you that they take towns out of mere defensive principles Sister answered the squire with much scorn let your friends at court answer for the towns taken as you are a woman I shall lay no blame upon you for I suppose they are wiser than to trust women with secrets He accompanied this with so sarcastical a laugh that Mrs Western could bear no longer She had been all this time fretted in a tender part (for she was indeed very deeply skilled in these matters and very violent in them) and therefore burst forth in a rage declared her brother to be both a clown and a blockhead and that she would stay no longer in his house

The squire though perhaps he had never read Machiavel was however in many points a perfect politician He strongly held all those wise tenets which are so well inculcated in that Politico-Peripatetic school of Exchange alley He knew the just value and only use of money viz to lay it up He was likewise well skilled in the exact value of reversions expectations &c and had often considered the amount of his sister s fortune and the chance which he or his posterity had of inheriting it This he was infinitely too wise to sacrifice to a trifling resentment When he found therefore he had carried matters too far he began to think of reconciling them which was no very difficult task as the lady had great affection for her brother and still greater for her niece and though too susceptible of an affront offered to her skill in politics on which she much valued herself was a woman of a very extraordinary good and sweet disposition

Having first therefore laid violent hands on the horses for whose escape from the stable no place but the window was left open he next applied himself to his sister softened and soothed her by unsaying all he had said and by assertions directly contrary to those which had incensed her Lastly he summoned the eloquence of Sophia to his assistance who besides a most graceful and winning address had the advantage of being heard with great favour and partiality by her aunt

The result of the whole was a kind smile from Mrs Western who said Brother you are absolutely a perfect Croat but as those have their use in the army of the empress queen so you likewise have some good in you I will therefore once more sign a treaty of peace with you and see that you do not infringe it on your side at least as you are so excellent a politician I may expect you will keep your leagues like the French till your interest calls upon you to break them

Chapter 3

Containing two defiances to the critics

THE SQUIRE having settled matters with his sister as we have seen in the last chapter was so greatly impatient to communicate the proposal to Allworthy that Mrs Western had the utmost difficulty to prevent him from visiting that gentleman in his sickness for this purpose

Mr Allworthy had been engaged to dine with Mr Western at the time when he was taken ill He was therefore no sooner dis

filling his engagement

In the interval between the time of the dialogue in the last chapter and this day of public entertainment Sophia had from certain obscure hints thrown out by her aunt collected some apprehension that the sagacious lady suspected her passion for Jones She now resolved to take this opportunity of wiping out all such suspicions and for that purpose to put an entire constraint on her behaviour

the least notice of poor Jones the whole day

The squire was so delighted with this conduct of his daughter that he scarce eat any dinner and spent almost his whole time in watching opportunities of conveying signs of his approbation by winks and nods to his sister who was not at first altogether so pleased with what she saw as was her brother

In short Sophia so greatly overacted her part that her aunt was at first staggered and began to suspect some affectation in her niece but as she was herself a woman of great art so she soon attributed this to extreme art in Sophia She remembered the many hints she had given her niece concerning her being in love and imagined the young lady had taken this way to rally her out of her opinion by an overacted civility a notion that was greatly corroborated by the excessive gaiety with which the whole was accompanied We cannot here avoid remarking that this conjecture would have been better founded had Sophia lived ten years in the air of Grosvenor Square where young ladies do learn a wonderful knack of rallying and playing with that passion which is a mighty serious thing in woods and groves an hundred miles distant from London

To say the truth in discovering the deceit of others it matters much that our own art be wound up if I may use the expression in the same key with theirs for very artful men sometimes miscarry by fancying others wiser or in other words greater knaves than they really are As this observation is pretty deep I

seeing The Wiltshire House written under a sign advised his companions to enter it for there most probably they would find their countryman The second who was wiser laughed at this simplicity but the third who was wiser still answered Let us go in however for he may think we should not suspect him of going amongst his own countrymen They accordingly went in and searched the house and by that means missed overtaking the thief who was at that time but a little way before them and who as they all knew but had never once reflected could not read

The reader will pardon a digression in which

so invaluable a secret is communicated since every gamester will agree how necessary it is to know exactly the play of another in order to countermine him This will moreover af ford a reason why the wiser man as is often seen is the bubble of the weaker and why many simple and innocent characters are so generally misunderstood and misrepresented but what is most material this will account for the deceit which Sophia put on her politic aunt.

Dinner being ended and the company re tired into the garden Mr Western who was thoroughly convinced of the certainty of what his sister had told him took Mr Allworthy aside and very bluntly proposed a match be tween Sophia and young Mr Blifil

Mr Allworthy was not one of those men whose hearts flutter at any unexpected and sudden tidings of worldly profit His mind was indeed tempered with that philosophy which becomes a man and a Christian He af fected no absolute superiority to all pleasure and pain to all joy and grief but was not at the same time to be discomposed and ruffled by every accidental blast by every smile or frown of fortune He received therefore Mr Western s proposal without any visible emo tion or without any alteration of countenance He said the alliance was such as he sincerely wished then launched forth into a very just encomium on the young lady s merit acknowl edged the offer to be advantageous in point of fortune and after thanking Mr Western for the good opinion he had professed of his nephew concluded that if the young people liked each other he should be very desirous to complete the affair

Western was a little disappointed at Mr Allworthy s answer which was not so warm as he expected He treated the doubt whether the young people might like one another with great contempt saying That parents were the best judges of proper matches for their chil dren that for his part he should insist on the most resigned obedience from his daughter and if any young fellow could refuse such a bed fellow he was his humble servant and hoped there was no harm done

Allworthy endeavoured to soften this resent ment by many eulogiums on Sophia declaring he had no doubt but that Mr Blifil would very gladly receive the offer but all was ineffectual he could obtain no other answer from the squire but— I say no more—I humbly hope there s no harm done—that s all Which words he repeated at least a hundred times before they parted

Allworthy was too well acquainted with his neighbour to be offended at this behaviour and though he was so averse to the rigour which some parents exercise on their children in the article of marriage that he had resolved never to force his nephew s inclinations he was nevertheless much pleased with the pros pect of this union for the whole country re sounded the praises of Sophia and he had himself greatly admired the uncommon en dowments of both her mind and person To which I believe we may add the consideration of her vast fortune which though he was too sober to be intoxicated with it he was too sen sible to despise

And here in defiance of all the barking critics in the world I must and will introduce a digression concerning true wisdom of which Mr Allworthy was in reality as great a pattern as he was of goodness

True wisdom then notwithstanding all which Mr Hogarth s poor poet may have writ against riches and in spite of all which any rich well fed divine may have preached against pleasure consists not in the contempt of either of these A man may have as much wisdom in the possession of an affluent fortune as any beggar in the streets or may enjoy a hand some wife or a hearty friend and still remain as wise as any sour popish recluse who buries all his social faculties and starves his belly while he well lashes his back

To say truth the wisest man is the likeliest to possess all worldly blessings in an eminent degree for as that moderation which wisdom prescribes is the surest way to useful wealth so can it alone qualify us to taste many pleasures The wise man gratifies every appetite and every passion while the fool sacrifices all the rest to pall and satiate one

It may be objected that very wise men have been notoriously avaricious I answer Not wise in that instance It may likewise be said That the wisest men have been in their youth immoderately fond of pleasure I answer They were not wise then

Wisdom in short whose lessons have been represented as so hard to learn by those who never were at her school only teaches us to extend a simple maxim universally known and followed even in the lowest life a little farther than that life carries it And this is not to buy at too dear a price

Now whoever takes this maxim abroad with him into the grand market of the world and constantly applies it to honours to riches to pleasures and to every other commodity which that market affords is I will venture to affirm a wise man and must be so acknowledged in the worldly sense of the word for he makes the best of bargains since in reality he purchases everything at the price only of a little trouble and carries home all the good things I have mentioned while he keeps his health his innocence and his reputation the common prices which are paid for them by others entire and to himself

From this moderation likewise he learns two other lessons which complete his character First never to be intoxicated when he hath made the best bargain nor dejected when the market is empty or when its commodities are too dear for his purchase

But I must remember on what subject I am writing and not trespass too far on the patience of a good natured critic Here, therefore I put an end to the chapter

Chapter 4

Containing sundry curious matters

As soon as Mr Allworthy returned home, he took Mr Blifil apart and after some preface communicated to him the proposal which had been made by Mr Western and at the same time informed him how agreeable this match would be to himself

The charms of Sophia had not made the least impression on Blifil not that his heart was pre engaged neither was he totally insensible of beauty or had any aversion to women but his appetites were by nature so moderate that he was able by philosophy or by study or by some other method easily to subdue them and as to that passion which we have treated of in the first chapter of this book he had not the least tincture of it in his whole composition

But though he was so entirely free from that mixed passion of which we there treated and of which the virtues and beauty of Sophia formed so notable an object yet was he altogether as well furnished with some other passions that promised themselves very full gratification in the young lady s fortune Such were avarice and ambition which divided the dominion of his mind between them He had more than once considered the possession of this fortune as a very desirable thing and had entertained some distant views concerning it, but his own youth and that of the young lady and indeed principally a reflection that Mr Western might marry again and have more children had restrained him from too hasty or eager a pursuit

This last and most material objection was now in great measure removed as the proposal came from Mr Western himself Blifil therefore after a very short hesitation answered Mr Allworthy that matrimony was a subject on which he had not yet thought but that he was so sensible of his friendly and fatherly care, that he should in all things submit himself to his pleasure

Allworthy was naturally a man of spirit and his present gravity arose from true wisdom and philosophy not from any original phlegm in his disposition for he had possessed much fire in his youth and had married a beautiful woman for love He was not therefore greatly pleased with this cold answer of his nephew nor could he help launching forth into the praises of Sophia and expressing some wonder that the heart of a young man could be impregnable to the force of such charms unless it was guarded by some prior affection

Blifil assured him he had no such guard and then proceeded to discourse so wisely and religiously on love and marriage that he would have stopt the mouth of a parent much less devoutly inclined than was his uncle In the end the good man was satisfied that his nephew far from having any objections to Sophia had that esteem for her which in sober and virtuous minds is the sure foundation of friendship and love And as he doubted not but the lover would in a little time become altogether as agreeable to his mistress he foresaw great happiness arising to all parties by so proper and desirable an union With Mr Blifil s consent therefore he wrote the next morning to Mr Western acquainting him that his nephew had very thankfully and gladly received the proposal and would be ready to wait on the young lady whenever she should be pleased to accept his visit

Western was much pleased with this letter and immediately returned an answer in which without having mentioned a word to his daughter he appointed that very afternoon for opening the scene of courtship

As soon as he had dispatched this messenger he went in quest of his sister whom he found reading and expounding the Gazette to parson Supple To this exposition he was obliged to attend near a quarter of an hour though with great violence to his natural impetuosity be fore he was suffered to speak At length how ever he found an opportunity of acquainting the lady that he had business of great con sequence to impart to her to which she an swered 'Brother I am entirely at your service Things look so well in the north that I was never in a better humour

The parson then withdrawing Western ac quainted her with all which had passed and desired her to communicate the affair to Sophia which she readily and chearfully undertook though perhaps her brother was a little obliged to that agreeable northern aspect which had so delighted her that he heard no comment on his proceedings for they were certainly somewhat too hasty and violent

Chapter 5

In which is related what passed between Sophia and her aunt

Sophia was in her chamber reading when her aunt came in The moment she saw Mrs Western she shut the book with so much eager ness, that the good lady could not forbear ask ing her What book that was which she seemed so much afraid of showing? 'Upon my word madam' answered Sophia it is a book which I am neither ashamed nor afraid to own I have read It is the production of a young lady of fashion whose good understanding I think doth honour to her sex and whose good heart is an honour to human nature Mrs Western then took up the book and immediately after threw it down saying— Yes the author is of a very good family but she is not much among people one knows I have never read it for the best judges say there is not much in it — I dare not madam set up my own opinion says Sophia against the best judges but there appears to me a great deal of human nature in it and in many parts so much true tender ness and delicacy that it hath cost me many a tear —"Ay and do you love to cry then? says the aunt I love a tender sensation an swered the niece and would pay the price of a tear for it at any time — Well but show me" said the aunt what was you reading when I came in there was something very tender in that I believe and very loving too You blush my dear Sophia Ah child you should read books which would teach you a little hypocrisy which would instruct you how to hide your thoughts a little better — I hope madam" answered Sophia I have no thoughts which I ought to be ashamed of discovering — Ashamed! no cries the aunt I don t think you have any thoughts which you ought to be ashamed of and yet child you blushed just now when I mentioned the word loving Dear Sophy be assured you have not one thought which I am not well acquainted with as well child as the French are with our mo tions long before we put them in execution Did you think child because you have been able to impose upon your father that you could impose upon me? Do you imagine I did not know the reason of your overacting all that friendship for Mr Blifil yesterday? I have seen a little too much of the world to be so deceived Nay nay do not blush again I tell you it is a passion you need not be ashamed of It is a passion I myself approve and have al ready brought your father into the approba tion of it Indeed I solely consider your in clination for I would always have that grat ified, if possible though one may sacrifice higher prospects Come I have news which will delight your very soul Make me your confident, and I will undertake you shall be happy to the very extent of your wishes La madam says Sophia looking more foolishly than ever she did in her life I know not what to say—why madam should you suspect? — Nay no dishonesty returned Mrs Western Consider you are speaking to one of your own sex to an aunt and I hope you are con vinced you speak to a friend Consider you are only revealing to me what I know already and what I plainly saw yesterday through that most artful of all disguises which you had put on and which must have deceived any one who had not perfectly known the world Lastly consider it is a passion which I highly approve La madam says Sophia you come upon one so unawares and on a sudden To be sure madam I am not blind—and cer tainly if it be a fault to see all human perfec tions assembled together—but is it possible my father and you madam can see with my eyes?

I tell you answered the aunt we do en tirely approve and this very afternoon your father hath appointed for you to receive your lover My father this afternoon! cries Sophia with the blood starting from her face — Yes child said the aunt this afternoon You know the impetuosity of my brother s temper I acquainted him with the passion which I first discovered in you that evening when you fainted away in the field I saw in your fainting I saw it immediately your recovery I saw it that evening at supper, and the next morning at breakfast (you know child I have seen the world) Well I no sooner acquainted my brother but he immediately wanted to propose it to Allworthy He proposed it yesterday Allworthy consented (as to be sure he must with joy) and this afternoon I tell you you are to put on all your best airs

This afternoon! cries Sophia Dear aunt you frighten me out of my senses O my dear said the aunt you will soon come to yourself again for he is a charming young fellow that s the truth on t" Nay I will own says Sophia I know none with such perfections So brave and yet so gentle so witty yet turned instantly pale at this name and faintly repeated it Upon which the aunt cried Mr Blifil—ay Mr Blifil of whom else have we been talking? Good heavens answered Sophia ready to sink of Mr Jones I thought I am sure I know no other who deserves— I protest cries the aunt you frighten me in your turn Is it Mr Jones and not Mr Blifil who is the object of your affection? Mr Blifil! repeated Sophia Sure it is impossible you can be in earnest if you are I am the most miserable woman alive Mrs Western now stood a few moments silent while sparks of fiery rage flashed from her eyes At length collecting all her force of voice she thundered forth in the following articulate sounds

And is it possible you can think of disgracing your family by allying yourself to a bastard? Can the blood of the Westerns sub

would have prevented you from giving the Madam answered Sophia trembling "what I have said you have extorted from me I do not remember to have ever mentioned the name of Mr Jones with approbation to any one before nor should I now had I not conceived he had your approbation Whatever were my thoughts of that poor unhappy young in her chair drowned in her tears and in the moving silence of unutterable grief p sented a spectacle which must have affected most the hardest heart

All this tender sorrow however raised compassion in her aunt On the contrary s now fell into the most violent rage — And

such a match O Heavens! could I have e suspected that I should live to hear a niece mine declare a passion for such a fellow? are the first—yes Miss Western you are first of your name who ever entertained grovelling a thought A family so noted for prudence of its women —here she ran on full quarter of an hour till having exhaust her breath rather than her rage she conclud with threatening to go immediately and quaint her brother

Sophia then threw herself at her feet a laying hold of her hands begged her with te to conceal what she had drawn from her ing the violence of her father s temper a protesting that no inclinations of hers shou ever prevail with her to do anything wh might offend him

Mrs Western stood a moment looking her and then having recollected herself sa That on one consideration only she wou keep the secret from her brother and this that Sophia should promise to entertain Blifil that very afternoon as her lover and regard him as the person who was to be h husband

Poor Sophia was too much in her aun power to deny her anything positively she obliged to promise that she would see B Blifil and be as civil to him as possible b begged her aunt that the match might not hurried on She said Mr Blifil was by means agreeable to her and she hoped h father would be prevailed on not to make h the most wretched of women

Mrs Western assured her That the mat was entirely agreed upon and that noth could or should prevent it I must own sa she I looked on it as on a matter of ind ence nay perhaps had some scruples abo it before which were actually got over by thinking it highly agreeable to your own clinations but now I regard it as the mo eligible thing in the world nor shall there if I can prevent it a moment of time lost the occasion

Sophia replied 'Delay at least madam I may expect from both your goodness and my fathers Surely you will give me time to endeavour to get the better of so strong a disinclination as I have at present to this person

The aunt answered She knew too much of the world to be so deceived that as she was sensible another man had her affections she should persuade Mr Western to hasten the match as much as possible It would be bad politics indeed " added she to protract a siege when the enemy s army is at hand and in danger of relieving it No no Sophy said she "as I am convinced you have a violent passion which you can never satisfy with honour I will do all I can to put your honour out of the care of your family for when you are married those matters will belong only to the consideration of your husband. I hope child, you will always have prudence enough to act as becomes you but if you should not marriage hath saved many a woman from ruin

Sophia well understood what her aunt meant but did not think proper to make her an answer However she took a resolution to see Mr Blifil and to behave to him as civilly as she could for on that condition only she obtained a promise from her aunt to keep secret the liking which her ill fortune rather than any scheme of Mrs Western had unhappily drawn from her

Chapter 6

Containing a dialogue between Sophia and Mrs Honour, which may a little relieve those tender affections which the foregoing scene may have raised in the mind of a good natured reader

MRS. WESTERN having obtained that promise from her niece which we have seen in the last chapter withdrew and presently after arrived Mrs Honour She was at work in a neighbouring apartment and had been summoned to the keyhole by some vociferation in the preceding dialogue where she had continued during the remaining part of it At her entry into the room she found Sophia standing motionless, with the tears trickling from her eyes Upon which she immediately ordered a proper quantity of tears into her own eyes and then began O Gemini my dear lady what is the matter?"— Nothing" cries Sophia Nothing! O dear madam!" answers Honour "you must not tell me that when your ladyship is in this taking and when there hath been such a preamble between your ladyship and Madam Western — Dont teaze me cries Sophia I tell you nothing is the matter Good heavens! why was I born?"— Nay madam says Mrs Honour you shall never persuade me that your la ship can lament yourself so for nothing To be sure I am but a servant but to be sure I have been always faithful to your la'ship and to be sure I would serve your la ship with my life —"My dear Honour" says Sophia, tis not in thy power to be of any service to me I am irretrievably undone — Heaven forbid! answered the waiting woman but if I can t be of any service to you pray tell me madam—it will be some comfort to me to know—pray dear ma am tell me what s the matter — My father" cries Sophia is going to marry me to a man I both despise and hate — O dear ma am answered the other who is this wicked man? for to be sure he is very bad, or your la ship would not despise him — His name is poison to my tongue" replied Sophia thou wilt know it too soon" Indeed to confess the truth she knew it already and therefore was not very inquisitive as to that point She then proceeded thus I don t pretend to give your la ship advice whereof your la ship knows much better than I can pretend to, being but a servant but i fackins! no father in England should marry me against my consent And to be sure the squire is so good, that if he did but know your la ship despises and hates the young man to be sure he would not desire you to marry him And if your la ship would but give me leave to tell my master so To be sure it would be more properer to come from your own mouth but as your la ship doth not care to foul your tongue with his nasty name— — You are mistaken Honour says Sophia my father was determined before he ever thought fit to mention it to me — More shame for him cries Honour you are to go to bed to him and not master and thof a man may be a very proper man yet every woman mayn t think him handsome alike I am sure my master would never act in this manner of his own head I wish some people would trouble themselves only with what belongs to them they would not I believe like to be served so if it was their own case for though I am a maid I can easily believe as how all men are not equally agreeable And what signifies your la ship having so great a fortune if you can t please yourself with the man you think most handsomest? Well I say nothing but to be sure it is a pity some folks had not been better born, nay, as for that matter, I should not mind it myself, but then there is not so much money, and what of that? your la'ship hath money enough for both, and where can your la ship bestow your fortune better? for to be sure every one must allow that he is the most handsomest charmingest, finest, tallest, properest man in the world ' —' What do you mean by running on in this manner to me? ' cries Sophia, with a very grave countenance, ' Have I ever given any encouragement for these liberties? '—"Nay, ma'am, I ask pardon I meant no harm," answered she, ' but to be sure the poor gentleman hath run in my head ever since I saw him this morning To be sure, if your la ship had but seen him just now, you must have pitied him Poor gentleman! I wishes some misfortune hath not happened to him, for he hath been walking about with his arms across, and looking so melancholy, all this morning I vow and protest it made me almost cry to see him "—' To see whom? ' says Sophia ' Poor Mr Jones,' answered Honour ' See him! why, where did you see him?" cries Sophia ' By the canal ma'am " says Honour ' There he hath been walking all this morning, and at last there he laid himself down I believe he lies there still To be sure, if it had not been for my modesty being a maid, as I am, I should have gone and spoke to him Do, ma am, let me go and see only for a fancy, whether he is there still ' — Pugh!" says Sophia "There! no no what should he do there? He is gone before this time to be sure Besides, why—what—why should you go to see? besides, I want you for something else Go, fetch me my hat and gloves I shall walk with my aunt in the grove before dinner ' Honour did immediately as she was bid, and Sophia put her hat on when looking in the glass, she fancied the ribbon with which her hat was tied did not [illegible]

[illegible] work on any account as she said it was in violent haste and must be finished that very da[illegible] going t[illegible] contrar[illegible] trembli[illegible] wards the canal [illegible]

[illegible] Sophia, and had gone out from the garden at one door the moment she entered it at another So that those unlucky minutes which had been spent in changing the ribbons, had prevented the lovers from meeting at this time,—a most unfortunate accident, from which my fair readers will not fail to draw a very wholesome lesson And here I strictly forbid all male critics to intermeddle with a circumstance which I have recounted only for the sake of the ladies, and upon which they only are at liberty to comment

Chapter 7

A picture of formal courtship in miniature, as it always ought to be drawn, and a scene of a tenderer kind painted at full length

It was well remarked by one (and perhaps by more), that misfortunes do not come single This wise maxim was now verified by Sophia, who was not only disappointed of seeing the man she loved, but had the vexation of being obliged to dress herself out, in order to receive a visit from the man she hated

That afternoon Mr Western for the first time, acquainted his daughter with his intention telling her, he knew very well that she had heard it before from her aunt Sophia looked very grave upon this nor could she prevent a few pearls from stealing into her eyes Come, come," says Western, "none of your maidenish airs I know all, I assure you sister hath told me all "

'Is it possible," says Sophia, "that my aunt can have betrayed me already?"—"Ay, ay,' says Western, 'betrayed you! ay Why, you betrayed yourself yesterday at dinner You showed your fancy very plainly, I think. But you young girls never know what you would be at So you cry because I am going to marry you to the man you are in love with! Your mother, I remember whimpered and whined just in the same manner but it was all over within twenty four hours after we were married Mr Blifil is a brisk young man and will soon put an end to your squeamishness Come, chear up chear up I expect un every minute "

Sophia was now convinced that her aunt had behaved honourably to her and she determined to go through that disagreeable afternoon with as much resolution as possible, and without giving the least suspicion in the world to her father

Mr Blifil soon arrived, and Mr Western soon after withdrawing, left the young couple together

Here a long silence of near a quarter of an hour ensued, for the gentleman who was to begin the conversation had all the unbecoming modesty which consists in bashfulness He often attempted to speak, and as often suppressed his words just at the very point of utterance At last out they broke in a torrent of far fetched and high strained compliments, which were answered on her side by downcast looks, half bows, and civil monosyllables Blifil, from his inexperience in the ways of women, and from his conceit of himself, took this behaviour for a modest assent to his courtship, and when, to shorten a scene which she could no longer support, Sophia rose up and left the room, he imputed that, too, merely to bashfulness, and comforted himself that he should soon have enough of her company

He was indeed perfectly well satisfied with his prospect of success, for as to that entire and absolute possession of the heart of his mistress which romantic lovers require, the very idea of it never entered his head Her fortune and her person were the sole objects of his wishes, of which he made no doubt soon to obtain the absolute property, as Mr Western's mind was so earnestly bent on the match, and as he well knew the strict obedience which Sophia was always ready to pay to her father s will, and the greater still which her father would exact, if there was occasion This authority, therefore, together with the charms which he fancied in his own person and conversation, could not fail, he thought, of succeeding with a young lady, whose inclinations were, he doubted not, entirely disengaged

Of Jones he certainly had not even the least jealousy, and I have often thought it wonderful that he had not Perhaps he imagined the character which Jones bore all over the country (how justly, let the reader determine) of being one of the wildest fellows in England, might render him odious to a lady of the most exemplary modesty. Perhaps his suspicions might be laid asleep by the behaviour of Sophia, and of Jones himself, when they were all in company together Lastly, and indeed principally, he was well assured there was not another self in the case. He fancied that he knew Jones to the bottom, and had in reality a great contempt for his understanding for not being more attached to his own interest He ha [illegible]

the affair of Molly Seagrim still went on, and indeed believed it would end in marriage, for Jones really loved him from his childhood, and had kept no secret from him, till his behaviour on the sickness of Mr Allworthy had entirely alienated his heart, and it was by means of the quarrel which had ensued on this occasion, and which was not yet reconciled, that Mr. Blifil knew nothing of the alteration which had happened in the affection which Jones had formerly borne towards Molly

From these reasons, therefore, Mr. Blifil saw no bar to his success with Sophia He concluded her behaviour was like that of all other young ladies on a first visit from a lover, and it had indeed entirely answered his expectations

Mr Western took care to way lay the lover at his exit from his mistress He found him so elevated with his success, so enamoured with his daughter, and so satisfied with her reception of him, that the old gentleman began to caper and dance about his hall, and by many other antic actions to express the extravagance of his joy, for he had not the least command over any of his passions and that which had at any time the ascendant in his mind hurried him to the wildest excesses

As soon as Blifil was departed, which was not till after many hearty kisses and embraces bestowed on him by Western the good squire went instantly in quest of his daughter, whom he no sooner found than he poured forth the most extravagant raptures, bidding her chuse what clothes and jewels she pleased, and declaring that he had no other use for fortune but to make her happy He then caressed her again and again with the utmost profusion of fondness, called her by the most endearing names and protested she was his only joy on earth

Sophia perceiving her father in this fit of affection, which she did not absolutely know the reason of (for fits of fondness were not unusual to him, though this was rather more violent than ordinary), thought she should never have a better opportunity of disclosing herself than at present as far at least as regarded Mr Blifil and she too well foresaw the necessity which she should soon be under of [illegible] full explanation After having [illegible]

joy in his Sophy's happiness?' which Western having confirmed by a great oath, and a kiss;

she then laid hold of his hand and falling on her knees after many warm and passionate dec larations of affection and duty she begged him not to make her the most miserable crea ture on earth by forcing her to marry a man whom she detested This I entreat of you dear sir said she for your sake as well as my own since you are so very kind to tell me your happiness depends on mine — How! what! says Western staring wildly Oh! sir con tinued she not only your poor Sophy s hap piness her very life her being depends upon your granting her request I cannot live with Mr Blifil To force me into this marriage would be killing me — You can t live with Mr Blifil? says Western No upon my soul I can t answered Sophia Then die and be d—d cries he spurning her from him Oh! sir cries Sophia catching hold of the skirt of his coat take pity on me I beseech you Don t look and say such cruel—Can you be un moved while you see your Sophy in this dread ful condition? Can the best of fathers break my heart? Will he kill me by the most painful cruel lingering death? — Pooh! pooh! cries the squire all stuff and nonsense all maiden ish tricks Kill you indeed! Will marriage kill you?"— Oh! sir answered Sophia such a marriage is worse than death He is not even indifferent I hate and detest him — If you detest un never so much cries Western you shall ha un This he bound by an oath too shocking to repeat and after many violent asseverations concluded in these words I am resolved upon the match and unless you consent to it I will not give you a groat not a single farthing no though I saw you expiring with famine in the street I would not relieve you with a morsel of bread This is my fixed resolution and so I leave you to consider on it He then broke from her with such vio lence that her face dashed against the floor and he burst directly out of the room leaving poor Sophia prostrate on the ground

When Western came into the hall he there found Jones who seeing his friend looking wild pale and almost breathless could not forbear enquiring the reason of all these mel ancholy appearances Upon which the squire immediately acquainted him with the whole matter concluding with bitter denunciations against Sophia and very pathetic lamentations of the misery of all fathers who are so unfor tunate to have daughters

Jones to whom all the resolutions which had been taken in favour of Blifil were yet a secret was at first almost struck dead with this relation but recovering his spirits a little, mere despair as he afterwards said inspired him to mention a matter to Mr Western, which seemed to require more impudence than a human forehead was ever gifted with He desired leave to go to Sophia that he might endeavour to obtain her concurrence with her father s inclinations

If the squire had been as quicksighted as he was remarkable for the contrary passion might at present very well have blinded him He thanked Jones for offering to undertake the office and said Go go prithee try what canst do and then swore many execrable oaths that he would turn her out of doors un less she consented to the match

Chapter 8

The meeting between Jones and Sophia

JONES departed instantly in quest of Sophia whom he found just risen from the ground where her father had left her with the tears trickling from her eyes and the blood running from her lips He presently ran to her and with a voice full at once of tender ness and terrour cried O my Sophia what means this dreadful sight? She looked softly at him for a moment before she spoke and then said Mr Jones for Heaven s sake how came you here?—Leave me I beseech you this moment — Do not says he impose so harsh a command upon me—my heart bleeds faster than those lips O Sophia how easily could I drain my veins to preserve one drop of that dear blood — I have too many obliga tions to you already answered she for sure you meant them such Here she looked at him tenderly almost a minute and then burst ing into an agony cried Oh Mr Jones why did you save my life? my death would have been happier for us both — Happier for us both! cried he Could racks or wheels kill me so painfully as Sophia s—I cannot bear the dreadful sound Do I live but for her? Both his voice and looks were full of inexpressible tenderness when he spoke these words and at the same time he laid gently hold on her hand, which she did not withdraw from him to say the truth she hardly knew what she did or suffered A few moments now passed in silence between these lovers while his eyes were eagerly fixed on Sophia and hers declining towards the ground at last she recovered strength enough to desire him again to leave her for that her certain ruin would be the consequence of their being found together add ing Oh Mr Jones you know not you know not what hath passed this cruel afternoon

I know all my Sophia answered he your cruel father hath told me all and he himself hath sent me hither to you — My father sent you to me! replied she sure you dream — Would to Heaven cries he it was but a dream! Oh Sophia your father hath sent me to you to be an advocate for my odious rival to solicit you in his favour I took any means to get access to you O speak to me Sophia!

—one moment perhaps tears you for ever from me—nothing less than this cruel occasion could I believe have ever conquered the respect and awe with which you have inspired me She stood a moment silent and covered with confusion then lifting up her eyes gently towards him she cried What would Mr Jones have me say? — O do but promise cries he that you never will give yourself to Blifil — Name not answered she the detested sound Be assured I never will give him what is in my power to withhold from him — Now then cries he while you are so perfectly kind go a little farther and add that I may hope — Alas! says she Mr Jones whither will you drive me? What hope have I to bestow? You know my father s intentions — But I know answered he your compliance with them cannot be compelled — "What says she must be the dreadful consequence of my disobedience? My own ruin is my least concern I cannot bear the thoughts of being the cause of my father s misery — He is himself the cause cries Jones by exacting a power over you which Nature hath not given him Think on the misery which I am to suffer if I am to lose you and see on which side pity will turn the balance — Think of it! replied she can you imagine I do not feel the ruin which I must bring on you should I comply with your desire? It is that thought which gives me resolution to bid you fly from me for ever and avoid your own destruction — I fear no destruction, cries he but the loss of Sophia If you would save me from the most bitter agonies recall that cruel sentence Indeed I can never part with you indeed I can not

The lovers now stood both silent and trembling Sophia being unable to withdraw her hand from Jones, and he almost as unable to hold it when the scene which I believe some of my readers will think had lasted long enough was interrupted by one of so different a nature that we shall reserve the relation of it for a different chapter

Chapter 9

Being of a much more tempestuous kind than the former

BEFORE we proceed with what now happened to our lovers it may be proper to recount what had past in the hall during their tender interview

Soon after Jones had left Mr Western in the manner above mentioned his sister came to him and was presently informed of all that had passed between her brother and Sophia relating to Blifil

This behaviour in her niece the good lady construed to be an absolute breach of the condition on which she had engaged to keep her love for Mr Jones a secret She considered herself therefore at full liberty to reveal all she knew to the squire which she immediately did in the most explicit terms and without any ceremony or preface

The idea of a marriage between Jones and his daughter had never once entered into the squire s head either in the warmest minutes of his affection towards that young man or from suspicion or on any other occasion He did indeed consider a parity of fortune and circumstances to be physically as necessary an ingredient in marriage as difference of sexes or any other essential and had no more apprehension of his daughter s falling in love with a poor man than with any animal of a different species

He became therefore like one thunderstruck at his sister s relation He was at first incapable of making any answer having been almost deprived of his breath by the violence of the surprize This however soon returned and as is usual in other cases after an intermission with redoubled force and fury

The first use he made of the power of speech, after his recovery from the sudden effects of his astonishment was to discharge a round volley of oaths and imprecations After which he proceeded hastily to the apartment where he expected to find the lovers and murmured or rather indeed roared forth intentions of revenge every step he went

As when two doves or two wood pig or as when Strephon and Phyllis (for that comes nearest to the mark) are retired into good companion to more than two at a time here while every object is serene should hoarse thunder burst suddenly through the shattered clouds and rumbling roll along the sky the frightened maid starts from the mossy bank or verdant turf the pale livery of death succeeds the red regimentals in which Love had before drest her cheeks fear shakes her whole frame and her lover scarce supports her trembling tottering limbs

Or as when two gentlemen strangers to the wondrous wit of the place are cracking a bottle together at some inn or tavern at Salisbury if the great Dowdy who acts the part of a mad man as well as some of his setters-on do that of a fool should rattle his chains and dreadfully hum forth the grumbling catch along the gallery the frighted strangers stand aghast scared at the horrid sound they seek some place of shelter from the approaching danger and if the well barred windows did admit their exit would venture their necks to escape the threatening fury now coming upon them

So trembled poor Sophia so turned she pale at the noise of her father who in a voice most dreadful to hear came on swearing cursing and vowing the destruction of Jones To say the truth I believe the youth himself would from some prudent considerations have preferred another place of abode at this time had his terror on Sophia s account given him liberty to reflect a moment on what any other ways concerned himself than as his love made him partake whatever affected her

And now the squire having burst open the door beheld an object which instantly sus

Mr Western no sooner beheld than all his rage forsook him he roared for help with his utmost violence ran first to his daughter then back to the door calling for water and then back again to Sophia never considering in whose arms she then was nor perhaps once recollecting that there was such a person in the world as Jones for indeed I believe the present circumstances of his daughter were now the sole consideration which employed his thoughts

Mrs Western and a great number of servants soon came to the assistance of Sophia with water cordials and everything necessary on those occasions These were applied with such success that Sophia in a very few minutes began to recover and all the symptoms of life to return Upon which she was presently led off by her own maid and Mrs Western nor did that good lady depart without leaving some wholesome admonitions with her brother on the dreadful effects of his passion or as she pleased to call it madness

The squire perhaps did not understand this good advice as it was delivered in obscure hints shrugs and notes of admiration at least if he did understand it he profited very little by it for no sooner was he cured of his immediate fears for his daughter than he relapsed into his former frenzy which must have produced an immediate battle with Jones had not parson Supple who was a very strong man been present and by mere force restrained the squire from acts of hostility

The moment Sophia was departed Jones advanced in a very suppliant manner to Mr Western whom the parson held in his arms and begged him to be pacified for that while he continued in such a passion it would be impossible to give him any satisfaction

I wull have satisfaction o thee answered the squire so doff thy clothes At unt half a man and I ll lick thee as well as wast ever licked in thy life He then bespattered the youth with abundance of that language which passes between country gentlemen who embrace opposite sides of the question with frequent applications to him to salute that part which is generally introduced into all controversies that arise among the lower orders of the English gentry at horse-races cock matches and other public places Allusions to this part are likewise often made for the sake of the jest And here I believe the wit is generally misunderstood In reality it lies in desiring another to kiss your a—— for having just before threatened to kick his for I have observed very accurately that no one ever desires you to kick that which belongs to himself nor offers to kiss this part in another

It may likewise seem surprizing that in the many thousand kind invitations of this sort which every one who hath conversed with country gentlemen must have heard no one I believe hath ever seen a single instance where the desire hath been complied with – a great instance of their want of politeness for in town nothing can be more common than for the finest gentlemen to perform this ceremony every day to their superiors without having that favour once requested of them

To all such wit Jones very calmly answered "Sir this usage may perhaps cancel every other obligation you have conferred on me but there is one you can never cancel nor will I be provoked by your abuse to lift my hand against the father of Sophia

At these words the squire grew still more outrageous than before so that the parson begged Jones to retire saying You behold sir how he waxeth wrath at your abode here therefore let me pray you not to tarry any longer His anger is too much kindled for you to commune with him at present You had better therefore conclude your visit and refer what matters you have to urge in your behalf to some other opportunity

Jones accepted this advice with thanks and immediately departed The squire now regained the liberty of his hands and so much temper as to express some satisfaction in the restraint which had been laid upon him declaring that he should certainly have beat his brains out and adding It would have vexed one confoundedly to have been hanged for such a rascal

The parson now began to triumph in the success of his peacemaking endeavours and proceeded to read a lecture against anger which might perhaps rather have tended to raise than to quiet that passion in some hasty minds This lecture he enriched with many valuable quotations from the antients particularly from Seneca who hath indeed so well handled this passion that none but a very angry man can read him without great pleasure and profit The doctor concluded this harangue with the famous story of Alexander and Clitus but as I find that entered in my common place under title Drunkenness I shall not insert it here

The squire took no notice of this story nor perhaps of anything he said for he interrupted him before he had finished by calling for a tankard of beer observing (which is perhaps as true as any observation on this fever of the mind) that anger makes a man dry

No sooner had the squire swallowed a large draught than he renewed the discourse on Jones and declared a resolution of going the next morning early to acquaint Mr Allworthy His friend would have dissuaded him from this from the mere motive of good nature but his dissuasion had no other effect than to produce a large volley of oaths and curses which greatly shocked the pious ears of Supple but he did not dare to remonstrate against a privilege which the squire claimed as a freeborn Englishman To say truth, the parson submitted to please his palate at the squire s table, at the expense of suffering now and then this violence to his ears He contented himself with thinking he did not promote this evil practise and that the squire would not swear an oath the less if he never entered within his gates However though he was not guilty of ill manners by rebuking a gentleman in his own house he paid him off obliquely in the pulpit which had not indeed the good effect of working a reformation in the squire himself yet it so far operated on his conscience that he put the laws very severely in execution against others and the magistrate was the only person in the parish who could swear with impunity

Chapter 10

In which Mr Western visits Mr Allworthy

Mr Allworthy was now retired from breakfast with his nephew well satisfied with the report of the young gentleman s successful visit to Sophia (for he greatly desired the match more on account of the young lady s character than of her riches) when Mr Western broke abruptly in upon them and without any ceremony began as follows —

There you have done a fine piece of work truly! You have brought up your bastard to a fine purpose not that I believe you have had any hand in it neither that is, as a man may say designedly but there is a fine kettle-of fish made on t up at our house What can be the matter Mr Western? said Allworthy O matter enow of all conscience my daughter hath fallen in love with your bastard that s all but I won t ge her a hapeny not the twentieth part of a brass varden I always thought what would come o breeding up a bastard like a gentleman and letting un come about to vok s houses It s well vor un I could not get at un I d a lick d un I d a spoil d his caterwauling I d a taught the son of a whore to meddle with meat for his master He shan t ever have a morsel of meat of mine or a varden to buy it if she will ha un one smock shall be her portion I d sooner ge my esteate to the zinking fund that it may be sent to Hanover to corrupt our nation with " "I am heartily sorry " cries Allworthy Pox o your sorrow," says Western it will do me abundance of good when I have lost my only child my poor Sophy that was the joy of my heart and all the hope and comfort of my age but I am resolved I will turn her out o doors she shall beg and starve and rot in the streets Not one hapeny not a hapeny shall she ever hae o mine The son of a bitch was always good at finding a hare sitting an be rotted to n I little thought what puss he was looking after, but it shall be the worst he ever vound in his life She shall be no better than carrion the skin o er is all he shall ha and zu you may tell un I am in amazement cries Allworthy at what you tell me after what passed between my nephew and the young lady no longer ago than yesterday Yes sir answered Western it was after what passed between your nephew and she that the whole matter came out Mr Bl fil there was no sooner gone than the son of a whore came lurching about the house Little did I think when I used to love him for a sportsman that he was all the while a poaching after my daughter Why truly says Allworthy I could wish you had not given him so many opportunities with her and you will do me the justice to acknowledge that I have always been averse to his staying so much at your house though I own I had no susp cion of this kind

Why zounds cries Western who could have thought it? What the devil had she to do wi n? He did not come there a courting to her he came there a hunting with me But was it possible says Allworthy that you should never discern any symptoms of love between them when you have seen them so often together? Never in my life as I hope to be saved cries Western I never so much as zeed him kiss her in all my life and so far from courting her he used rather to be more silent when she was n company than at any other time and as for the girl she was always less civil to n than to any young man that came to the house As to that matter I am not more easy to be deceived than another I would not have you think I am neighbour Allworthy could scarce refrain laughter at this but he resolved to do a violence to himself for he perfectly well knew mankind and had too much good breeding and good nature to of fend the squire in his present circumstances He then asked Western what he would have him do upon this occasion To which the other answered That he would have him keep the rascal away from his house and that he would go and lock up the wench for he was resolved to make her marry Mr Blifil in spite of her teeth He then shook Blifil by the hand and swore he would have no other son in law Presently after which he took his leave saying his house was in such disorder that it was necessary for him to make haste home, to take care his daughter did not give him the slip and as for Jones he swore if he caught him at his house he would qualify him to run for the geldings plate

When Allworthy and Blifil were again left together a long silence ensued between them all which interval the young gentleman filled up with sighs which proceeded partly from disappointment but more from hatred for the success of Jones was much more grievous to him than the loss of Sophia

At length his uncle asked him what he was determined to do and he answered in the following words — Alas sir can it be a question what step a lover will take when reason and passion point different ways? I am afraid it is too certain he will in that dilemma always follow the latter Reason dictates to me to quit all thoughts of a woman who places her affections on another my passion bids me hope she may in time change her inclinat ons in my favour Here however I conceive an objection may be raised which if it could not fully be answered would totally deter me from any further pursuit I mean the injustice of endeavouring to supplant another in a heart of which he seems already in possession but the determined resolution of Mr Western shows that in this case I shall by so doing, promote the happiness of every party not only that of the parent who will thus be preserved from the highest degree of misery but of both the others who must be undone by this match The lady I am sure will be undone in every sense for besides the loss of most part of her own fortune she will be not only married to a beggar but the little fortune which her father cannot withhold from her will be squandered on that wench with whom I know he yet converses Nay that is a trifle for I know him to be one of the worst men in the world for had my dear uncle known what I have hitherto endeavoured to conceal he must have long since abandoned so profligate a wretch How! said Allworthy hath he done anything worse than I already know? Tell me I beseech you? No replied Blifil it is now past and perhaps he may have repented of it I command you on your duty"

said Allworthy, "to tell me what you mean" 'You know, sir," says Blifil, "I never disobeyed you but I am sorry I mentioned it, since it may now look like revenge, whereas, I thank Heaven, no such motive ever entered my heart, and if you oblige me to discover it I must be his petitioner to you for your forgiveness" "I will have no conditions," answered Allworthy, "I think I have shown tenderness enough towards him, and more perhaps than you ought to thank me for" "More, indeed, I fear, than he deserved" cries Blifil, "for in the very day of your utmost danger, when myself and all the family were in tears, he filled the house with riot and debauchery He drank, and sung, and roared and when I gave him a gentle hint of the indecency of his actions, he fell into a violent passion, swore many oaths, called me rascal, and struck me" "How!" cries Allworthy, "did he dare to strike you?' "I am sure," cries Blifil, "I have forgiven him that long ago I wish I could so easily forget his ingratitude to the best of benefactors, and yet even that I hope you will forgive him since he must have certainly been possessed with the devil for that very evening as Mr Thwackum and myself were taking the air in the fields and exulting in the good symptoms which then first began to discover themselves, we unluckily saw him engaged with a wench in a manner not fit to be mentioned Mr Thwackum, with more boldness than prudence, advanced to rebuke him, when (I am sorry to say it) he fell upon the worthy man, and beat him so outrageously that I wish he may have yet recovered the bruises Nor was I without my share of the effects of his malice, while I endeavoured to protect my tutor, but that I have long forgiven, nay, I prevailed with Mr. Thwackum to forgive him too, and not to inform you of [illegible]

but where is Mr Thwackum? Not that I want any confirmation of what you say, but I will examine all the evidence of this matter, to justify to the world the example I am resolved to make of such a monster

Thwackum was now sent for, and presently appeared He corroborated every circumstance which the other had deposed nay he produced the record upon his breast, where the hand [illegible]

Mr Blifil, by the most earnest interpositions prevented him "He is," says he, "an excellent youth though such forgiveness of enemies is carrying the matter too far"

In reality, Blifil had taken some pains to prevail with the parson, and to prevent the discovery at that time for which he had many reasons He knew that the minds of men are apt to be softened and relaxed from their usual severity by sickness Besides, he imagined that if the story was told when the fact was so recent, and the physician about the house, who might have unravelled the real truth he should never be able to give it the malicious turn which he intended Again, he resolved to hoard up this business till the indiscretion of Jones should afford some additional complaints for he thought the joint weight of many facts falling upon him together, would be the most likely to crush him and he watched, therefore, some such opportunity as that with which fortune had now kindly presented him Lastly, by prevailing with Thwackum to conceal the [illegible] worthy.

Chapter 11

A short chapter, but which contains sufficient matter to affect the good natured reader

It was Mr Allworthy's custom never to punish any one not even to turn away a servant, in a passion He resolved therefore to delay passing sentence on Jones till the afternoon

The poor young man attended at dinner, as usual, but his heart was too much loaded to suffer him to eat His grief too was a good deal aggravated by the unkind looks of Mr. Allworthy, whence he concluded that Western had discovered the whole affair between him and Sophia but as to Mr Blifil's story, he had not the least apprehension for of much the [illegible]

the many iniquities of which Jones had been guilty particularly those which this day had brought to light and concluded by telling him 'That unless he could clear himself of the charge he was resolved to banish him his sight for ever

Many disadvantages attended poor Jones in making his defence nay indeed he hardly knew his accusation for as Mr Allworthy in recounting the drunkenness &c while he lay ill out of modesty sunk everything that related particularly to himself which indeed principally constituted the crime Jones could not deny the charge His heart was besides almost broken already and his spirits were so sunk that he could say nothing for himself but acknowledge the whole and like a criminal in despair threw himself upon mercy concluding That though he must own himself guilty of many follies and inadvertencies he hoped he had done nothing to deserve what would be to him the greatest punishment in the world

Allworthy answered That he had forgiven him too often already in compassion to his youth and in hopes of his amendment that he now found he was an abandoned reprobate and such as it would be criminal in any one to support and encourage Nay said Mr Allworthy to him your audacious attempt to steal away the young lady calls upon me to justify my own character in punishing you The world who have already censured the regard I have shown for you may think with some colour at least of justice that I connive at so base and barbarous an action—an action of which you must have known my abhorrence and which had you had any concern for my ease and honour as well as for my friendship you would never have thought of undertaking Fie upon it young man! indeed there is scarce any punishment equal to your crimes and I can scarce think myself justifiable in what I am now going to bestow on you However as I have educated you like a child of my own I will not turn you naked into the world When you open this paper therefore you will find something which may enable you with industry to get an honest livelihood but if you employ it to worse purposes I shall not think myself obliged to supply you farther being resolved from this day forward to converse no more with you on any account I cannot avoid saying there is no part of your conduct which I resent more than your ill treatment of that good young man (meaning Blifil) who hath behaved with so much tenderness and honour towards you

These last words were a dose almost too bitter to be swallowed A flood of tears now gushed from the eyes of Jones and every faculty of speech and motion seemed to have deserted him It was some time before he was able to obey Allworthy's peremptory commands of departing which he at length did having first kissed his hands with a passion difficult to be affected and as difficult to be described

The reader must be very weak if when he considers the light in which Jones then appeared to Mr Allworthy he should blame the rigour of his sentence And yet all the neighbourhood either from this weakness or from some worse motive condemned this justice and severity as the highest cruelty Nay the very persons who had before censured the good man for the kindness and tenderness shown to a bastard (his own according to the general opinion) now cried out as loudly against turning his own child out of doors The women especially were unanimous in taking the part of Jones and raised more stories on the occasion than I have room, in this chapter to set down

One thing must not be omitted that in their censures on this occasion none ever mentioned the sum contained in the paper which Allworthy gave Jones which was no less than five hundred pounds but all agreed that he was sent away penniless and some said naked, from the house of his inhuman father

Chapter 12

Containing love letters, etc

JONES was commanded to leave the house immediately and told that his clothes and everything else should be sent to him whithersoever he should order them

He accordingly set out and walked above a mile not regarding and indeed scarce knowing whither he went At length a little brook obstructing his passage he threw himself down by the side of it nor could he help muttering with some little indignation Sure my father will not deny me this place to rest in!

Here he presently fell into the most violent agonies tearing his hair from his head and using most other actions which generally accompany fits of madness rage and despair

When he had in this manner vented the first emotions of passion he began to come a little to himself His grief now took another turn and discharged itself in a gentler way till he became at last cool enough to reason with his passion and to consider what steps were proper to be taken in his deplorable condition the violent desire of possessing her person could have induced him to listen one moment to h...

And now the great doubt was how to act with regard to Sophia The thoughts of leaving her almo...

Allworthy and the injury he must do to his quiet argued strongly against this latter and lastly the apparent impossibility of his success even if he would sacrifice all these considerations to it came to his assistance and thus honour at last backed with despair with gratitude to his benefactors and with real love to his mistress got the better of burning desire and he resolved rather to quit Sophia than pursue her to her ruin

It is difficult for any who have not felt it to conceive the glowing warmth which filled his breast on the first contemplation of this victory over his passion Pride flattered him so agreeably that his mind perhaps enjoyed perfect happiness but this was only momentary Sophia soon returned to his imagination and allayed the joy of his triumph with no less b...

his laurels for thousands of tender ideas lay murdered before our conqueror

Being resolved however to pursue the paths of this giant honour as the gigantic poet Lee calls it he determined to write a farewell letter to Sophia and accordingly proceeded to a house not far off where being furnished with proper materials he wrote as follows —

MADAM —

When you reflect on the situation in which I write I am sure your good nature will pardon any inconsistency or absurdity which my letter contains for everything here flows from a heart so full that no language can express its dictates

I have resolved madam to obey your commands in flying for ever from your dear your lovely sight Cruel indeed those commands are, but it is a cruelty which proceeds from fortune not from my Sophia Fortune hath made it necessary necessary to your preservation to forget there ever was such a wretch as I am

Believe me I would not hint all my sufferings to you if I imagined they could possibly escape your ears I know the goodness and tenderness of your heart and would avoid giving you any of those pains which you always feel for the miserable O let nothing which you shall hear of my hard fortune, cause a moment's concern for after the loss of you, everything is to me a trifle

O Sophia! it is hard to leave you it is harder still to desire you to forget me yet the sincerest love obliges me to both Pardon my conceiving that any remembrance of me can give you disquiet but if I am so gloriously wretched sacrifice me every way to your relief Think I never loved you or think truly how little I deserve you and learn to scorn me for a presumption which can never be too severely punished —I am unable to say more —May guardian angels protect you for ever!

He was now searching his pockets for his wax but found none nor indeed anything else therein for in truth he had in his frantic disposition tossed everything from him and amongst the rest his pocket book which he had received from Mr Allworthy which he had never opened and which now first occurred to his memory

The house supplied him with a wafer for his present purpose with which having sealed his letter he returned hastily towards the brook side in order to search for the things which he had there lost In his way he met his old friend Black George who heartily condoled with him on his misfortune for this had already reached his ears and indeed those of all the neighbourhood

Jones acquainted the gamekeeper with his loss and he as readily went back with him to the brook where they searched every tuft of grass in the meadow as well where Jones had not been as where he had been but all to no purpose for they found nothing for indeed though the things were then in the meadow they omitted to search the only place where they were deposited to wit in the pockets of the said George for he had just before found them and being luckily apprized of their value had very carefully put them up for his o... use

The gamekeeper having exerted

diligence in quest of the lost goods as if he had hoped to find them desired Mr Jones to recollect if he had been in no other place For sure said he if you had lost them here so lately the things must have been here still for this is a very unlikely place for any one to pass by And indeed it was by great accident that he himself had passed through that field in order to lay wires for hares with which he was to supply a poulterer at Bath the next morning in the world?

George answered with some hesitation Sir you know you may command me whatever is in my power and I heartily wish it was in my power to do you any service In fact the question staggered him for he had by selling game amassed a pretty good sum of money in Mr Western s service and was afraid that Jones wanted to borrow some small matter of him but he was presently relieved from his anxiety by being desired to convey a letter to Sophia which with great pleasure he promised to do And indeed I believe there are few favours which he would not have gladly conferred on Mr Jones for he bore as much gratitude towards him as he could and was as honest as men who love money better than any other thing in the universe generally are

Mrs Honour was agreed by both to be the proper means by which this letter should pass to Sophia They then separated the gamekeeper returned home to Mr Western s and Jones walked to an alehouse at half a mile s distance to wait for his messenger s return

George no sooner came home to his master s house than he met with Mrs Honour to whom having first sounded her with a few previous questions he delivered the letter for her mistress and received at the same time another from her for Mr Jones which Honour told him she had carried all that day in her bosom and began to despair of finding any means of delivering it

The gamekeeper returned hastily and joyfully to Jones who having received Sophia s letter from him instantly withdrew and eagerly breaking it open read as follows —

Sir —

It is impossible to express what I have felt since I saw you Your submitting on my account, to such cruel insults from my father lays me under an obligation I shall ever own As you know his temper I beg you will for my sake avoid him I wish I had any comfort to send you but believe this that nothing but the last violence shall ever give my hand or heart where you would be sorry to see them bestowed

Jones read this letter a hundred times over and kissed it a hundred times as often His passion now brought all tender desires back into his mind He repented that he had writ to Sophia in the manner we have seen above but he repented more that he had made use of the interval of his messenger s absence to write and dispatch a letter to Mr Allworthy in which he had faithfully promised and bound himself to quit all thoughts of his love However when his cool reflections returned he plainly perceived that his case was neither mended nor altered by Sophia s billet unless to give him some little glimpse of hope from her constancy of some favourable accident hereafter He therefore resumed his resolution and taking leave of Black George set forward to a town about five miles distant whither he had desired Mr Allworthy unless he pleased to revoke his sentence to send his things after him

Chapter 13

The behaviour of Sophia on the present occasion which none of her sex will blame who are capable of behaving in the same manner And the discussion of a knotty point in the court of conscience

Sophia had passed the last twenty four hours in no very desirable manner During a large part of them she had been entertained by her aunt with lectures of prudence recommending to her the example of the polite world where love (so the good lady said) is at present entirely laughed at and where women consider matrimony as men do offices of public trust only as the means of making several hours.

These sagacious lectures though little suited either to the taste or inclination of Sophia were however less irksome to her than her own thoughts that formed the entertainment of the night during which she never once closed her eyes

But though she could neither sleep nor rest in her bed, yet, having no avocation from it, she was found there by her father at his return from Allworthy's, which was not till past ten o'clock in the morning He went directly up to her apartment, opened the door, and seeing she was not up, cried, "Oh! you are safe then, and I am resolved to keep you so" He then locked the door, and delivered the key to Honour, having first given her the strictest charge, with great promises of rewards for her fidelity, and most dreadful menaces of punishment in case she should betray her trust

Honour s orders were, not to suffer her mistress to come out of her room without the authority of the squire himself, and to admit none to her but him and her aunt, but she was herself to attend her with whatever Sophia pleased except only pen, ink and paper, of which she was forbidden the use

The squire ordered his daughter to dress herself and attend him at dinner, which she obeyed and having sat the usual time, was again conducted to her prison

In the evening the gaoler Honour brought her the letter which she received from the gamekeeper Sophia read it very attentively twice or thrice over, and then threw herself upon the bed, and burst into a flood of tears Mrs Honour expressed great astonishment at this behaviour in her mistress nor could she forbear very eagerly begging to know the cause of this passion Sophia made her no answer for some time, and then, starting suddenly up, caught her maid by the hand and cried, 'O Honour! I am undone" "Marry forbid ' cries Honour 'I wish the letter had been burnt before I had brought it to your la ship I'm sure I thought it would have comforted your la'ship or I would have seen it at the devil before I would have touched it" "Honour" says Sophia, "you are a good girl, and it is vain to attempt concealing longer my weakness from you I have thrown away my heart on a man who hath forsaken me ' And is Mr Jones," answered the maid 'such a perfidy man?' 'He hath taken his leave of me says Sophia, "for ever in that letter Nay he hath desired me to forget him Could he have desired that if he had loved me? Could he have borne such a thought? Could he have written such a word?' 'No, certainly ma'am' cries Honour, 'and to be sure if the best man in England was to desire me to forget him I d take him at his word Marry, come up! I am sure your la'ship hath done him too much honour ever to think on him'—a young lady who may take her choice of all the young men in the country And to be sure, if I may be so presumptuous as to offer my poor opinion there is young Mr Blifil, who, besides that he is come of honest parents, and will be one of the greatest squires all hereabouts, he is to be sure, in my poor opinion, a more handsomer and a more politer man by half, and besides he is a young gentleman of a sober character and who may defy any of the neighbours to say black is his eye, he follows no dirty trollops, nor can any bastards be laid at his door Forget him, indeed! I thank Heaven I myself am not so much at my last prayers as to suffer any man to bid me forget him twice If the best he that wears a head was for to go for to offer to say such an affronting word to me, I would never give him my company afterwards if there was another young man in the kingdom And as I was a saying, to be sure, there is young Mr Blifil" "Name not his detested name" cries Sophia ' Nay, ma am" says Honour "if your la ship doth not like him, there be more jolly handsome young men that would court your la'ship if they had but the least encouragement I don't believe there is arrow young gentleman in this county, or in the next to it, that if your la'ship was but to look as if you had a mind to him would not come about to make his offers directly" "What a wretch dost thou imagine me," cries Sophia, 'by affronting my ears with such stuff! I detest all mankind" "Nay, to be sure, ma'am,' answered Honour, 'your la'ship hath had enough to give you a surfeit of them To be used ill by such a poor, beggarly, bastardly fellow '— Hold your blasphemous tongue,' cries Sophia ' how dare you mention his name with disrespect before me? He use me ill? No, his poor bleeding heart suffered more when he writ the cruel words than mine from reading them O! he is all heroic virtue and angelic goodness I am ashamed of the weakness of my own passion for blaming what I ought to

[illegible]

glad" says Honour, ' to hear your la'ship takes that into your consideration, for to be sure it must be nothing less than ruin to give your mind to one that is turned out of doors and is not worth a farthing in the world" "Turned out of doors'" cries Sophia hastily "how! what dost thou mean?" ' Why, to be sure, ma'a[illegible]

my master no sooner told Squire Allworthy about Mr. Jones having offered to make love to your la'ship than the squire stripped him stark naked, and turned him out of doors!" 'Ha!" says Sophia, "I have been the cursed, wretched cause of his destruction! Turned naked out of doors! Here, Honour, take all the money I have, take the rings from my fingers Here, my watch carry him all Go find him immediately" "For Heaven's sake, ma'am," answered Mrs Honour, "do but consider, if my master should miss any of these things I should be made to answer for them. Therefore let me beg your la'ship not to part with your watch and jewels Besides, the money, I think, is enough of all conscience, and as for that, my master can never know any thing of the matter" Here, then," cries Sophia "take every farthing I am worth, find him out immediately, and give it him Go, go, lose not a moment

Mrs Honour departed according to orders, and finding Black George below stairs, delivered him the purse, which contained sixteen guineas, being, indeed the whole stock of Sophia, for though her father was very liberal to her, she was much too generous to be rich

Black George having received the purse, set forward towards the alehouse but in the way a thought occurred to him whether he should not detain this money likewise His conscience, however, immediately started at this suggestion, and began to upbraid him with ingratitude to his benefactor To this his avarice answered, That his conscience should have considered the matter before when he deprived poor Jones of his £500 That having quietly acquiesced in what was of so much greater importance, it was absurd, if not downright hypocrisy, to affect any qualms at this trifle In return to which, Conscience like a good lawyer, attempted to distinguish between an absolute breach of trust, as here, where the goods were [illegible]

virtue were given up in any one instance, that there was no precedent for resorting to them upon a second occasion In short poor Conscience had certainly been defeated in the argument, had not Fear stept in to her assistance, and very strenuously urged that the real distinction between the two actions, did not lie in the different degrees of honour but of safety for that the secreting the £500 was a matter of very little hazard, whereas the detaining the sixteen guineas was liable to the utmost danger of discovery

By this friendly aid of Fear, Conscience obtained a compleat victory in the mind of Black George, and, after making him a few compliments on his honesty, forced him to deliver the money to Jones

Chapter 14

A short chapter, containing a short dialogue between Squire Western and his sister

Mrs Western had been engaged abroad all that day The squire met her at her return home, and when she enquired after Sophia he acquainted her that he had secured her safe enough 'She is locked up in chamber," cries [illegible] appointed when, with a most disdainful aspect, she cried, 'Sure, brother, you are the weakest of all men Why will you not confide in me for the management of my niece? Why will you interpose? You have now undone all that I have been spending my breath in order to bring about While I have been endeavouring to fill her mind with maxims of prudence, you have been provoking her to reject them. English women, brother, I thank heaven are no slaves We are not to be locked up like the Spanish and Italian wives We have as good a right to liberty as yourselves We are to be convinced by reason and persuasion only, and not governed by force I have seen the world, brother, and know what arguments to make use of, and if your folly had not prevented me, should have prevailed with her to form her conduct by those rules of prudence and discretion which I formerly taught her" "To be sure, said the squire, "I am always in the wrong' Brother," answered the lady, "you are not in the wrong, unless when you meddle with matters beyond your knowledge You must agree that I have seen most of the world and happy had it been for my niece if she had not been taken from under my care. It is by living at home with you that she hath learnt romantic notions of love and nonsense" 'You don t imagine, I hope," cries the squire, 'that I have taught her any such things" "Your ignorance, brother," returned she, "as the great Milton says, almost subdues my patience"* 'D—n Milton!" answered the squire 'if he had the impudence to say so to my face, I'd lend him a douse, thof he was never so great a man Patience! An you come to that, sister, I have more occasion of patience, to be used like an overgrown schoolboy, as I am by you Do you think no one hath any understanding, unless he hath been about at court? Pox! the world is come to a fine pass indeed, if we are all fools, except a parcel of round heads and Hanover rats Pox! I hope the times are a coming when we shall make fools of them, and every man shall enjoy his own [illegible]

[illegible]

test, brother," cries she, "you are now got beyond my understanding. Your jargon of turneps and Hanover rats is to me perfectly unintelligible"—"I believe," cries he, "you don't care to hear o'em, but the country interest may succeed one day or other for all that"—'I wish,' answered the lady, "you would think a little of your daughter's interest, for, believe me, she is in greater danger than the nation"—"Just now," said he, "you chid me for thinking on her, and would ha' her left to you"—"And if you will promise to interpose no more," answered she, "I will, out of my regard to my niece, undertake the charge"—"Well, do then,' said the squire "for you know I always agreed that women are the properest to manage women '

Mrs Western then departed, muttering something with an air of disdain, concerning women and management of the nation She immediately repaired to Sophia's apartment, who was now, after a day's confinement, released again from her captivity.

*The reader may, perhaps, subdue his own patience, if he searches for this in Milton.

BOOK VII

Containing three days

Chapter 1

A comparison between the world and the stage

The world hath been often compared to the theatre, and many grave writers as well as the poets, have considered human life as a great drama, resembling in almost every particular, those scenical representations which Thespis is first reported to have invented, and which have been since received with so much approbation and delight in all polite countries

This thought hath been carried so far, and is become so general, that some words proper to the theatre, and which were at first metaphorically applied to the world, are now indiscriminately and literally spoken of both thus stage and scene are by common use grown as familiar to us, when we speak of life in general as, when we confine ourselves to dramatic performances and when transactions behind the curtain are mentioned, St James's is more likely to occur to our thoughts than Drury lane.

It may seem easy enough to account for all this, by reflecting that the theatrical stage is nothing more than a representation, or, as Aristotle calls it, an imitation of what really exists, and hence, perhaps, we might fairly pay a very high compliment to those who by their writings or actions have been so capable of imitating life, as to have their pictures in a manner confounded with, or mistaken for, the originals

[illegible]

mankind in the light of actors, as personating

[illegible]

name

The brevity of life hath likewise given occasion to this comparison So the immortal Shakspear--

——Life s a poor player, That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more

For which hackneyed quotation I will make the reader amends by a very noble one which few I believe have read It is taken from a poem called the Deity published about nine years ago and long since buried in oblivion a proof that good books no more than good men do always survive the bad

*From Thee * all human actions take their springs*

[illegible]

In all these however and in every other similitude of life to the theatre the resemblance hath been always taken from the stage only None, as I remember have at all con

the behaviour of her spectators no less admit the above mentioned comparison than that of her actors In this vast theatre of time are seated the friend and the critic here are claps and shouts hisses and groans in short every thing which was ever seen or heard at the Theatre Royal

Let us examine this in one example for instance in the behaviour of the great audience on that scene which Nature was pleased to ex

spectator

Those who sat in the world s upper gallery treated that incident I am well convinced with their usual vociferation and every term of scurrilous reproach was most probably vented on that occasion

If we had descended to the next order of spectators we should have found an equal degree of abhorrence though less of noise and scurrility yet here the good women gave Black George to the devil and many of them expected every minute that the cloven footed gentleman would fetch his own

The pit as usual was no doubt divided severely for the sake of example Some of the author s friends cryed Look e gentlemen the man is a villain but it is nature for all that And all the young critics of the age the clerks apprentices &c called it low and fell a groaning

As for the boxes they behaved with their accustomed politeness Most of them were attending to something else Some of those few who regarded the scene at all declared he was a bad kind of man while others refused to give their opinion till they had heard that of the best judges

Now we who are admitted behind the scenes of this great theatre of Nature (and no author ought to write anything besides dictionaries and spelling books who hath not this privilege) can censure the action without conceiving any absolute detestation of the person whom perhaps Nature may not have designed to act an ill part in all her dramas for in this instance life most exactly resembles the stage since it is often the same person who represents the villain and the heroe and he who engages your admiration to day will probably attract your contempt tomorrow As Garrick whom I regard in tragedy to be the greatest genius the world hath ever produced sometimes condescends to play the fool so did Scipio the Great and Lælius the Wise according to Horace many years ago nay Cicero reports them to have been incredibly childish These it is true played the fool like my friend Garrick in jest only but several eminent characters have in numberless instances of their lives played the fool egregiously in earnest so far as to render it a matter of some doubt whether their wisdom or folly was predominant or whether they were better intituled to the applause or censure the admiration or contempt the love or hatred of mankind

Those persons indeed who have passed any time behind the scenes of this great theatre and are thoroughly acquainted not only with the several disguises which are there put on but also with the fantastic and capricious behaviour of the Passions who are the managers and directors of this theatre (for as to Reason the patentee he is known to be a very idle fel lish phrase to stare at nothing

* The Deity

A single bad act no more constitutes a vil lain in life than a single bad part on the stage The passions like the managers of a playhouse often force men upon parts with out consulting their judgment and sometimes of Iago would on the honest face of Mr Wil liam Mills

Upon the whole then the man of candour and of true understanding is never hasty to condemn He can censure an imperfection ours and uproars both in life and on the stage The worst of men generally have the words rogue and villain most in their mouths as the lowest of all wretches are the aptest to cry out low in the pit

Chapter 2

Containing a conversation which Mr Jones had with himself

JONES received his effects from Mr All worthy's early in the morning with the follow ing answer to his letter —

SIR —

I am commanded by my uncle to ac quaint you that as he did not proceed to those measures he had taken with you without the greatest deliberation and after the fullest evi dence of your unworthiness so will it be always out of your power to cause the least alteration in his resolution He expresses great surprize at your presumption in saying you have re signed all pretensions to a young lady to whom it is impossible you should ever have had any her birth and fortune having made her so in finitely your superior Lastly I am commanded to tell you that the only instance of your com pliance with my uncle's inclinations which he requires is, your immediately quitting this country I cannot conclude this without offer ing you my advice as a Christian that you would seriously think of amending your life That you may be assisted with grace so to do, will be always the prayer of

Your humble servant

W BLIFIL

Many contending passions were raised in our heroe s mind by this letter but the tender prevailed at last over the indignant and iras cible and a flood of tears came seasonably to his assistance and possibly prevented his mis fortunes from either turning his head or burst ing his heart will go this moment—but whither?—why let Fortune direct since there is no other who thinks it of any consequence what becomes of this wretched person it shall be a matter of equal indifference to myself Shall I alone re gard what no other—Ha! have I not reason to think there is another?—one whose value is above that of the whole world!—I may I must imagine my Sophia is not indifferent to what becomes of me Shall I then leave this only friend—and such a friend? Shall I not stay with her?—Where—how can I stay with her? Have I any hopes of ever seeing her though she was as desirous as myself without exposing her to the wrath of her father and to what pur pose? Can I think of soliciting such a creature to consent to her own ruin? Shall I indulge any passion of mine at such a price? Shall I lurk about this country like a thief with such intentions?—No I disdain I detest the thought Farewel Sophia farewel most lovely most beloved— Here passion stopped his mouth and found a vent at his eyes

And now having taken a resolution to leave the country he began to debate with himself whither he should go The world as Milton phrases it lay all before him and Jones no more than Adam had any man to whom he might resort for comfort or assistance All his acquaintance were the acquaintance of Mr Allworthy and he had no reason to expect any countenance from them as that gentleman had withdrawn his favour from him Men of great and good characters should indeed be very cautious how they discard their depend

what

con sideration and here the prospect was all melancholy void Every profession and every trade required length of time and what was worse money for matters are so constituted that nothing out of nothing is not a truer maxim in physics than in politics and every man who is greatly destitute of money is on that account entirely excluded from all means of acquiring it

At last the Ocean that hospitable friend to the wretched opened her capacious arms to receive him and he instantly resolved to accept her kind invitation To express myself less figuratively he determined to go to sea

This thought indeed no sooner suggested itself than he eagerly embraced it and having presently hired horses, he set out for Bristol to put it in execution

But before we attend him on this expedition we shall resort awhile to Mr Western s and see what further happened to the charming Sophia

Chapter 3

Containing several dialogues

The morning in which Mr Jones departed Mrs Western summoned Sophia into her apartment and having first acquainted her that she had obtained her liberty of her father she proceeded to read her a long lecture on the subject of matrimony which she treated not as a romantic scheme of happiness arising from love as it hath been described by the poets nor did she mention any of those purposes for which we are taught by divines to regard it as instituted by sacred authority she considered it rather as a fund in which prudent women deposit their fortunes to the best advantage in order to receive a larger interest for them than they could have elsewhere

When Mrs Western had finished Sophia answered That she was very incapable of arguing with a lady of her aunt s superior knowledge and experience especially on a subject which she had so very little considered as this of matrimony

Argue with me child! replied the other 'I do not indeed expect it I should have seen the world to very little purpose truly if I am to argue with one of your years I have taken this trouble in order to instruct you The antient philosophers such as Socrates Alcibiades and others did not use to argue with their scholars You are to consider me child as Socrates not asking your opinion but only informing you of mine. From which last words the reader may possibly imagine that this lady had read no more of the philosophy of Socrates than she had of that of Alcibiades and indeed we cannot resolve his curiosity as to this point

Madam cries Sophia 'I have never presumed to controvert any opinion of yours and this subject, as I said I have never yet thought of and perhaps never may

Indeed Sophy replied the aunt 'this dissimulation with me is very foolish The French shall as soon persuade me that they take foreign towns in defence only of their own country as you can impose on me to believe you have never yet thought seriously of matrimony How can you child affect to deny that you have considered of contracting an alliance when you so well know I am acquainted with the party with whom you desire to contract it?—an alliance as unnatural, and contrary to your interest as a separate league with the French would be to the interest of the Dutch! But however if you have not hitherto considered of this matter I promise you it is now high time for my brother is resolved immediately to conclude the treaty with Mr Blifil and indeed I am a sort of guarantee in the affair and have promised your concurrence

Indeed madam cries Sophia this is the only instance in which I must disobey both yourself and my father For this is a match which requires very little consideration in me to refuse

If I was not as great philosopher as Socrates himself returned Mrs Western you would overcome my patience What objection can you have to the young gentleman?

A very solid objection in my opinion says Sophia— I hate him

Will you never learn a proper use of words? answered the aunt Indeed child you should consult Bailey s Dictionary It is impossible you should hate a man from whom you have received no injury By hatred therefore you mean no more than dislike which is no sufficient objection against your marrying of him I have known many couples who have entirely disliked each other lead very comfortable genteel lives Believe me child I know these things better than you You will allow me I think to have seen the world in which I have not an acquaintance who would not rather be thought to dislike her husband than to like him The contrary is such out-of fashion romantic nonsense that the very imagination of it is shocking'

"Indeed madam replied Sophia 'I shall never marry a man I dislike If I promise my father never to consent to any marriage contrary to his inclinations I think I may hope he will never force me into that state contrary to my own"

Inclinations!' cries the aunt with some warmth Inclinations! I am astonished at your assurance A young woman of your age and unmarried, to talk of inclinations! But whatever your inclinations may be my brother is resolved nay since you talk of inclinations I shall advise him to hasten the treaty Inclinations!

Sophia then flung herself upon her knees and tears began to trickle from her shining eyes She entreated her aunt to have mercy upon her and not to resent so cruelly her unwillingness to make herself miserable often urging that she alone was concerned and that her happiness only was at stake

As a bailiff when well authorized by his writ having possessed himself of the person of some unhappy debtor views all his tears without concern in vain the wretched captive attempts to raise compassion in vain the tender wife bereft of her companion the little prattling boy or frighted girl are mentioned as inducements to reluctance The noble bum trap blind and deaf to every circumstance of distress greatly rises above all the motives to humanity, and into the hands of the gaoler resolves to deliver his miserable prey

Not less blind to the tears or less deaf to every entreaty of Sophia was the politic aunt nor less determined was she to deliver over the trembling maid into the arms of the gaoler Blifil She answered with great impetuosity 'So far madam from your being concerned alone your concern is the least or surely the least important It is the honour of your family which is concerned in this alliance you are only the instrument Do you conceive mistress that in an intermarriage between kingdoms as when a daughter of France is married into Spain the princess herself is alone considered in the match? No! it is a match between two kingdoms, rather than between two persons The same happens in great families such as ours. The alliance between the families is the principal matter You ought to have a greater regard for the honour of your family than for your own person and if the example of a princess cannot inspire you with these noble thoughts you cannot surely complain at being used no worse than all princesses are used"

I hope, madam' cries Sophia with a little elevation of voice I shall never do anything to dishonour my family but as for Mr Blifil, whatever may be the consequence I am resolved against him and no force shall prevail in his favour

Western who had been within hearing during the greater part of the preceding dialogue had now exhausted all his patience he therefore entered the room in a violent passion crying D--n me then if shatunt ha un d--n me if shatunt that's all--that's all d--n me if shatunt

Mrs Western had collected a sufficient quantity of wrath for the use of Sophia but she now transferred it all to the squire Brother said she "it is astonishing that you will interfere in a matter which you had totally left to my negotiation Regard to my family hath made me take upon myself to be the mediating power in order to rectify those mistakes in policy which you have committed in your daughter's education For, brother it is you--it is your preposterous conduct which hath eradicated all the seeds that I had formerly sown in her tender mind It is you yourself who have taught her disobedience -- Blood! cries the squire foaming at the mouth you are enough to conquer the patience of the devil! Have I ever taught my daughter disobedience?--Here she stands speak honestly girl did ever I bid you be disobedient to me? Have not I done everything to humour and to gratify you and to make you obedient to me? And very obedient to me she was when a little child before you took her in hand and spoiled her by filling her head with a pack of court notions Why--why--why--did I not overhear you telling her she must behave like a princess? You have made a Whig of the girl and how should her father or anybody else expect any obedience from her? -- Brother" answered Mrs Western with an air of great disdain "I cannot express the contempt I have for your politics of all kinds but I will appeal likewise to the young lady herself whether I have ever taught her any principles of disobedience On the contrary niece have I not endeavoured to inspire you with a true idea of the several relations in which a human creature stands in society? Have I not taken infinite pains to show you that the law of nature hath enjoined a duty on children to their parents? Have I not told you what Plato says on that subject?--a subject on which you was so notoriously ignorant when you came first under my care,

I verily believe you did not know the relation between a daughter and a father — Tis a lie answered Western The girl is no such fool as to live to eleven years old without knowing that she was her father s relation — O! more than Gothic ignorance answered the lady And as for your manners brother I must tell you they deserve a cane ' — Why then you may gi it me, if you think you are able cries the squire nay I suppose your niece there will be ready enough to help you — Brother said Mrs Western though I despise you beyond expression yet I shall endure your insolence no longer so I desire my coach may be got ready immediately for I am resolved to leave your house this very morning — And a good riddance too answered he "I can bear your insolence no longer an you come to that Blood! it is almost enough of itself to make my daughter undervalue my sense when she hears you telling me every minute you despise me — It is impossible it is impossible cries the aunt no one can undervalue such a boor — Boar answered the squire I am no boar no nor ass no nor rat neither madam Remember that—I am no rat I am a true Englishman and not of your Hanover breed that have eat up the nation — Thou art one of those wise men cries she whose nonsensical principles have undone the nation by weakening the hands of our government at home and by discouraging our friends and encouraging our enemies abroad — Ho! are you come back to your politics? cries the squire as for those I despise them as much as I do a f—t Which last words he accompanied and graced with the very action which of all others was the most proper to it And whether it was this word or the contempt exprest for her politics which most affected Mrs Western I will not determine but she flew into the most violent rage uttered phrases improper to be here related and instantly burst out of the house Nor did her brother or her niece think proper either to stop or to follow her for the one was so much possessed by concern and the other by anger that they were rendered almost motionless

The squire however sent after his sister the same holloa which attends the departure of a hare when she is first started before the hounds He was indeed a great master of this kind of vociferation and had a holla proper for most occasions in life

Women who like Mrs Western know the world and have applied themselves to philosophy and politics would have immediately availed themselves of the present disposition of Mr Western s mind by throwing in a few artful compliments to his understanding at the expense of his absent adversary, but poor Sophia was all simplicity By which word we do not intend to insinuate to the reader that she was silly which is generally understood as a synonymous term with simple for she was indeed a most sensible girl and her understanding was of the first rate but she wanted all that useful art which females convert to so many good purposes in life and which as it rather arises from the heart than from the head is often the property of the silliest of women

Chapter 4

A picture of a country gentlewoman taken from the life

MR WESTERN having finished his holla, and taken a little breath began to lament in very pathetic terms the unfortunate condition of men who are says he always whipt in by the humours of some d—n d b— or other I think I was hard run enough by your mother for one man but after giving her a dodge here s another b— follows me upon the foil but curse my jacket if I will be run down in this manner by any o um

Sophia never had a single dispute with her father till this unlucky affair of Blifil on any account except in defence of her mother whom she had loved most tenderly though she lost her in the eleventh year of her age The squire to whom that poor woman had been a faithful upper servant all the time of their marriage, had returned that behaviour by making what the world calls a good husband He very seldom swore at her (perhaps not above once a week) and never beat her she had not the least occasion for jealousy and was perfect mistress of her time for she was never interrupted by her husband who was engaged all the morning in his field exercises and all the evening with bottle companions She scarce indeed ever saw him but at meals where she had the pleasure of carving those dishes which she had before attended at the dressing From these meals she retired about five minutes after the other servants having only stayed to drink the king over the water Such were it seems Mr Western s orders for it was a maxim with him that women should come in with the first dish and go out after the first glass Obedience to these orders was perhaps no difficult task for the conversation (if it may be called so) was seldom such as could entertain a lady It consisted chiefly of hallowing singing relations of sporting adventures b—d—y and abuse of women and of the government

These however were the only seasons when Mr Western saw his wife for when he repaired to her bed he was generally so drunk command though unhappily indeed the badness of the neighbourhood and of the roads made this of little use for none who had set much value on their necks would have passed through the one or who had set any value on their hours would have visited the other Now to deal honestly with the reader, she did not make all the return expected to so much indulgence for she had been married against her will by a fond father the match having been rather advantageous on her side for the

of temper for she was rather a good servant

would moreover sometimes interfere with matters which did not concern her as the violent drinking of her husband which in the gentlest terms she would take some of the few opportunities he gave her of remonstrating

after being well assured that all the husbands in London are cuckolds

For this last and many other good reasons Western at length heartily hated his wife and as he never concealed this hatred before her death so he never forgot it afterwards but when anything in the least soured him as a bad scenting day or a distemper among his hounds or any other such misfortune he constantly vented his spleen by invectives against the deceased saying If my wife was alive now she would be glad of this

These invectives he was especially desirous of throwing forth before Sophia for as he loved her more than he did any other so he was really jealous that she had loved her mother better than him And this jealousy Sophia seldom failed of heightening on these occasions for he was not contented with violating her ears with the abuse of her mother, but endeavoured to force an explicit approbation of all this abuse with which desire he never could prevail upon her by any promise or threats to comply

Hence some of my readers will perhaps wonder that the squire had not hated Sophia as much as he had hated her mother but I must inform them that hatred is not the effect of love even through the medium of jealousy It is indeed very possible for jealous persons to kill the objects of their jealousy but not to hate them Which sentiment being a pretty hard morsel and bearing something of the air of a paradox we shall leave the reader to chew the cud upon it to the end of the chapter

Chapter 5

The generous behaviour of Sophia towards her aunt

Sophia kept silence during the foregoing speech of her father nor did she once answer otherwise than with a sigh but as he under ter telling her in the usual way he expected she was ready to take the part of everybody to me? answer me that What I suppose you despise your father too and don t think him good enough to speak to?"

For Heaven s sake sir answered Sophia do not give so cruel a turn to my silence I am sure I would sooner die than be guilty of any disrespect towards you but how can I venture ligations to my aunt She hath been a second mother to me

And a second wife to me too' returned Western so you will take her part too! You won t confess that she hath acted the part of the vilest sister in the world?

Upon my word sir cries Sophia I must belie my heart wickedly if I did I know my aunt and you differ very much in your ways of thinking but I have heard her a thousand times express the greatest affection for you and I am convinced so far from her being the worst sister in the world there are very few who love a brother better

The English of all which is answered the squire that I am in the wrong Ay certainly Ay to be sure the woman is in the right and the man in the wrong always

Pardon me sir cries Sophia I do not say so

What don t you say? answered the father you have the impudence to say she s in the right doth it not follow then of course that I am in the wrong? And perhaps I am in the wrong to suffer such a Presbyterian Hanoverian b— to come into my house She may dite me of a plot for anything I know and give my estate to the government

So far sir from injuring you or your estate says Sophia if my aunt had died yesterday I am convinced she would have left you her whole fortune

Whether Sophia intended it or not I shall not presume to assert but certain it is these last words penetrated very deep into the ears of her father and produced a much more sensible effect than all she had said before He received the sound with much the same action as a man receives a bullet in his head He started staggered and turned pale After which he remained silent above a minute and then began in the following hesitating manner Yesterday! she would have left me her esteate yesterday! would she? Why yesterday of all the days in the year? I suppose if she dies to-morrow she will leave it to somebody else and perhaps out of the vamily — My aunt sir cries Sophia hath very violent passions and I can t answer what she may do under their influence

You can t! returned the father and pray who hath been the occasion of putting her into those violent passions? Nay who hath actually put her into them? Was not you and she hard at it before I came into the room? Besides was not all our quarrel about you? I have not quarrelled with sister this many years but upon your account and now you would throw the whole blame upon me as thof I should be the occasion of her leaving the esteate out o the vamily I could have expected no better indeed this is like the return you make to all the rest of my fondness

I beseech you then cries Sophia upon my knees I beseech you if I have been the unhappy occasion of this difference that you will endeavour to make it up with my aunt and not suffer her to leave your house in this violent rage of anger she is a very good natured woman and a few civil words will satisfy her Let me entreat you sir

So I must go and ask pardon for your fault must I? answered Western 'You have lost the hare and I must draw every way to find her again? Indeed if I was certain —Here he equipage could be gotten ready

[illegible]

Sophia then returned to her chamber of mourning where she indulged herself (if the phrase may be allowed me) in all the luxury of tender grief She read over more than once the letter which she had received from Jones her muff too was used on this occasion and she bathed both these as well as herself with her tears In this situation the friendly Mrs Honour exerted her utmost abilities to comfort her afflicted mistress She ran over the names of many young gentlemen and having greatly commended their parts and persons assured Sophia that she might take her choice of any These methods must have certainly been used with some success in disorders of the like kind or so skilful a practitioner as Mrs Honour would never have ventured to apply them nay I have heard that the college of chambermaids hold them to be as sovereign remedies as any in the female dispensary but whether it was that Sophia s disease differed inwardly from those cases with which it agreed in external symptoms I will not assert but in fact the good waiting woman did more harm than good and at last so incensed her mistress (which was no easy matter) that with an angry voice she dismissed her from her presence

Chapter 6

Containing great variety of matter

The squire overtook his sister just as she was stepping into the coach and partly by force and partly by solicitations prevailed upon her to order her horses back into their quarters He succeeded in this attempt without much difficulty for the lady was as we have already hinted of a most placable disposition and greatly loved her brother though she despised his parts or rather his little knowledge of the world

Poor Sophia who had first set on foot this reconciliation was now made the sacrifice to it They both concurred in their censures on her conduct jointly declared war against her and directly proceeded to counsel how to carry it on in the most vigorous manner For this purpose, Mrs Western proposed not only an immediate conclusion of the treaty with Allworthy but as immediately to carry it into execution saying That there was no other way to succeed with her niece but by violent methods which she was convinced Sophia had not sufficient resolution to resist By violent says she I mean rather hasty measures for as to confinement or absolute force no such things must or can be attempted Our plan must be concerted for a surprize and not for a storm

These matters were resolved on when Mr Blifil came to pay a visit to his mistress The squire no sooner heard of his arrival than he stept aside by his sister s advice to give his daughter orders for the proper reception of her lover which he did with the most bitter execrations and denunciations of judgment on her refusal

The impetuosity of the squire bore down all before him and Sophia as her aunt very wisely foresaw, was not able to resist him She agreed therefore to see Blifil though she had scarce spirits or strength sufficient to utter her assent Indeed to give a peremptory denial to a father whom she so tenderly loved was no easy task Had this circumstance been out of the case much less resolution than what she was really mistress of would perhaps have served her but it is no unusual thing to ascribe those actions entirely to fear which are in a great measure produced by love

In pursuance therefore of her father s peremptory command Sophia now admitted Mr Blifil s visit Scenes like this when painted at large afford as we have observed very little entertainment to the reader Here therefore we shall strictly adhere to a rule of Horace by which writers are directed to pass over all those matters which they despair of placing in a shining light —a rule we conceive of excellent use as well to the historian as to the poet and which if followed must at least have this good effect that many a great evil (for so all great books are called) would thus be reduced to a small one

It is possible the great art used by Blifil at this interview would have prevailed on Sophia to have made another man in his circumstances her confident and to have revealed the whole secret of her heart to him but she had contracted so ill an opinion of this young gentleman that she was resolved to place no confidence in him for simplicity when set on its guard is often a match for cunning Her behaviour to him therefore, was entirely forced and indeed such as is generally prescribed to virgins upon the second formal visit from one who is appointed for their husband

But though Blifil declared himself to the squire perfectly satisfied with his reception yet that gentleman who in company with his sister had overheard all was not so well pleased He resolved in pursuance of the advice of the sage lady to push matters as forward as possible and addressing himself to his intended son in law in the hunting phrase he cried after a loud holla Follow her boy fol

the wedding to morrow

Blifil having conveyed the utmost satisfac faster than a strict compliance with all the rules of decency and decorum will permit But if by your interest sir she might be induced to dispense with any formalities——

Formalities! with a pox! answered the squire Pooh all stuff and nonsense! I tell thee she shall ha thee to-morrow you will know the world better hereafter when you come to my age Women never gi *their con*sent man if they can help it tis not the fashion If I had stayed for her mother s consent, I might have been a batchelor to this day ——To her to her co to her that s it you jolly dog I tell thee shat ha her to morrow morning

Blifil suffered himself to be overpowered by the forcible rhetoric of the squire and it be ing agreed that Western should close with All worthy that very afternoon the lover departed home having first earnestly begged that no violence might be offered to the lady by this haste in the same manner as a popish inquisi tor begs the lay power to do no violence to the heretic delivered over to it and against whom the church hath passed sentence

And to say the truth Blifil had passed sen tence against Sophia for however pleased he had declared himself to Western with his re ception he was by no means satisfied unless it was that he was convinced of the hatred and scorn of his mistress and this had produced no less reciprocal hatred and scorn in him It may perhaps be asked Why then did he not put an immediate end to all further court ship? I answer for that very reason as well as for several others equally good which we shall now proceed to open to the reader

Though Mr Blifil was not of the complexion of Jones nor ready to eat every woman he saw yet he was far from being destitute of that appetite which is said to be the common property of all animals With this he had like wise that distinguishing taste which serves to direct men in their choice of the object or food of their several appetites and this taught him to consider Sophia as a most delicious morsel indeed to regard her with the same desires which an ortolan inspires into the soul of an epicure Now the agonies which affected the mind of Sophia rather augmented than im paired her beauty for her tears added bright ness to her eyes and her breasts rose higher with her sighs Indeed no one hath seen beauty viewed her last nor was his desire at all les sened by the aversion which he discovered in her to himself On the contrary this served rather to heighten the pleasure he proposed in rifling her charms as it added triumph to lust nay he had some further views from obtain ing the absolute possession of her person which we detest too much even to mention and revenge itself was not without its share in the gratifications which he promised himself The rivalling poor Jones and supplanting him in her affections added another spur to his pursuit and promised another additional rapture to his enjoyment

Besides all these views which to some scru pulous persons may seem to savour too much of malevolence he had one prospect which few readers will regard with any great abhor rence And this was the estate of Mr Western which was all to be settled on his daughter and her issue for so extravagant was the affection of that fond parent that provided his child would but consent to be miserable with the husband he chose he cared not at what price he purchased him

For these reasons Mr Blifil was so desirous of the match that he intended to deceive Sophia by pretending love to her and to de ceive her father and his own uncle by pre tending he was beloved by her In doing this he availed himself of the piety of Thwackum who held that if the end proposed was reli gious (as surely matrimony is) it mattered not how wicked were the means As to other oc casions he used to apply the philosophy of Square which taught that the end was immaterial so that the means were fair and consistent with moral rectitude To say truth there were few occurrences in life on which he could not draw advantage from the precepts of one or other of those great masters

Little deceit was indeed necessary to be practised on Mr Western who thought the inclinations of his daughter of as little con sequence as Blifil himself conceived them to be but as the sentiments of Mr Allworthy were of a very different kind so it was abso lutely necessary to impose on him In this however Blifil was so well assisted by Western that he succeeded without difficulty for as Mr Allworthy had been assured by her father that Sophia had a proper affection for Blifil and that all which he had suspected concerning Jones was entirely false Blifil had nothing more to do than to confirm these assertions which he did with such equivocations that he preserved a salvo for his conscience and had count be accessary to forcing a young lady into a marriage contrary to her own will he an swered That the real sentiments of young ladies were very difficult to be understood that her behaviour to him was full as forward as he wished it and that if he could believe her father she had all the affection for him which any lover could desire As for Jones said he whom I am loth to call villain though his behaviour to you sir sufficiently justifies the appellation his own vanity or perhaps some wicked views might make him boast of a false hood for if there had been any reality in Miss Western s love to him the greatness of her fortune would never have suffered him to desert her as you are well informed he hath Lastly sir I promise you I would not myself for any consideration no not for the whole world consent to marry this young lady if I was not persuaded she had all the passion for me which I desire she should have

This excellent method of conveying a false hood with the heart only without making the tongue guilty of an untruth by the means of equivocation and imposture hath quieted the conscience of many a notable deceiver and yet when we consider that it is Omniscience on which these endeavour to impose it may possibly seem capable of affording only a very superficial comfort and that this artful and refined distinction between communicating a lie and telling one is hardly worth the pains it costs them

Allworthy was pretty well satisfied with what Mr Western and Mr Blifil told him and the treaty was now at the end of two days concluded Nothing then remained previous to the office of the priest but the office of the lawyers which threatened to take up so much time that Western offered to bind himself by all manner of covenants rather than defer the happiness of the young couple Indeed he was so very earnest and pressing that an in different person might have concluded he was more a principal in this match than he really was but this eagerness was natural to him on all occasions and he conducted every scheme he undertook in such a manner as if the suc cess of that alone was sufficient to constitute herself prevented it and taken measures to put a final end to the whole treaty and to rob both church and law of those taxes which these wise bodies have thought proper to re ceive from the propagation of the human species in a lawful manner Of which in the next chapter

Chapter 7

A strange resolution of Sophia and a more strange stratagem of Mrs Honour

—

truth it was very difficult for any one to know that young lady without loving her She no sooner therefore heard a piece of news which she imagined to be of great importance to her mistress than quite forgetting the anger which she had conceived two days before at her un pleasant dismission from Sophia s presence she ran hastily to inform her of the news

The beginning of her discourse was as ab rupt as her entrance into the room O dear ma am! says she what doth your la ship think? To be sure I am frightened out of my wits and yet I thought it my duty to tell your la ship though perhaps it may make you to be sure we must be scolded and to be sure I should not wonder if your la ship should be out of humour nay it must surprize you cer tainly ay and shock you too — Good Hon our let me know it without any longer pref ace says Sophia there are few things I promise you which will surprize and fewer which will shock me — Dear ma am an swered Honour to be sure I overheard my

to morrow

my master say so — Honour says Sophia you have both surprized and shocked me to such a degree that I have scarce any breath or spirits left. What is to be done in my dread ful situation? — I wish I was able to advise your la ship says she Do advise me cries Sophia pray dear Honour advise me Think what you would attempt if it was your own case — Indeed ma am cries Honour I wish your la ship and I could change situa tions that is I mean without hurting your la ship for to be sure I don t wish you so bad as to be a servant but because that if so be it was my case I should find no manner of diffi culty in it for in my poor opinion young

Squire Blifil is a charming, sweet, handsome man "—"Don't mention such stuff," cries Sophia 'Such stuff!" repeated Honour, "why, there Well, to be sure, what's one man's meat is another man's poison, and the same is altogether as true of women "— Honour," says Sophia, 'rather than submit to be the wife of that contemptible wretch, I would plunge a dagger into my heart "—' O lud! ma'am! answered the other, "I am sure you frighten me out of my wits now Let me beseech your la'ship not to suffer such wicked thoughts to come into your head O lud! to be sure I tremble every inch of me Dear ma'am, consider, that to be denied Christian burial, and to have your corpse buried in the highway, and a stake drove through you, as farmer Halfpenny was served at Ox Cross, and, to be sure, his ghost hath walked there ever since, for several people have seen him To be sure it can be nothing but the devil which can put such wicked thoughts into the head of anybody, for certainly it is less wicked to hurt all the world than one's own dear self, and so I have heard said by more parsons than one If your la'ship hath such a violent aversion and hates the young gentleman so very bad, that you can t bear to think of going into bed to him, for to be sure there may be such antipathies in nature, and one had leverer touch a toad than the flesh of some people "—

Sophia had been too much wrapt in contemplation to pay any great attention to the foregoing excellent discourse of her maid, interrupting her therefore, without making any answer to it she said, "Honour, I am come to a resolution I am determined to leave my father's house this very night, and if you have the friendship for me which you have often professed you will keep me company "—' That I will ma am to the world s end, answered Honour 'but I beg your la'ship to consider the consequence before you undertake any rash action Where can your la ship possibly go? '—' There is replied Sophia, " a lady of quality in London, a relation of mine, who spent several months with my aunt in the country, during all which time she treated me with great kindness and expressed so much pleasure in my company, that she earnestly desired my aunt to suffer me to go with her to London As she is a woman of very great note, I shall easily find her out, and I make no doubt of being very well and kindly received by her "—"I would not have your la'ship too confident of that," cries Honour, "for the first lady I lived with used to invite people very earnestly to her house, but if she heard after [illegible]

when she hears your la'ship is run away from my master—' "You are mistaken, Honour" says Sophia "she looks upon the authority of a father in a much lower light than I do, for [illegible] finding me out of his power, can be brought to some reason "

"Well, but, ma'am," answered Honour, "how doth your la'ship think of making your escape? Where will you get any horses or conveyance? For as for your own horse, as all the servants know a little how matters stand between my master and your la'ship, Robin will be hanged before he will suffer it to go out of the stable without my master's express orders ' I intend to escape," said Sophia, "by walking out of the doors when they are open I thank Heaven my legs are very able to carry me They have supported me many a long evening after a fiddle, with no very agreeable partner, and surely they will assist me in running from so detestable a partner for life "—' Oh Heaven, ma'am! doth your la'ship know what you are saying? ' cries Honour, "would you think of walking about the country by night and alone?"—"Not alone," answered the lady, ' you have promised to bear me company "—' Yes, to be sure," cries Honour, "I will follow your la'ship through the world, but your la'ship had almost as good be alone for I should not be able to defend you, if any robbers or other villains, should meet with you, Nay, I should be in as horrible a fright as your la'ship, for to be certain, they would ravish us both Besides, ma am consider how cold the nights are now, we shall be frozen to death "—"A good brisk pace, 'answered Sophia,' will preserve us from the cold, and if you cannot defend me from a villain, Honour, I will defend you, for I will take a pistol with me There are two always charged in the hall' —"Dear ma'am, you frighten me more and more " cries Honour ' sure your la ship would not venture to fire it off! I had rather run any chance than your la'- sh p should do that — Why so? says Sophia smiling "would not you Honour fire a pistol at any one v ho should attack your virtue? — To be sure ma am cries Honour one s virtue is a dear thing especially to us poor servants for it is our livelihood as a body may say yet I mortally hate fire arms for so many accidents happen by them — Well well says Sophia "I believe I may ensure your virtue at a very cheap rate without carrying any arms with us for I intend to take horses at the very first town we come to and we shall hardly be attacked in our way thither Look ee Honour I am re solved to go and if you will attend me I promise you I will reward you to the very ut saw her mistress so determined she desisted from any further dissuasions They then en tered into a debate on ways and means of exe cut ng their project Here a very stubborn diff culty occurred and this was the removal of their effects which was much more easily got over by the mistress than by the maid for when a lady hath once taken a resolution to run to a lover or to run from him all obstacles are considered as trifles But Honour was in spired by no such motive she had no raptures to expect nor any terrors to shun and besides the real value of her clothes in which con s sted a great part of her fortune she had a capricious fondness for several gowns and other things either because they became her or because they were given her by such a particu lar person because she had bought them lately or because she had had them long or for

martyr lom

Sophia ted n" to me we servants very well know how to obtain this favour of our masters and mistresses though sometimes indeed v here they owe us more wages than they can readily pay they will put up with all our affronts and will hardly take any warning we can give them but the squire is none of those and since your la ship is resolved upon setting out to-night I warrant I get discharged this afternoon It was then resolved that she should pack up some linen and a night-gown for Sophia with her own things and as for all her other clothes the young lady abandoned them with no more remorse than the sailor feels when he throws over the goods of others in order to save his own life

Chapter 8

Containing scenes of altercation of no very uncommon kind

Mrs Honour had scarce sooner parted from her young lady than something (for I would not like the old woman in Quevedo in jure the devil by any false accusation and pos sibly he might have no hand in it)—but some thing I say suggested itself to her that by sacrificing Sophia and all her secrets to Mr Western she might probably make her for tune Many considerations urged this discov ery The fair prospect of a handsome reward for so great and acceptable a service to the squire tempted her avarice and again the she had undertaken old So hat to the squire and to lay open the whole affair She was however too upright a judge to de cree on one side before she had heard the other And here first a journey to London ap peared very strongly in support of Sophia She eagerly longed to see a place in which she fancied charms short only of those which a raptured saint imagines in heaven In the next place as she knew Sophia to have much more generosity than her master so her fidelity promised her a greater reward than she could gain by treachery She then cross-examined all ts on the the mat em And now both scales being reduced to a pretty even balance her love to her mistress being thrown into the scale of her integrity made that rather preponderate when a circumstance struck upon her imagination which might have fore Sophia would be able to fulfil her promises, for though she was intitled to her mother's fortune at the death of her father, and to the sum of £3000 left her by an uncle when she came of age, yet these were distant days and many accidents might prevent the intended generosity of the young lady, whereas the rewards she might expect from Mr Western in her way, which at once preserved her fidelity, and even facilitated the intended business

Mrs Western s maid claimed great superiority over Mrs Honour on several accounts First, her birth was higher, for her great grand mother by the mother s side was a cousin not far removed to an Irish peer Secondly her wages were greater And lastly, she had been at London and had of consequence seen more of the world She had always behaved therefore, to Mrs Honour with that reserve, and had always exacted of her those marks of distinction, which every order of females preserves and requires in conversation with those of an inferior order Now as Honour did not at all times agree with this doctrine but would frequently break in upon the respect which the other demanded Mrs Western s maid was not at all pleased with her company, indeed, she earnestly longed to return home to the house of her mistress where she domineered at will over all the other servants She had been greatly therefore disappointed in the morning when Mrs Western had changed her mind on the very point of departure, and had been in what is vulgarly called a glouting humour ever since

In this humour, which was none of the sweetest she came into the room where Honour was debating with herself in the manner we have above related Honour no sooner saw her, than she addressed her in the following obliging phrase Soh, madam, I find we are to have the pleasure of your company longer, which I was afraid the quarrel between my master and your lady would have robbed us of —' I don t know madam answered the other, ' what you mean by we and us I assure you I do not look on any of the servants in this house to be proper company for me I am company, I hope, for their betters every day in the week I do not speak on your account Mrs Honour, for you are a civilized young woman, and when you have seen a little more of the world I should not be ashamed to walk with you in St James's Park "—' Hoity toity!" cries Honour, "madam is in her airs, I protest Mrs Honour, forsooth! sure, madam, you might call me by my sir name, for though my lady calls me Honour, I have a sir name as well as other folks Ashamed to walk with me, quotha! marry, as good as yourself, I hope "—' Since you make such a return to my civility," said the other, "I must acquaint you, Mrs Honour, that you are not so good as me In the country, indeed, one is obliged to take up with all kind of trumpery, but in town I visit none but the women of women of quality Indeed, Mrs Honour, there is some difference, I hope, between you and me "—"I hope so too' answered Honour ' there is some difference in our ages and—I think in our persons " Upon speaking which last words, she strutted by Mrs Western's maid with the most provoking air of contempt, turning up her nose, tossing her head and violently brushing the hoop of her competitor with her own The other lady put on one of her most malicious sneers, and said, "Creature! you are below my anger; and it is beneath me to give ill words to such an audacious saucy trollop, but, hussy, I must tell you, your breeding shows the meanness of your birth as well as of your education and both very properly qualify you to be the mean serving woman of a country girl "—' Don't abuse my lady," cries Honour. ' I won't take that of you, she's as much better than yours as she is younger, and ten thousand times more handsomer "

Here ill luck, or rather good luck, sent Mrs Western to see her maid in tears, which began to flow plentifully at her approach, and of which being asked the reason by her mistress she presently acquainted her that her tears were occasioned by the rude treatment of that creature there—meaning Honour 'And madam continued she,' I could have despised all she said to me, but she hath had the audacity to affront your ladyship, and to call you ugly—Yes madam she called you ugly old cat to my face I could not bear to hear your ladyship called ugly "—"Why do you repeat her impudence so often?' said Mrs Western And then turning to Mrs Honour, she asked her "How she had the assurance to mention her name with disrespect?"—' Disrespect, madam!" answered Honour. "I never mentioned your name at all I said somebody was not as handsome as my mistress, and to be sure you know that as well as I "—"Hussy," replied the lady,

"I will make such a saucy trollop as yourself know that I am not a proper subject of your discourse And if my brother doth not dis

Heaven good servants need not want places and if you turn away all who do not think you handsome you will want servants very soon let me tell you that

Mrs Western spoke or rather thundered in answer but as she was hardly articulate we cannot be very certain of the identical words We shall therefore omit inserting a speech which at best would not greatly redound to her honour She then departed in search of her brother with a countenance so full of rage that she resembled one of the furies rather than a human creature

The two chambermaids being again left alone began a second bout at altercation which soon produced a combat of a more ac ive kind In this the victory belonged to the lady of inferior rank but not without some loss of blood of hair and of lawn and muslin

Chapter 9

The wise demeanour of Mr Western in the [p]aternal madness and filial affection

LOGICIANS sometimes prove too much by an argument and politicians often overreach themselves in a scheme Thus had it like to have happened to Mrs Honour who instead of recovering the rest of her clothes had like to have stopped even those she had on her back from escaping for the squire no sooner heard of her having abused his sister than he swore twenty oaths he would send her to Bride well

Mrs. Western was a very good natured woman and ordinarily of a forgiving temper She had lately remitted the trespass of a stage coachman who had overturned her post-chaise into a ditch nay she had even broken the law in refusing to prosecute a highwayman who had robbed her not only of a sum of money but of her ear rings at the same time d—ning her and saying Such handsome b—s as you don t want jewels to set them off and be d—n d to you But now so uncertain are our tem pers and so much do we at different times dif

her own servant prevail with her to desist from earnestly desiring her brother to execute jus ticeship (for it was indeed a syllable more than justice) on the wench

But luckily the clerk had a qualification which no clerk to a justice of peace ought ever his authority by committing the girl to Bride well as there had been no attempt to break the peace for I am afraid sir says he you in cases relating to the game the justice was not always attentive to these admonitions of his clerk for indeed in executing the laws under that head many justices of peace sup pose they have a large discretionary power by virtue of which under the notion of searching for and taking away engines for the destruc tion of the game they often commit trespasses and sometimes felony at their pleasure

But this offence was not of quite so high a nature nor so dangerous to the society Here therefore the justice behaved with some at tention to the advice of his clerk for in fact he had already had two informations exhibited against him in the King s Bench and had no curiosity to try a third

The squire therefore putting on a most wise and significant countenance after a pre face of several hums and hahs told his sister that upon more mature deliberation he was of opinion that as there was no breaking up of the peace such as the law says he calls breaking open a door or breaking a hedge or breaking a head or any such sort of breaking the matter did not amount to a felonious kind of a thing nor trespasses nor damages and therefore there was no punishment in the law for it

Mrs Western said she knew the law much servant to Bridewell at any time when a master or mistress desired it

Like enough cries the squire it may be so in London but the law is different in country Here followed a very learned dispute between the brother and sister concern both parties to the clerk, who decided it in favour of the magistrate and Mrs Western was in the end obliged to content herself with the satisfaction of having Honour turned a way to which Sophia herself very readily and cheerfully consented

tage of our heroine who indeed succeeded admirably well in her deceit considering it was the first she had ever practised And to say the truth I have often concluded that the honest part of mankind would be much too hard for the knavish if they could bring themselves to incur the guilt or thought it worth their while to take the trouble

Honour acted her part to the utmost perfection She no sooner saw herself secure from all danger of Bridewell a word which had raised most horrible ideas in her mind than she resumed those airs which her terrors before had a little abated and laid down her place with as much affectation of content and indeed of contempt as was ever practised at the resignation of places of much greater importance If the reader pleases therefore we chuse rather to say she resigned—which hath indeed been always held a synonymous expression with being turned out or turned away

Mr Western ordered her to be very expeditious in packing for his sister declared she would not sleep another night under the same roof with so impudent a slut To work therefore she went and that so earnestly that every thing was ready early in the evening when having received her wages away packed bag and baggage to the great satisfaction of every one but of none more than of Sophia who having appointed her maid to meet her at a certain place not far from the house exactly at the dreadful and ghostly hour of twelve began to prepare for her own departure

But first she was obliged to give two painful audiences the one to her aunt and the other to her father In these Mrs Western herself began to talk to her in a more peremptory stile than before but her father treated her in so violent and outrageous a manner that he frightened her into an affected compliance with his will which so highly pleased the good squire, that he changed his frowns into smiles and his menaces into promises he vowed his whole soul was wrapt in hers that her consent (for so he construed the words You know sir I must not nor can refuse to obey any absolute command of yours ") had made him the happiest of mankind He then gave her a large bank bill to dispose of in any trinkets she pleased and kissed and embraced her in the fondest manner while tears of joy trickled from those eyes which a few moments before had darted fire and rage against the dear object of all his affection.

Instances of this behaviour in parents are so common that the reader I doubt not will be very little astonished at the whole conduct of

So indeed have many others who have rendered their children most completely miserable by the same conduct which though it is almost universal in parents hath always appeared to me to be the most unaccountable of all the absurdities which ever entered into the brain of that strange prodigious creature man

The latter part of Mr Western s behaviour had so strong an effect on the tender heart of Sophia that it suggested a thought to her which not all the sophistry of her politic aunt nor all the menaces of her father had ever once brought into her head She reverenced her father so piously and loved him so passionately that she had scarce ever felt more pleasing sensations than what arose from the share she frequently had of contributing to his amusement and sometimes perhaps, to higher gratifications for he never could contain the delight of hearing her commended which he had the satisfaction of hearing almost every day of her life The idea therefore of the immense happiness she should convey to her father by her consent to this match made a strong impression on her mind Again the extreme piety of such an act of obedience worked very forcibly as she had a very deep sense of religion Lastly when she reflected how much she herself was to suffer being indeed to become little less than a sacrifice or a martyr to filial love and duty she felt an agree-

great assistance in executing the purposes of both

Sophia was charmed with the contemplation of so heroic an action and began to compli ment herself with much premature flattery when Cupid who lay hid in her muff sud denly crept out and like Punchinello in a puppet show kicked all out before him In truth (for we scorn to deceive our reader or to vindicate the character of our heroine by as cribing her actions to supernatural impulse) the thoughts of her beloved Jones and some hopes (however distant) in which he was very particularly concerned immediately destroyed all which filial love piety and pride had with their joint endeavours been labouring to bring about

But before we proceed any farther with Sophia we must now look back to Mr Jones

Chapter 10

Containing several matters, natural enough perhaps but low

THE reader will be pleased to remember that we left Mr Jones in the beginning of this book on his road to Bristol being determined to seek his fortune at sea or rather indeed to fly away from his fortune on shore

It happened (a thing not very unusual) that the guide who undertook to conduct him on his way was unluckily unacquainted with the road so that having missed his right track and being ashamed to ask information he rambled about backwards and forwards till night came on and it began to grow dark Jones suspecting what had happened ac quainted the guide with his apprehensions but he insisted on it that they were in the right road and added it would be very strange if he should not know the road to Bristol though in reality it would have been much stranger if he had known it having never past through it in his life before

Jones had not such implicit faith in his guide but that on their arrival at a village he inquired of the first fellow he saw whether they were in the road to Bristol Whence did you come? cries the fellow No matter says Jones a little hastily I want to know if this be the road to Bristol? — The road to Bris tol cries the fellow scratching his head "why measter I believe you will hardly get to Bristol this way to-night — Prithee friend then answered Jones do tell us which is the way — Why measter cries the fellow "you must be come out of your road the Lord knows whither for thick way goeth to Glocester — Well and which way goes to Bristol? said Jones Why you be going away from Bristol answered the fellow Then said Jones we must go back again? — Ay you must said the fellow Well and when we come back to the top of the hill which way must we take? — Why you must keep the strait road — But I remember there are two roads one to the right and the other to the left —

Why you must keep the right hand road and then gu strait vorwards only remem ber to turn vurst to your right and then to your left again and then to your right and that brings you to the squire s and then you must keep strait vorwards and turn to the left

Another fellow now came up and asked which way the gentlemen were going of which being informed by Jones he first scratched his head and then leaning upon a pole he had in his hand began to tell him That he must keep the right hand road for about a mile or a mile and a half or such a matter and then he must turn short to the left which would bring him round by Measter Jin Bearnes s —

But which is Mr John Bearnes s? says Jones O Lord! cries the fellow why don t you know Measter Jin Bearnes? Whence then did you come?

These two fellows had almost conquered the patience of Jones when a plain well look ing man (who was indeed a Quaker) accosted him thus Friend I perceive thou hast lost creditable good house just by where thou may st find good entertainment for thyself and thy cattle till morning Jones after a little persuas on agreed to stay in this place till the morning and was conducted by his friend to the public house

The landlord who was a very civil fellow told Jones He hoped he would excuse the badness of his accommodation for that his wife was gone from home and had locked up almost everything and carried the keys along with her Indeed the fact was that a favourite daughter of hers was just married and gone that morning home with her husband and that she and her mother together had almost stript the poor man of all his goods as well as money for though he had several children his daughter only who was the mother s fa vourite was the object of her consideration and to the humour of this one child she would

with pleasure have sacrificed all the rest and her husband into the bargain

Though Jones was very unfit for any kind of company and would have preferred being alone yet he could not resist the importunities of the honest Quaker who was the more de sirous of sitting with him from having re marked the melancholy which appeared both in his countenance and behaviour and which the poor Quaker thought his conversation might in some measure relieve

After they had past some time together in [illegible]

[illegible]

said Friend I perceive some sad disaster hath befallen thee but pray be of comfort Perhaps thou hast lost a friend If so thou must consider we are all mortal And why

[illegible]

well as thee and most probably greater sor rows Though I have a clear estate of £100 a year which is as much as I want and I have a conscience I thank the Lord void of offence my constitution is sound and strong and there is no man can demand a debt of me nor ac cuse me of an injury yet friend I should be concerned to think thee as miserable as my self

Here the Quaker ended with a deep sigh and Jones presently answered I am very sorry sir for your unhappiness whatever is the occasion of it — Ah! friend replied the Quaker one only daughter is the occasion one who was my greatest delight upon earth and who within this week is run away from me and is married against my consent I had provided her a proper match a sober man and one of substance but she forsooth would chuse for herself and away she is gone with a young fellow not worth a groat If she had been dead as I suppose thy friend is I should have been happy — That is very strange sir said Jones Why would it not be better for her to be dead than to be a beggar? replied the Quaker for as I told you the fellow is [illegible]

[illegible]

if she can let her carry her love to market and see whether any one will change it into silver or even into halfpence — You know your own concerns best sir said Jones It must have been continued the Quaker a long premeditated scheme to cheat me for they have known one another from their infancy and I always preached to her against love and told her a thousand times over it was all folly and wickedness Nay the cunning slut pretended to hearken to me and to despise all wantonness of the flesh and yet at last broke out at a window two pair of stairs for I began indeed a little to suspect her and had locked her up carefully intending the very next morning to have married her up to my liking But she disappointed me within a few hours and escaped away to the lover of her own chusing who lost no time for they were married and bedded and all within an hour But it shall be the worst hour s work for them both that ever they did for they may [illegible]

[illegible]

come friend said the Quaker don t give way to concern You see there are other people miserable besides yourself — I see there are madmen and fools and villains in the world cries Jones But let me give you a piece of advice send for your daughter and son in law home and don t be yourself the only cause of misery to one you pretend to love — Send for her and her husband home! cries the Quaker loudly I would sooner send for the two greatest enemies I have in the world! — Well go home yourself or where you please said Jones for I will sit no longer in such com pany — Nay friend answered the Quaker I scorn to impose my company on any one He then offered to pull money from his pocket but Jones pushed him with some violence out of the room

The subject of the Quaker s discourse had so deeply affected Jones that he stared very wildly all the time he was speaking This the Quaker had observed and this added to the rest of his behaviour inspired honest Broad brim with a conceit that his companion was in reality out of his senses Instead of resenting the affront therefore the Quaker was moved with compassion for his unhappy circum stances and having communicated his opinion to the landlord he desired him to take great care of his guest and to treat him with the highest civility

Indeed says the landlord "I shall use no such civility towards him for it seems for all his laced waistcoat there he is no more a gentleman than myself but a poor parish bastard bred up at a great squire s about thirty miles off and now turned out of doors (not for any good to be sure) I shall get him out of my house as soon as possible If I do lose my reckoning, the first loss is always the best. It is not above a year ago that I lost a silver spoon

What dost thou t lk of a parish bastard Robin? answered the Quaker Thou must certainly be mistaken in thy man

Not at all replied Robin the guide who knows him very well told it me For indeed the guide had no sooner taken his place at the kitchen fire than he acquainted the whole com pany with all he knew or had ever heard con cerning Jones

The Quaker was no sooner assured by this fellow of the birth and low fortune of Jones than all compassion for him vanished and the honest plain man went home fired with no less indignation than a duke would have felt at receiving an affront from such a person

The landlord himself conceived an equal disdain for his guest so that when Jones rung the bell in order to retire to bed he was ac quainted that he could have no bed there Bes des disdain of the mean condition of his guest Robin entertained violent suspicion of his intentions which were he supposed to watch some favourable opportunity of robbing the house In reality he might have been very well eased of these apprehensions by the prudent precautions of his wife and daughter who had already removed everything which was not fixed to the freehold but he was by nature suspicious and had been more particu larly so since the loss of his spoon In short the dread of being robbed totally absorbed the comfortable consideration that he had nothing to lose

Jones being assured that he could have no bed very contentedly betook himself to a great chair made with rushes when sleep which had lately shunned his company in much better apartments generously paid him a visit in his humble cell.

As for the landlord he was prevented by his fears from retiring to rest He returned therefore to the kitchen fire whence he could survey the only door which opened into the par have made his escape through it

Chapter 11

The adventure of a company of soldiers

THE landlord having taken his seat di rectly opposite to the door of the parlour de true cause of their watching did indeed at length put an end to it for this was no other than the strength and goodness of the beer of which having tippled a very large quantity they grew at first very noisy and vociferous and afterwards fell both asleep

But it was not in the power of liquor to compose the fears of Robin He continued still waking in his chair with his eyes fixed sted fastly on the door which led into the apart ment of Mr Jones till a violent thundering at his outward gate called him from his seat and obliged him to open it which he had no sooner done than his kitchen was immedi ately full of gentlemen in red coats who all rushed upon him in as tumultuous a manner as if they intended to take his little castle by storm

The landlord was now forced from his post to furnish his numerous guests with beer which they called for with great eagerness and upon his second or third return from the cel lar he saw Mr Jones standing before the fire in the midst of the soldiers for it may easily be believed that the arrival of so much good company should put an end to any sleep unless that from which we are to be awakened only by the last trumpet

The company having now pretty well satis fied their thirst nothing remained but to pay the reckoning a circumstance often produc tive of much mischief and discontent among the inferior rank of gentry who are apt to find great difficulty in assessing the sum with exact regard to distributive justice which directs that every man shall pay according to the quantity which he drinks This difficulty oc curred upon the present occasion and it was the greater as some gentlemen had in their word may be said to have been deposed upon oath for the oaths were at least equal to all the other words spoken In this controversy the whole company spoke together and every man seemed wholly bent to extenuate the sum which fell to his share so that the most probable conclusion which could be foreseen was that a large portion of the reckoning would fall to the landlord s share to pay or (what is much the same thing) would remain unpaid

All this while Mr Jones was engaged in con versation with the serjeant for that officer was entirely unconcerned in the present dispute, being privileged by immemorial custom from all contribution

The dispute now grew so very warm that it seemed to draw towards a military decision when Jones stepping forward silenced all their clamours at once by declaring that he would pay the whole reckoning which indeed amounted to no more than three shillings and fourpence

This declaration procured Jones the thanks and applause of the whole company The terms honourable noble and worthy gentleman resounded through the room nay my landlord himself began to have a better opin ion of him and almost to disbelieve the account which the guide had given

The serjeant had informed Mr Jones that they were marching against the rebels and ex pected to be commanded by the glorious Duke of Cumberland By which the reader may per ceive (a circumstance which we have not thought necessary to communicate before) that this was the very time when the late rebellion was at the highest and indeed the banditti were now marched into England intending as it was thought to fight the king s forces and to attempt pushing forward to the metropolis

Jones had some heroic ingredients in his composition and was a hearty well wisher to the glorious cause of liberty and of the Protestant religion It is no wonder therefore that in circumstances which would have warranted a much more romantic and wild undertaking it should occur to him to serve as a volunteer in this expedition

Our commanding officer had said all in his power to encourage and promote this good dis position from the first moment he had been acquainted with it He now proclaimed the noble resolution aloud which was received with great pleasure by the whole company who all cried out God bless King George and your honour' and then added with many oaths We will stand by you both to the last drops of our blood

The gentleman who had been all night tippling at the ale-house was prevailed on by some arguments which a corporal had put into his hands to undertake the same expedition. And now the portmanteau belonging to Mr Jones being put up in the baggage-cart the forces were about to move forwards when the guide stepping up to Jones said Sir I hope you will consider that the horses have been kept out all night and we have travelled a great ways out of our way Jones was sur prized at the impudence of this demand and acquainted the soldiers with the merits of his cause who were all unanimous in condemn ing the guide for his endeavours to put upon a gentleman Some said he ought to be tied neck and heels others that he deserved to run the gantlope and the serjeant shook his cane at him and wished he had him under his command swearing heartily he would make an example of him

Jones contented himself however with a negative punishment and walked off with his new comrades leaving the guide to the poor revenge of cursing and reviling him in which latter the landlord joined saying Ay ay he is a pure one I warrant you A pretty gentleman indeed to go for a soldier! He shall wear a laced waistcoat truly It is an old proverb and a true one all is not gold that glisters I am glad my house is well rid of him

All that day the serjeant and the young soldier marched together and the former who was an arch fellow told the latter many enter taining stories of his campaigns though in reality he had never made any for he was but lately come into the service and had by his own dexterity so well ingratiated himself with his officers that he had promoted himself to a halberd chiefly indeed by his merit in recruit ing in which he was most excellently well skilled

Much mirth and festivity passed among the soldiers during their march In which the many occurrences that had passed at the r last quarters were remembered and every one with great freedom made what jokes he pleased on his officers some of which were of the coarser kind and very near border ing on scandal This brought to our heroe s mind the custom which he had read of among the Greeks and Romans of indulging on cer tain festivals and solemn occasions the liberty to slaves of using an uncontrouled freedom of speech towards their masters

Our little army which consisted of two com panies of foot were now arrived at the place where they were to halt that evening The serjeant then acquainted his lieutenant, who was the commanding officer, that they had picked up two fellows in that day's march, one of which, he said, was as fine a man as ever he saw (meaning the tippler), for that he was near six feet, well proportioned, and strongly limbed, and the other (meaning Jones) would do well enough for the rear rank.

The new soldiers were now produced before the officer, who having examined the six feet man, he being first produced, came next to survey Jones at the first sight of whom, the lieutenant could not help showing some surprize, for besides that he was very well dressed, and was naturally genteel, he had a remarkable air of dignity in his look, which is rarely seen among the vulgar, and is indeed not inseparably annexed to the features of their superiors

"Sir," said the lieutenant, "my serjeant informed me that you are desirous of enlisting in the company I have at present under my command, if so, sir, we shall very gladly receive a gentleman who promises to do much honour to the company by bearing arms in it"

Jones answered "That he had not mentioned anything of enlisting himself, that he was most zealously attached to the glorious cause for which they were going to fight, and was very desirous of serving as a volunteer," concluding with some compliments to the lieutenant and and invited him to dine with himself and the rest of the officers

Chapter 12

The adventure of a company of officers

The lieutenant, whom we mentioned in the preceding chapter, and who commanded this party, was now near sixty years of age He had entered very young into the army, and had served in the capacity of an ensign at the battle of Tannieres, here he had received two wounds, and had so well distinguished himself, that he was by the Duke of Marlborough advanced to be a lieutenant, immediately after that battle.

In this commission he had continued ever since, viz, near forty years, during which time he had seen vast numbers preferred over his head, and had now the mortification to be commanded by boys, whose fathers were at nurse when he first entered into the service

Nor was this ill success in his profession solely owing to his having no friends among the men in power He had the misfortune to incur the displeasure of his colonel, who for or deficiency as an officer, nor indeed to any fault in himself, but solely to the indiscretion of his wife, who was a very beautiful woman, and who, though she was remarkably fond of her husband, would not purchase his preferment at the expense of certain favours which the colonel required of her

The poor lieutenant was more peculiarly was not conscious of giving any cause, and his wife fearing what her husband's nice regard to his honour might have occasioned, contented herself with preserving her virtue without enjoying the triumphs of her conquest

This unfortunate officer (for so I think he highly esteemed and beloved not only by the soldiers of his own company but by the whole regiment learn ours so that he really spoke no language at all and could barely make himself understood on the most ordinary occasions There were likewise two ensigns both very young fellows, one of whom had been bred under an attorney, and the other was son to the wife of a nobleman's butler

As soon as dinner was ended Jones informed the company of the merriment which had passed among the soldiers upon their march. "and yet," says he "notwithstanding all their vociferation, I dare swear they will behave more like Grecians than Trojans when they come to the enemy"— Grecians and Trojans!" says one of the ensigns who the devil are they? I have heard of all the troops in tenant 'I suppose you have heard of the Greeks and Trojans though perhaps you never read Pope s Homer who I remember now the gentleman mentions it compares the march of the Trojans to the cackling of geese and greatly commends the silence of the Grecians And upon my honour there is great justice in the cadet s observation

Begar me remember dem ver well sa d he F

cad an dat

D—n Homo with all my heart says Northerton I have the marks of him on my a— yet There s Thomas of our regiment always carries a Homo in his pocket d—n me if ever I come at it if I don t burn it And there s Corderius another d—n d son of a whore that hath got me many a flogging

Then you have been at school Mr Northerton " said the lieutenant

Ay d—n me have I answered he the devil take my father for sending me thither! The old put wanted to make a parson of me but d—n me thinks I to myself I ll nick you there old cull the devil a smack of your nonsense shall you ever get into me There s Jemmy Oliver of our regiment he narrowly escaped being a pimp too and that would have been a thousand pities for d—n me if he is not one of the prettiest fellows in the whole world but he went farther than I with the old cull for Jimmey can neither write nor read

You give your friend a very good character said the lieutenant and a very deserved one I dare say But prithee Northerton leave off that foolish as well as wicked custom of swearing for you are deceived I promise you if you think there is wit or politeness in it I wish too you would take my advice and desist from abusing the clergy Scandalous names and reflections cast on any body of men must be always unjustifiable but especially so when thrown on so sacred a function for to abuse the body is to abuse the function itself and I leave to you to judge how inconsistent such behaviour is in men who are going to fight in defence of the Protestant religion

Mr Adderly which was the name of the other ensign had sat hitherto kicking his heels and humming a tune without seeming to listen to the discourse he now answered O, Monsieur, on ne parle pas de la religion dans la guerre — Well said Jack cries Northerton if la religion was the only matter the parsons should fight their own battles for me"

I don t know gentlemen said Jones what may be your opinion but I think no man can engage in a nobler cause than that of his religion and I have observed in the little I have read of history that no soldiers have fought so bravely as those who have been

is no small motive to my becoming a volunteer in the cause

Northerton now winked on Adderly and whispered to him slily Smoke the prig Adderly smoke him Then turning to Jones said to him I am very glad sir you have chosen our regiment to be a volunteer in for if our parson should at any time take a cup too much I find you can supply his place I presume sir you have been at the university may I crave the favour to know what college?"

Sir answered Jones so far from having been at the university I have even had the advantage of yourself for I was never at school"

I presumed cries the ensign only upon the information of your great learning — Oh! sir answered Jones it is as possible for a man to know something without having been at school as it is to have been at school and to know nothing

Well said young volunteer ' cries the lieutenant Upon my word Northerton you had better let him alone for he will be too hard for you

Northerton did not very well relish the sarcasm of Jones but he thought the provocation was scarce sufficient to justify a blow or a rascal or scoundrel which were the only repartees that suggested themselves He was therefore silent at present but resolved to take the first opportunity of returning the jest by abuse

It now came to the turn of Mr Jones to give a toast as it is called who could not refrain from mentioning his dear Sophia This he did the more readily as he imagined it utterly impossible that any one present should guess the person he meant

But the lieutenant who was the toast master was not contented with Sophia only He said he

h

M

cl would not drink her health in the same round with his own toast unless somebody would vouch for her. "I knew one Sophy Western," says he, "that was lain with by half the young fellows at Bath, and perhaps this is the same woman" Jones very solemnly assured him of the contrary, asserting that the young lady he named was one of great fashion and fortune "Ay, ay," says the ensign, 'and so she is d—n me, it is the same woman, and I'll hold half a dozen of Burgundy, Tom French of our regiment brings her into company with us at any tavern in Bridges street." He then proceeded to describe her person exactly (for

The tenderness of lovers can ill brook the

haps he ought to have done To say the truth, having seen but little of this kind of wit, he did not readily understand it, and for a long time imagined Mr Northerton had really mistaken his charmer for some other But now, the other, 'd—n me if ever I was more in earnest in my life Tom French of our regiment had both her and her aunt at Bath" "Then I must tell you in earnest,' cried Jones, 'that you are one of the most impudent rascals upon earth"

He had no sooner spoken these words, than the ensign, together with a volley of curses, discharged a bottle full at the head of Jones, which hitting him a little above the right temple, brought him instantly to the ground battle, where no more honour was to be gotten, but the lieutenant interposed by stepping before the door, and thus cut off his retreat

Northerton was very importunate with the lieutenant for his liberty, urging the ill consequences of his stay, asking him, what he could have done less? "Zounds!' says he, "I was but in jest with the fellow I never heard any harm of Miss Western in my life' 'Have not you?' said the lieutenant 'then you richly deserve to be hanged as well for making such jests, as for using such a weapon you are my prisoner, sir, nor shall you stir from hence till a proper guard comes to secure you"

Such an ascendant had our lieutenant over this ensign, that all that fervency of courage which had levelled our poor heroe with the floor, would scarce have animated the said ensign to have drawn his sword against the lieutenant, had he then had one dangling at his side but all the swords being hung up in the room, were at the very beginning of the fray, secured by the French officer. So that Mr. Northerton was obliged to attend the final issue of this affair.

The French gentleman and Mr. Adderly, at the desire of their commanding officer, had raised up the body of Jones but as they could perceive but little (if any) sign of life in him, they again let him fall Adderly damning him for having blooded his waistcoat; and the Frenchman declaring "Begar, me no tush the and servants, and indeed every one else who happened at that time to be in the inn

To describe every particular and to relate the whole conversation of the ensuing scene, is not within my power, unless I had forty pens, and could, at once, write with them all together as the company now spoke The reader must therefore content himself with the most remarkable incidents, and perhaps he may very well excuse the rest

The first thing done was securing the body of Northerton who being delivered into the custody of six men with a corporal at their head was by them conducted from a place which he was very willing to leave, but it was unluckily to a place whither he was very unwilling to go To say the truth, so whimsical are the desires of ambition the very moment this youth had attained the above mentioned

his ears

It surprises us and so perhaps, it may, reader, that the lieutenant a worthy and man should have applied his chief care, rather to secure the offender, than to preserve the life of the wounded person We mention this observation, not with any view of pretending to account for so odd a behaviour, but lest some critic should hereafter plume himself on discovering it. We would have these gentlemen know we can see what is odd in characters as well as themselves but it is our business to relate facts as they are, which, when we have done, it is the part of the learned and sagacious reader to consult that original book of nature, whence every passage in our work is transcribed, though we quote not always the particular page for its authority

The company which now arrived were of a different disposition They suspended their curiosity concerning the person of the ensign, till they should see him hereafter in a more engaging attitude At present, their whole concern and attention were employed about the bloody object on the floor, which being placed upright in a chair, soon began to discover some symptoms of life and motion These were no sooner perceived by the company (for Jones was at first generally concluded to be dead) than they all fell at once to prescribing for him (for as none of the physical order was present, every one there took that office upon him)

Bleeding was the unanimous voice of the whole room, but unluckily there was no operator at hand, every one then cried 'Call the barber,' but none stirred a step Several cordials was likewise prescribed in the same ineffective manner, till the landlord ordered up a tankard of strong beer, with a toast, which he said was the best cordial in England

The person principally assistant on this occasion, indeed the only one who did any serv

chafing the youth's temples with her hand and having exprest great contempt for her husband's prescription of beer she despatched one of her maids to her own closet for a bottle

ful draught

Soon afterwards arrived the surgeon, who having viewed the wound having shaken his head, and blamed everything which was done, ordered his patient instantly to bed in which place we think proper to leave him some time to his repose, and shall here, therefore, put an end to this chapter.

Chapter 13

Containing the great address of the landlady, the great learning of a surgeon, and the solid skill in casuistry of the worthy lieutenant

When the wounded man was carried to his bed, and the house began again to clear up from the hurry which this accident had occasioned, the landlady thus addressed the commanding officer 'I am afraid, sir, said she, "this young man did not behave himself as well as he should do to your honours and if he had been killed, I suppose he had but his desarts to be sure, when gentlemen admit inferior parsons into their company, they oft to keep their distance, but, as my first husband used to say, few of 'em know how to do it For my own part, I am sure I should not have suffered any fellows to include themselves into gentlemen's company, but I thoft he had been an officer himself, till the serjeant told me he was but a recruit"

'Landlady" answered the lieutenant, 'you mistake the whole matter. The young man behaved himself extremely well and is I believe, a much better gentleman than the ensign who abused him If the young fellow dies the man who struck him will have most reason to be sorry for it, for the regiment will get rid of a very troublesome fellow, who is a scandal to the army, and if he escapes from the hands of justice, blame me, madam, that's all"

'Ay! ay! good lack a-day! ' said the landlady "who could have thoft it? Ay, ay, ay, I am satisfied your honour will see justice done, and to be sure it oft to be to every one Gentlemen oft not to kill poor folks without answering for it. A poor man hath a soul to be saved, as well as his betters"

'Indeed, madam," said the lieutenant, "you do the volunteer wrong I dare swear he is more of a gentleman than the officer."

'Ay!" cries the landlady, "why, look you there, now well, my first husband was a wise man, he used to say, you can't always know the inside by the outside Nay, that might have been well enough too, for I never saw'd him till he was all over blood. Who would have thoft it? mayhap, some young gentleman crossed in love Good lack a-day, if he should die, what a concern it will be to his parents! why, sure the devil must possess the wicked wretch to do such an act. To be sure, he is a scandal to the army as your honour says for ... I t

t blood as much as any men I mean in a a civil way as my first husband used to say To be sure when they come into the wars there

he

they could kill every mother s son of u ci

O fie madam! said the lieutenant smil ing all is rather too bloody minded a wish

Not at all sir" answered she I am not at all bloody minded only to our enemies and ... that To be sure it is nat the ow do for window lights and yet we have stopt up all we could we have almost blinded the house I am sure Says I to the exciseman says I I think you oft to favour us I am sure we are very good friends to the government and so we are for sartain for we pay a mint of mon ey to um And yet I often think to myself the government doth not imagine itself more obliged to us than to those that don t pay um a farthing Ay ay it is the way of the world

She was proceeding in this manner when the surgeon entered the room The lieutenant im mediately asked how his patient did But he resolved h m only by saying Better I bebeen called sooner — ... lieutenant the skull is not fractured — Hum cries the surgeon fractures are not always the most dangerous symptoms Con tus ons and lacerations are often attended with worse phænomena and with more fatal consequences than fractures People who know nothing of the matter conclude if the skull is not fractured all is well whereas I had rather see a man s skull broke all to pieces than some contusions I have met with — I hope says the lieutenant there are no such symptoms here — Symptoms answered the surgeon "are not always regular nor constant.

I have known very unfavourable symptoms in the morning change to favourable ones at noon and return to unfavourable again at night Of wounds indeed ... rightly and truly said Nemo repente fuit turpissimus *

I was once I remember called to a patient
... n h s and indicated ... hended an immediate mortification To pre vent which I presently made a large orifice in the vein of the left arm whence I drew twenty ounces of blood which I expected to have found extremely sizy and glutinous or indeed coagulated as it is in pleuretic com plaints but to my surprize it appeared rosy and florid and its consistency differed little from the blood of those in perfect health I then applied a fomentation to the part, which highly answered the intention and after three or four times dressing the wound began to dis charge a thick pus or matter by which means the cohesion——But perhaps I do not make myself perfectly well understood? — No really answered the lieutenant I cannot say I understand a syllable — Well sir said the surgeon then I shall not tire your patience in short within six weeks my patient was able to walk upon his legs as perfectly as he could have done before he received the contusion — I wish sir said the l eutenant you would be so kind only to inform me whether the wound this young gentleman hath had the misfortune to receive is likely to prove mor

... S r answered the surgeon to say
... or not at foolish nptoms t of our do you er — In who is danger ... there among us who in the most perfect health can be sa d not to be in danger? Can a man therefore with so bad a wound as this
... All I can say at
... was if I had been called sooner I w ... again early in the morning and in the meantime let him be kept extremely quiet and drink liberally of water-gruel — Won t you allow

* No man ever became extremely wicked all at once him sack whey?' said the landlady—"Ay, ay, sack whey," cries the doctor, 'if you will, provided it be very small "—"And a little chicken broth too?" added she—'Yes, yes, chicken broth" said the doctor, "is very good"—'Mayn't I make him some jellies too?' said the landlady—"Ay, ay," answered the doctor, "jellies are very good for wounds, for they promote cohesion" And indeed it was lucky she had not named soup or high sauces for the doctor would have complied, rather than have lost the custom of the house

The doctor was no sooner gone, than the landlady began to trumpet forth his fame to the lieutenant, who had not from their short acquaintance, conceived quite so favourable an opinion of his physical abilities as the good woman, and all the neighbourhood, entertained (and perhaps very rightly), for though I am afraid the doctor was a little of a coxcomb, he might be nevertheless very much of a surgeon

The lieutenant having collected from the learned discourse of the surgeon that Mr Jones was in great danger gave orders for keeping Mr Northerton under a very strict guard, designing in the morning to attend him to a justice of peace and to commit the conducting the troops to Gloucester to the French lieutenant, who, though he could neither read, write, nor speak any language, was however, a good officer

In the evening, our commander sent a message to Mr Jones that if a visit would not be troublesome, he would wait on him This civility was very kindly and thankfully received by Jones and the lieutenant accordingly went up to his room where he found the wounded man much better than he expected nay, Jones assured his friend that if he had not received express orders to the contrary from the surgeon he should have got up long ago for he appeared to himself to be as well as ever, and felt no other inconvenience from his wound but an extreme soreness on that side of his head

"I should be very glad quoth the lieutenant, 'if you was as well as you fancy yourself, for then you could be able to do yourself justice immediately for when a matter can't be made up, as in case of a blow the sooner you take him out the better, but I am afraid you think yourself better than you are and he would have too much advantage over you '

"I'll try, however,' answered Jones, 'if you please, and will be so kind to lend me a sword, for I have none here of my own"

"My sword is heartily at your service, my dear boy," cries the lieutenant, kissing him "you are a brave lad, and I love your spirit but I fear your strength, for such a blow, and so much loss of blood, must have very much weakened you, and though you feel no want of strength in your bed, yet you most probably would after a thrust or two I can't consent to your taking him out to-night, but I hope you will be able to come up with us before we get many days' march advance, and I give you my honour you shall have satisfaction, or the man who hath injured you shan't stay in our regiment"

"I wish," said Jones, "it was possible to decide this matter to-night now you have mentioned it to me, I shall not be able to rest"

'Oh never think of it," returned the other "a few days will make no difference The wounds of honour are not like those in your body they suffer nothing by the delay of cure It will be altogether as well for you to receive satisfaction a week hence as now"

"But suppose," says Jones, 'I should grow worse, and die of the consequences of my present wound?"

'Then your honour," answered the lieutenant, "will require no reparation at all I myself will do justice to your character, and testify to the world your intention to have acted properly, if you had recovered"

Still, replied Jones, "I am concerned at the delay I am almost afraid to mention it to you who are a soldier, but though I have been a very wild young fellow, still in my most serious moments, and at the bottom, I am really a Christian"

So am I too I assure you," said the officer young gentleman, that you should express a fear of declaring your faith before any one"

"But how terrible must it be," cries Jones, "to any one who is really a Christian, to cherish malice in his breast, in opposition to the command of Him who hath expressly forbid it? How can I bear to do this on a sick bed? Or how shall I make up my account, with such can t keep it And you must be a man of honour, if you will be in the army I remember I once put the case to our chaplain over a bowl of punch and he confessed there was much difficulty in it but he said he hoped there might be a latitude granted to soldiers in this one instance and to be sure it is our duty to hope so for who would bear to live without his honour? No no my dear boy be a good Christian as long as you live but be a man of honour too and never put up an affront not all the books nor all the parsons in the world shall ever persuade me to that I love my religion very well but I love my honour more There must be some mistake in the wording the text or in the translation or in the understanding it or somewhere or other But however that be a man must run the risque for he must preserve his honour So compose yourself to night and I promise you you shall have an opportunity of doing yourself justice Here he gave Jones a hearty buss, shook h— h—th

find in the next chapter

Chapter 14

A most dreadful chapter indeed and which few readers ought to venture upon in an evening especially when alone

Jones swallowed a large mess of chicken or rather cock broth with a very good appetite as indeed he would have done the cock it was made of with a pound of bacon into the bargain and now finding in himself no deficiency of either health or spirit he resolved to get up and seek his enemy

But first he sent for the serjeant who was his first acquaintance among these military gentlemen Unluckily that worthy officer having, in a literal sense taken his fill of liquor had been some time retired to his bolster, where he was snoring so loud that it was not easy to convey a noise in at his ears capable of drowning that which issued from his nostrils

However as Jones persisted in his desire of seeing him a vociferous drawer at length found means to disturb his slumbers and to acquaint him with the message Of which the serjeant was no sooner made sensible than he arose from his bed and having his clothes already on immediately attended Jones did not think fit to acquaint the serjeant with his design though he might have done it with great safety for the halberdier was himself a man of honour and had killed his man He would therefore have faithfully kept this secret or indeed any other which no reward was published for discovering But as Jones knew not those virtues in so short an acquaintance his caution was perhaps prudent and commendable enough

He began therefore by acquainting the serjeant that as he was now entered into the army he was ashamed of being without what was perhaps the most necessary implement of a soldier namely a sword adding that he should be infinitely obliged to him if he could procure one For which says he "I will give you any reasonable price nor do I insist upon its being silver hilted only a good blade and such as may become a soldier s thigh

The serjeant who well knew what had happened and had heard that Jones was in a very dangerous condition immediately concluded from such a message at such a time of night and from a man in such a situation that he was light headed Now as he had his wit (to use that word in its common signification) always ready he bethought himself of making his advantage of this humour in the sick man Sir says he I believe I can fit you I have a most excellent piece of stuff by me It is not indeed silver hilted which as you say doth not become a soldier but the handle is decent enough and the blade one of the best in Europe It is a blade that—a blade that—in short I will fetch it you this instant and you shall see it and handle it I am glad to see your honour so well with all my heart

Being instantly returned with the sword he delivered it to Jones who took it and drew it and then told the serjeant it would do very well and bid him name his price

The serjeant now began to harangue in praise of his goods He said (nay he swore very heartily) that the blade was taken from a

of our fine gentlemen for there are some of them an t please your honour who value the hilt of a sword more than the blade

Here the other stopped him and begged him to name a price The serjeant who thought Jones absolutely out of his senses, and very near his end was afraid lest he should injure his family by asking too little However after a moment s hesitation he contented himself with naming twenty guineas and swore he would not sell it for less to his own brother

Twenty guineas! says Jones in the utmost surprize sure you think I am mad or that I never saw a sword in my life Twenty guineas indeed! I did not imagine you would endeavour to impose upon me Here take the sword —No now I think on t I will keep it myself and show it your officer in the morning acquainting him at the same time what a price you asked me for it

The serjeant as we have said had always his wit (in sensu prædicto *) about him and now plainly saw that Jones was not in the condition he had apprehended him to be he now therefore counterfeited as great surprize as the other had shown and said I am certain sir I have not asked you so much out of the way Besides you are to consider it is the only sword I have and I must run the risque of my officer's displeasure by going without one myself And truly putting all this together I don t think twenty shillings was so much out of the way

Twenty shillings! cries Jones why you just now asked me twenty guineas — How! cries the serjeant sure your honour must have mistaken me or else I mistook myself— and indeed I am but half awake Twenty guineas indeed! no wonder your honour flew into such a pass on I say twenty guineas too No no I mean twenty shillings I assure you And when your honour comes to consider everything I hope you will not think that so extravagant a price It is indeed true you may buy a weapon which looks as well for less money But—

Here Jones interrupted him saying I will return to his bed and wished him a good march adding he hoped to overtake them before the division reached Worcester

The serjeant very civilly took his leave fully satisfied with his merchandize and not a little pleased with his dexterous recovery from the false step into which his opinion of the sick man s light headedness had betrayed him

As soon as the serjeant was departed Jones rose from his bed and dressed himself entirely putting on even his coat which as its colour was white showed very visibly the streams of blood which had flowed down it and now having grasped his new purchased sword in his hand he was going to issue forth when the thought of what he was about t undertake laid suddenly hold of him and h began to reflect that in a few minutes h might possibly deprive a human being of life or might lose his own Very well said he and in what cause do I venture my life? Wh forbidden by Heaven? Yes but it is enjoined by the world Well but shall I obey the worl in opposition to the express commands of Heaven? Shall I incur the Divine displeasure rather than be called—ha—coward—scoundre —I ll think no more I am resolved and mu fight him

The clock had now struck twelve and eve one in the house were in their beds excep the centinel who stood to guard Northerto when Jones softly opening his door issu forth in pursuit of his enemy of whose pla of confinement he had received a perfect d scription from the drawer It is not easy conceive a much more tremendous figure th he now exhibited He had on as we have sa a light-coloured coat covered with streams blood His face which missed that very bloo as well as twenty ounces more drawn from h by the surgeon was pallid Round his he was not worthy to be compared to him In fa I believe a more dreadful apparition was nev raised in a church yard nor in the imaginat of any good people met in a winter eveni over a Christmas fire in Somersetshire

When the centinel first saw our heroe a proach his hair began gently to lift up his gre d er cap and in the same instant his knees f to blows with each other Presently his wh body was seized with worse than an ague He then fired his piece and fell flat on his fa

Whether fear or courage was the occasion his firing or whether he took aim at the o ject of his terror I cannot say If he did ho ever he had the good fortune to miss his m

Jones seeing the fellow fall guessed ld not l

the room where Northerton as he had hea was confined Here in a solitary situation

* In the aforementioned sense

found—an empty quart pot standing on the table on which some beer being spilt it looked as if the room had lately been inhabited but at present it was entirely vacant

Jones then apprehended it might lead to some other apartment but upon searching all round it he could perceive no other door than that at which he entered and where the centinel had been posted He then proceeded to call Northerton several times by his name but no one answered nor did this serve to any other purpose than to confirm the centinel in his terrors who was now convinced that the volunteer was dead of his wounds and that his ghost was come in search of the murderer he now lay in all the agonies of horror and I wish with all my heart some of those actors who are hereafter to represent a man frighted out of his wits had seen him that they might be taught to copy nature instead of performing several antic tricks and gestures for the entertainment and applause of the galleries

Perceiving the bird was flown at least despairing to find him and rightly apprehending that the report of the firelock would alarm the whole house, our heroe now blew out his candle and gently stole back again to his chamber and to his bed whither he would not have been able to have gotten undiscovered had any other person been on the same staircase save only one gentleman who was confined to his bed by the gout for before he could reach the door to his chamber the hall where the centinel had been posted was half full of people some in their shirts and others not half drest all very earnestly enquiring of each other what was the matter

The soldier was now found lying in the same place and posture in which we just now left him Several immediately applied themselves to raise him, and some concluded him dead but they presently saw their mistake for he not only struggled with those who laid their hands on him but fell a roaring like a bull In reality he imagined so many spirits or devils were handling him for his imagination being possessed with the horror of an apparition converted every object he saw or felt into nothing but ghosts and spectres

At length he was overpowered by numbers and got upon his legs when candles being brought and seeing two or three of his comrades present he came a little to himself but when they asked him what was the matter? he answered I am a dead man that s all, I am a dead man I can t recover it I have seen him What hast thou seen Jack? says one of the soldiers Why I have seen the young volunteer that was killed yesterday He then imprecated the most heavy curses on himself, if he had not seen the volunteer all over blood, vomiting fire out of his mouth and nostrils pass by him into the chamber where Ensign Northerton was and then seizing the ensign by the throat fly away with him in a clap of thunder

This relation met with a gracious reception from the audience All the women present believed it firmly and prayed Heaven to defend them from murder Amongst the men too many had faith in the story but others turned it into derision and ridicule and a serjeant who was present answered very coolly "Young man you will hear more of this for going to sleep and dreaming on your post

The soldier replied 'You may punish me if you please but I was as broad awake as I am now and the devil carry me away as he hath the ensign if I did not see the dead man as I tell you with eyes as big and as fiery as two large flambeaux

The commander of the forces and the commander of the house were now both arrived for the former being awake at the time and hearing the centinel fire his piece thought it his duty to rise immediately though he had no great apprehensions of any mischief whereas the apprehensions of the latter were much greater lest her spoons and tankards should be upon the march without having received any such orders from her

Our poor centinel to whom the sight of this officer was not much more welcome than the apparition as he thought it which he had seen before again related the dreadful story and with many additions of blood and fire but he had the misfortune to gain no credit with either of the last mentioned persons for the officer though a very religious man was free from all terrors of this kind besides having so lately left Jones in the condition we have seen he had no suspicion of his being dead As for the landlady though not over religious she had no kind of aversion to the doctrine of spirits but there was a circumstance in the tale which she well knew to be false as we shall inform the reader presently

But whether Northerton was carried away in thunder or fire or in whatever other manner he was gone it was now certain that his body was no longer in custody Upon this occasion the lieutenant formed a conclusion not very different from what the serjeant is just mentioned to have made before and immediately ordered the centinel to be taken prisoner So that by a strange reverse of fortune (though not very uncommon in a military life) the guard became the guarded

Chapter 15

The conclusion of the foregoing adventure

Besides the suspicion of sleep the lieutenant harboured another and worse doubt against the poor centinel and this was that of treachery for as he believed not one syllable of the apparition so he imagined the whole to be an invention formed only to impose upon him and that the fellow had in reality been bribed by Northerton to let him escape And this he imagined the rather as the fright appeared to him the more unnatural in one who had the character of as brave and bold a man as any in the regiment having

That the reader therefore may not conceive the least ill opinion of such a person we shall not delay a moment in rescuing his character from the imputation of this guilt

Mr Northerton then as we have before observed was fully satisf ed with the glory which he had obtained from this action He had perhaps seen or heard or guessed that envy is apt to attend fame Not that I would here insinuate that he was heathenishly inclined to believe in or to worship the goddess Nemesis for in fact I am convinced he never heard of her name He was besides of an active disposition and had a great antipathy to those close quarters in the castle of Gloucester for which a justice of peace might possibly give him a billet Nor was he moreover free from some uneasy meditations on a certain wooden edifice which I forbear to name in conformity to more benefit to society than almost any other public erection In a word to hint at no more reasons for his conduct Mr Northerton was desirous of departing that evening and nothing remained for him but to contrive the quomodo which appeared to be a matter of some difficulty

Now this young gentleman though somewhat crooked in his morals was perfectly straight in his person which was extremely strong and well made His face too was ac

indeed a real compassion for the young man and hearing from the surgeon that affairs were like to go ill with the volunteer she suspected they might hereafter wear no benign aspect with the ensign Having obtained therefore leave to make him a visit and finding him in a very melancholy mood which she considerably heightened by telling him there were scarce any hopes of the volunteer s life she proceeded to throw forth some hints which

which she would give him an opportunity of keeping the coast clear

But lest our readers of a different complexion should take this occasion of too hastily condemning all compassion as a folly and pernicious to society we think proper to mention another particular which might possibly have some little share in this action The ensign happened to be at this time possessed of the sum of fifty pounds which did indeed belong to the whole company for the captain having quarrelled with his lieutenant had entrusted the payment of his company to the ensign This money however he thought proper to deposit in my landlady s hand possibly by way of bail or security that he would hereafter appear and answer to the charge against him but whatever were the conditions, certain it is that she had the money and the ensign his liberty

The reader may perhaps expect from the compassionate temper of this good woman that when she saw the poor centinel taken prisoner for a fact of which she knew him innocent she should immediately have interposed in his behalf but whether it was that she had already exhausted all her compassion in the above mentioned instance or that the features of this fellow though not very different from those of the ensign could not raise it I will not determine but far from being an advocate for the present prisoner she urged his guilt to his officer declaring with uplifted eyes and hands that she would not have had any concern in the escape of a murderer for all the world

Everything was now once more quiet and most of the company returned again to their beds but the landlady either from the natural activity of her disposition or from her fear for her plate having no propensity to sleep prevailed with the officers as they were to march within little more than an hour to spend that time with her over a bowl of punch

Jones had lain awake all this while and had heard great part of the hurry and bustle that had passed of which he had now some curiosity to know the particulars He therefore applied to his bell which he rung at least twenty times without any effect for my landlady was in such high mirth with her company that no clapper could be heard there but her own and the drawer and chambermaid who were sitting together in the kitchen (for neither durst he sit up nor she lie in bed alone) the more they heard the bell ring the more they were frightened and as it were nailed down in their places

At last at a lucky interval of chat the sound reached the ears of our good landlady who presently sent forth her summons which both her servants instantly obeyed Joe says the mistress don t you hear the gentleman s bell ring? Why don t you go up? — It is not my business answered the drawer to wait upon the chambers—it is Betty Chambermaid s "If you come to that answered the maid it is not m h mediately she would turn him away that very morning If you do madam says he I can t help it I won t do another servant s business She then applied herself to the maid and endeavoured to prevail by gentle means but all in vain Betty was as inflexible as Joe Both insisted it was not their business and they would not do it

The lieutenant then fell a laughing, and said Come I will put an end to this contention and then turning to the servants commended them for their resolution in not giving up the point but added he was sure if one would consent to go the other would To which proposal they both agreed in an instant and accordingly went up very lovingly and close together When they were gone the lieutenant appeased the wrath of the landlady by satisfying her why they were both so unwilling to go alone

They returned soon after and acquainted their mistress that the sick gentleman was so far from being dead that he spoke as heartily as if he was well and that he gave his service to the captain and should be very glad of the favour of seeing him before he marched

The good lieutenant immediately complied with his desires and sitting down by his bed side acquainted him with the scene which had happened below concluding with his intentions to make an example of the centinel

Upon this Jones related to him the whole truth and earnestly begged him not to punish the poor soldier who I am confident says he is as innocent of the ensign s escape as he is of forging any lie or of endeavouring to impose on you

The lieutenant hesitated a few moments and then answered Why as you have cleared the fellow of one part of the charge so it will be impossible to prove the other because he was not the only centinel But I have a good mind to punish the rascal for being a coward Yet who knows what effect the terror of such an apprehension may have? and to say the truth he hath always behaved well against an enemy Come it is a good thing to see any sign of religion in these fellows so I promise you he shall be set at liberty when we march But hark the general beats My dear boy give me another buss Don t discompose nor hurry yourself but remember the Christian doctrine of patience and I warrant you will soon be

Jones endeavoured to compose himself to rest

BOOK VIII

Containing about two days

Chapter 1

A wonderful long chapter concerning the marvellous, being much the longest of all our introductory chapters

As we are now entering upon a book in which the course of our history will oblige us to relate some matters of a more strange and surprizing kind than any which have hitherto occurred, it may not be amiss, in the prolegomenous or introductory chapter, to say something of that species of writing which is called the marvellous To this we shall, as well for the sake of ourselves as of others, endeavour to set some certain bounds, and indeed nothing can be more necessary, as critics * of different complexions are here apt to run into very different extremes, for while some are, with M Dacier, ready to allow, that the same thing which is impossible may be yet probable, † others have so little historic or poetic faith, that they believe nothing to be either possible or probable, the like to which hath not occurred to their own observation

First, then I think it may very reasonably be required of every writer, that he keeps [illegible]

[illegible] gave birth to many stories of the antient heathen deities (for most of them are of poetical original) The poet, being desirous to indulge a wanton and extravagant imagination, took refuge in that power, of the extent of which his readers were no judges, or rather which they imagined to be infinite, and consequently they could not be shocked at any prodigies related of it This hath been strongly urged in defence of Homer s miracles, and it [illegible]

[illegible] tion, but because the poet himself wrote to heathens, to whom poetical fables were articles of faith For my own part I must confess, so compassionate is my temper, I wish Polypheme had confined himself to his milk diet and preserved his eye, nor could Ulysses be much more concerned than myself, when his companions were turned into swine by Circe, who showed, I think, afterwards, too much regard for man's flesh to be supposed capable of converting it into bacon I wish, likewise, with all my heart, that Homer could have known the rule prescribed by Horace, to introduce supernatural agents as seldom as possible We should not then have seen his gods coming on trivial errands, and often behaving themselves so as not only to forfeit all title to respect, but to become the objects of scorn and derision A conduct which must have shocked the credulity of a pious and sagacious heathen, and which could never have been defended, unless by agreeing with a supposition to which I have been sometimes almost inclined, that this most glorious poet, as he certainly was, had an intent to burlesque the superstitious faith of his own age and country

But I have rested too long on a doctrine which can be of no use to a Christian writer, for as he cannot introduce into his works any of that heavenly host which make a part of his creed, so it is horrid puerility to search the heathen theology for any of those deities who have been long since dethroned from their immortality. Lord Shaftesbury observes that nothing is more cold than the invocation of a [illegible]

[illegible] some have thought Homer did, of a mug ale, with the author of Hudibras, which latter may perhaps have inspired much more poetry as well as prose, than all the liquors of Hippocrene or Helicon

The only supernatural agents which can in any manner be allowed to us moderns are ghosts but of these I would advise an author to be extremely sparing These are indeed like arsenic, and other dangerous drugs in physic, to be used with the utmost caution, nor would I advise the introduction of them at all in those works, or by those authors to which, or to whom, a horselaugh in the reader would be any great prejudice or mortification

* By this word here and in most other parts of our work, we mean every reader in the world

† It is happy for M. Dacier that he was not an Irishman.

As for elves and fairies and other such mummery I purposely omit the mention of them as I should be very unwilling to confine within any bounds those surprizing imaginations for whose vast capacity the limits of human nature are too narrow whose works are to be considered as a new creation and who have consequently just right to do what they will with their own

Man therefore is the highest subject (unless on very extraordinary occasions indeed) which presents itself to the pen of our historian or of our poet and in relating his actions great care is to be taken that we do not exceed the capacity of the agent we describe

Nor is possibility alone sufficient to justify us we must keep likewise within the rules of probability It is I think the opinion of Aristotle or if not it is the opinion of some wise man whose authority will be as weighty when it is as old That it is no excuse for a poet who relates what is incredible that the thing related is really matter of fact This may perhaps be allowed true with regard to poetry but it may be thought impracticable to extend it to the historian for he is obliged to record matters as he finds them though they may be of so extraordinary a nature as will require no small degree of historical faith to swallow them Such was the successless armament of Xerxes described by Herodotus or the successful expedition of Alexander related by Arrian Such of later years was the victory of Agincourt obtained by Harry the Fifth or that of Narva won by Charles the Twelfth of Sweden All which instances the more we reflect on them appear still the more astonishing

Such facts however as they occur in the thread of the story nay indeed as they constitute the essential parts of it the historian is not only justifiable in recording as they really happened but indeed would be unpardonable should he omit or alter them But there are other facts not of such consequence nor so necessary which though ever so well attested may nevertheless be sacrificed to oblivion in complacence to the scepticism of a reader Such is that memorable story of the ghost of George Villiers which might with more propriety have been made a present of to Dr Drelincourt to have kept the ghost of Mrs Veale company at the head of his Discourse upon Death than have been introduced into so solemn a work as the History of the Rebellion

To say the truth if the historian will confine himself to what really happened and utterly reject any circumstance which though never so well attested he must be well assured is false he will sometimes fall into the marvellous but never into the incredible He will often raise the wonder and surprize of his reader but never that incredulous hatred

his character and commences a writer of romance In this however those historians who relate public transactions have the advantage of us who confine ourselves to scenes of private life The credit of the former is by common notoriety supported for a long time and public records with the concurrent testimony of many authors bear evidence to their truth in future ages Thus a Trajan and an Antoninus a Nero and a Caligula have all met with the belief of posterity and no one doubts but that men so very good and so very bad were once the masters of mankind

But we who deal in private character who search into the most retired recesses and draw forth examples of virtue and vice from holes and corners of the world are in a more dangerous situation As we have no public notoriety no concurrent testimony no records to support and corroborate what we deliver it becomes us to keep within the limits not only of possibility but of probability too and this more especially in painting what is greatly good and amiable Knavery and folly though never so exorbitant will more easily meet with assent for ill nature adds great support and strength to faith

Thus we may perhaps with little danger relate the history of Fisher who having long owed his bread to the generosity of Mr Derby and having one morning received a considerable bounty from his hands yet in order to purpose but when the poor gentleman had let his company out through the office Fisher came suddenly from his lurking place and walking softly behind his friend into his chamber, discharged a pistol ball into his head This may be believed when the bones of Fisher are as rotten as his heart Nay, perhaps, it will be credited, that the villain went two days afterwards with some young ladies to the play of Hamlet, and with an unaltered countenance heard one of the ladies, who little suspected how near she was to the person, cry out, 'Good God! if the man that murdered Mr Derby was now present!" manifesting in this a more seared and callous conscience than even Nero himself, of whom we are told by Suetonius, 'that the consciousness of his guilt, after the death of his mother, became immediately intolerable, and so continued nor could all the congratulations of the soldiers, of the senate, and the people, allay the horrors of his conscience"

But now, on the other hand, should I tell my reader, that I had known a man whose penetrating genius had enabled him to raise a large fortune in a way where no beginning was chaulked out to him, that he had done this with the most perfect preservation of his integrity, and not only without the least injustice or injury to any one individual person, but with the highest advantage to trade, and a vast increase of the public revenue that he had expended one part of the income of this fortune in discovering a taste superior to most, by works where the highest dignity was united with the purest simplicity and another part in displaying a degree of goodness superior to all men, by acts of charity to objects whose only recommendations were their merits, or their wants, that he was most industrious in searching after merit in distress, most eager to relieve it and then as careful (perhaps too [illegible] out tinsel, or external ostentation, that he filled every relation in life with the most adequate virtue that he was most piously religious to his Creator, most zealously loyal to his sovereign, a most tender husband to his wife, a kind relation, a munificent patron, a warm and firm friend a knowing and a chearful companion, indulgent to his servants, hospitable to his neighbours charitable to the poor, and benevolent to all mankind Should I add to these the epithets of wise brave, elegant, and indeed every other amiable epithet in our language, I might surely say,

—Quis credet? nemo Hercule! nemo; Vel duo, vel nemo;

and yet I know a man who is all I have here described But a single instance (and I really know not such another) is not sufficient to justify us, while we are writing to thousands who never heard of the person, nor of any thing like him Such raræ aves should be remitted to the epitaph writer, or to some poet who may condescend to hitch him in a distich or to slide him into a rhime with an air of carelessness and neglect, without giving any offence to the reader.

In the last place, the actions should be such as may not only be within the compass of human agency, and which human agents may probably be supposed to do, but they should be likely for the very actors and characters themselves to have performed, for what may be only wonderful and surprizing in one man, may become improbable, or indeed impossible, when related of another.

This last requisite is what the dramatic critics call conversation of character; and it requires [illegible]

lent writer, that zeal can no more hurry a man to act in direct opposition to itself, than a rapid stream can carry a boat against its own current I will venture to say, that for a man to act in direct contradiction to the dictates of his nature, is, if not impossible, as improbable and as miraculous as anything which can well be conceived Should the best parts of the story of M Antoninus be ascribed to Nero or should the worst incidents of Nero s life be imputed to Antoninus what would be more shocking to belief than either instance? whereas both these being related of their proper agent, constitute the truly marvellous

Our modern authors of comedy have fallen almost universally into the error here hinted at their heroes generally are notorious rogues, and their heroines abandoned jades during the first four acts but in the fifth, the former become very worthy gentlemen, and the latter women of virtue and discretion nor is the writer often so kind as to give himself the least trouble to reconcile or account for this monstrous change and incongruity There is, indeed, no other reason to be assigned for it, than because the play is drawing to a conclusion as if it was no less natural in a rogue to repent in the last act of a play than in the last of his life which we perceive to be generally the case at Tyburn a place which might indeed close the scene of some comedies with much propriety as the heroes in these are most commonly eminent for those very talents which not only bring men to the gallows but enable them to make an heroic figure when they are there

Within these few restrictions I think every writer may be permitted to deal as much in the wonderful as he pleases nay if he thus keeps within the rules of credibility the more he can surprize the reader the more he will engage his attention and the more he will charm him As a genius of the highest rank observes in his fifth chapter of the Bathos 'The great art of all poetry is to mix truth with fiction in order to join the credible with the surprizing

For though every good author will confine himself within the bounds of probability it is by no means necessary that his characters or his incidents should be trite common or vulgar such as happen in every street or in every house or which may be met with in the home articles of a newspaper Nor must he be inhibited from showing many persons and things which may possibly have never fallen within the knowledge of great part of his readers If the writer strictly observes the rules above mentioned he hath discharged his part and is then intitled to some faith from his reader who is indeed guilty of critical infidelity if he disbelieves him

For want of a portion of such faith I remember the character of a young lady of quality which was condemned on the stage for being unnatural by the unanimous voice of a very large assembly of clerks and apprentices though it had the previous suffrages of many ladies of the first rank one of whom very eminent for her understanding declared it was the picture of half the young people of her acquaintance

Chapter 2

In which the landlady pays a visit to Mr Jones

When Jones had taken leave of his friend the lieutenant he endeavoured to close his eyes but all in vain his spirits were too lively and wakeful to be lulled to sleep So having amused or rather tormented himself with the thoughts of his Sophia till it was open daylight he called for some tea upon which occasion my landlady herself vouchsafed to pay him a visit

This was indeed the first time she had seen him or at least had taken any notice of him but as the lieutenant had assured her that he was certainly some young gentleman of fashion she now determined to show him all the respect in her power for to speak truly this was one of those houses where gentlemen to use the language of advertisements meet with civil treatment for their money

She had no sooner begun to make his tea than she likewise began to discourse — La! sir said she I think it is great pity that such a pretty young gentleman should undervalue himself so as to go about with these soldier fellows They call themselves gentlemen I warrant you but as my first husband used to say they should remember it is we that pay them And to be sure it is very hard upon us to be obliged to pay them and to keep um too as we publicans are I had twenty of um last night besides officers nay for matter o that I had rather have the soldiers than officers for nothing is ever good enough for those sparks and I am sure if you was to see the bills la! sir it is nothing I have had less

—

come up with such [illegible]
a shilling a head Then there s such swearing among um to be sure it frightens me out o my wits I thinks nothing can ever prosper been in danger of death which I am glad to see you are not it would have been all as one to such wicked people They would have let the murderer go Laud have mercy upon um I would not have such a sin to answer for for the whole world But though you are likely with the blessing to recover there is laa for him yet and if you will employ lawyer Small I darest be sworn he ll make the fellow fly the country for him though perhaps he ll have fled the country before for it is here to-day and gone to-morrow with such chaps I hope however you will learn more wit for the fu ture and return back to your friends I warrant they are all miserable for your loss and if they was but to know what had happened— La my seeming! I would not for the world they should Come come we know very well what all the matter is but if one won t an degree) Why you thought sir I knew nothing of the matter I warrant you about Madam Sophia — How says Jones starting up do you know my Sophia? — Do I! ay marry cries the landlady many s the time hath she lain in this house — with her aunt I suppose says Jones Why there it is now cries the landlady Ay ay ay I know the old lady very well And a sweet young creature is Madam Sophia that s the truth on t — A sweet creature cries Jones O heavens!

Angels are painted fair to look like her There's in her all that we believe of heav n, Amazing brightness purity and truth Eternal joy and everlasting love

And could I ever have imagined that you had known my Sophia! — I wish says the landlady you knew half so much of her What would you have given to have sat by her bed side? What a delicious neck she hath! Her lovely limbs have stretched themselves in that very bed you now lie in — Here! cries Jones hath Sophia ever laid here? — Ay ay here there in that very bed says the landlady where I wish you had her this moment and she may wish so too for anything I know to the contrary for she hath mentioned your name to me — Ha! cries he did she ever mention her poor Jones? You flatter me now I can never believe so much — Why then answe
the d
than
Jones but in a civil and modest way I confess yet I could perceive she thought a great deal more than she said — O my dear woman! cries Jones her thoughts of me I shall never be worthy of Oh she is all gentleness kindness goodnes W

the plagues and miseries which any dæmon

Why look you there now says the landlady I told her you was a constant lovier — But pray madam tell me when or where you knew anything of me for I never was here before nor do I remember ever to have seen you — Nor is it possible you should answered she for you was a little thing when I had you in my lap at the squire s — How, the squire s? says Jones what do you know that great and good Mr Allworthy then? — Yes marry do I says she who in the country doth not? — The fame of his goodness indeed' answered Jones must have extended farther than th s but heaven only can know him—can know that benevolence which it copied from itself and sent upon earth as its own pattern Mankind are as ignorant of such divine goodness as they are unworthy of it but none so unworthy of it as myself I who was raised by him to such a height taken in as you must well know a poor base born child adopted by him and treated as his own son to dare by my follies to disoblige him to draw his vengeance upon me Yes I deserve it all for I will never be so ungrateful as ever to think he hath done an act of injustice by me No I deserve to be turned out of doors as I am And now madam" says he I believe you will not blame me for turning soldier especially with such a fortune as this in my pocket At which words he shook a purse which had but very little in it and which still appeared to the landlady to have less

My good landlady was (according to vulgar phrase) struck all of a heap by this relation She answered coldly That to be sure people were the best judges what was most proper for their circumstances But hark says she I think I hear somebody call Coming! coming! the devil s in all our volk nobody hath any nt any om any leave she flung out of the room for the lower sort of people are very tenacious of respect and though they are contented to give this gratis to persons of quality yet they never confer it on those of their own order without taking care to be well paid for their pains

Chapter 3

In which the surgeon makes his second appearance

Before we proceed any farther that the reader may not be mistaken in imagining the landlady knew more than she did, nor sur prized that she knew so much it may be neces sary to inform him that the lieutenant had ac quainted her that the name of Sophia had been the occasion of the quarrel, and as for the rest of her knowledge, the sagacious reader will observe how she came by it in the preced ing scene Great curiosity was indeed mixed with her virtues, and she never willingly suf fered any one to depart from her house, with out enquiring as much as possible into their names, families, and fortunes

She was no sooner gone than Jones, instead of animadverting on her behaviour, reflected that he was in the same bed which he was in-formed had held his dear Sophia This oc-casioned a thousand fond and tender thoughts, which we would dwell longer upon did we not consider that such kind of lovers will make ordered, and hearing that he had not slept, de-clared that he was in great danger, for he ap-prehended a fever was coming on, which he would have prevented by bleeding, but Jones would not submit, declaring he would lose no more blood, "and, doctor," says he, "if you will be so kind only to dress my head, I have of day to be instructed in my operations by a patient, and I insist on making a revulsion be-fore I dress you"

Jones persisted obstinately in his refusal, and the doctor at last yielded, telling him at the same time that he would not be answer-able for the ill consequence, and hoped he would do him the justice to acknowledge that he had given him a contrary advice, which the patient promised he would

The doctor retired into the kitchen, where, addressing himself to the landlady he com plained bitterly of the undutiful behaviour of his patient, who would not be blooded, though he was in a fever

"It is an eating fever then," says the land lady, "for he hath devoured two swinging buttered toasts this morning for breakfast"

"Very likely," says the doctor "I have known people eat in a fever, and it is very easily accounted for, because the acidity oc casioned by the febrile matter may stimulate the nerves of the diaphragm, and thereby occa sion a craving which will not be easily dis tinguishable from a natural appetite, but the aliment will not be corrected, nor assimilated into chyle, and so will corrode the vascular orifices and thus will aggravate the febrific symptoms Indeed, I think the gentleman in a very dangerous way, and, if he is not blooded, I am afraid will die"

"Every man must die some time or other," answered the good woman, "it is no business of mine I hope, doctor you would not have me hold him while you bleed him But, hark'ee, a word in your ear, I would advise you, before you proceed too far, to take care who is to be your paymaster"

"Paymaster!" said the doctor, staring, "why, I've a gentleman under my hands, have I not?"

"I imagined so as well as you," said the land lady, "but, as my first husband used to say, matter, but I think people in business oft al the chamber with much violence, awaked poor Jones from a very sound nap, into which he was fallen, and, what was still worse, from a my heart you had taken my answer, for you have awaked me out of the sweetest sleep which I ever had in my life"

the other "Then, said Jones, "you have used me rascally and I will not pay you a farthing —'Very well cries the doctor; the first loss is the best. What a pox did my landlady mean by sending for me to such vagabonds! At which words he flung out of the room and his patient turning himself about soon recovered his sleep but his dream was unfortunately gone

Chapter 4

In which is introduced one of the pleasantest barbers that was ever recorded in history the barber of Bagdad, or he in Don Quixote, not excepted

THE CLOCK had now struck five when Jones awaked from a nap of seven hours so much refreshed, and in such perfect health and spirits that he resolved to get up and dress himself for which purpose he unlocked his portmanteau and took out clean linen and a suit of cloaths but first he slipt on a frock and went down into the kitchen to bespeak something that might pacify certain tumults he found rising within his stomach

Meeting the landlady he accosted her with great civility and asked What he could have for dinner? — For dinner! says she it is an odd time a day to think about dinner There is nothing drest in the house and the fire is almost out — Well but says he I must have something to eat and it is almost indifferent to me what for to tell you the truth I was never more hungry in my life — Then says she I believe there is a piece of cold buttock and carrot which will fit you — Nothing better answered Jones "but I

well recovered for the sweetness of our heroe s temper was almost irresistible besides she was really no ill humoured woman at the bottom but she loved money so much that she hated everything which had the semblance of poverty

Jones now returned in order to dress himself while his dinner was preparing and was according to his orders attended by the barber

This barber who went by the name of Little Benjamin was a fellow of great oddity and humour which had frequently let him into small inconveniencies such as slaps in the face kicks in the breech broken bones &c. For every one doth not understand a jest and those who do are often displeased with being themselves the subjects of it This vice was, out the least respect of persons time or place

He had a great many other particularities in his character which I shall not mention as the reader will himself very easily perceive them on his farther acquaintance with this extraordinary person

Jones being impatient to be drest for a reason which may be easily imagined thought the shaver was very tedious in preparing his suds and begged him to make haste, to which the other answered with much gravity for he never discomposed his muscles on any account 'Festina lentè,* is a proverb which I learned long before I ever touched a razor —"I find friend you are a scholar, replied Jones. "A poor one said the barber non omnia possumus omnes —"Again! said Jones I fancy you are good at capping verses — Excuse me sir said the barber non tanto me dignor honore  And then proceeding to his operation Sir said he since I have dealt in suds I could never discover more than two

you have had good success for one may say of your beard that it is tondenti gravior" †— I conjecture says Jones that thou art a very comical fellow — You mistake me widely sir said the barber I am too much addicted to the study of philosophy hinc illæ lacrymæ †† sir that s my misfortune Too much learning hath been my ruin — Indeed says Jones I confess friend you have more learning than generally belongs to your trade but I can t see how it can have injured you — Alas! sir answered the shaver my father disinherited me for it He was a dancing master and because I could read before I could dance he took an aversion to me and left every farthing among his other children —Will you please to have your temples—O la! I ask your pardon I fancy there is hiatus in manuscriptis I heard you was going to the wars but I find it was a mistake — Why do you conclude so?"

* Make haste slowly
 We cannot all of us do everything
 I am not worthy of so much honor.
† Hard to shave †† Thus these tears.

says Jones Sure sir answered the barber "you are too wise a man to carry a broken head thither for that would be carrying coals to Newcastle

Upon my word cries Jones thou art a very odd fellow and I like thy humour ex tremel

twenty times as great a favour if you will ac cept of it — What is that my friend? cries Jones Why I will drink a bottle with you if you please for I dearly love good nature and as you have found me out to be a comical fel low so I have no skill in physiognomy if you are not one of the best natured gentlemen in the universe Jones now walked downstairs neatly drest and perhaps the fair Adonis was not a lovelier figure and yet he had no charms for my landlady for as that good woman did not resemble Venus at all in her per son so neither did she in her taste Happy had it been for Nanny the chambermaid if she had seen with the eyes of her mistress for that poor girl fell so violently in love with Jones in five minutes that her passion afterwards cost her many a sigh This Nanny was ex tremely pretty and altogether as coy for she had refused a drawer and one or two young farmers in the neighbourhood but the bright eyes of our heroe thawed all her ice in a moment

When Jones returned to the kitchen his cloth was not yet laid nor indeed was there any occasion it should his dinner remaining in statu quo as did the fire which was to dress it This disappointment might have put many a philosophical temper into a passion but it

beef cold But now the good woman whether moved by compassion or by shame or by what about the matter in good earnest and soon ac complished it

This Sun into which Jones was now con ducted was truly named as *lucus a non lucendo for it was an apartment into which the sun had scarce ever looked It was indeed the worst room in the house and happy was it for Jones that it was so However he was now too hungry to find any fault but having once satisfied his appetite he ordered the drawer to carry a bottle of wine into a better room and expressed some resentment at having been shown into a dungeon

The drawer having obeyed his commands he was after some time attended by the barber who would not indeed have suffered him to wait so long for his company had he not been listening in the kitchen to the landlady who was entertaining a circle that she had gathered round her with the history of poor Jones part of which she had extracted from his own lips and the other part was her own ingenious com position for she said he was a poor parish boy taken into the house of Squire Allworthy where he was bred up as an apprentice and now turned out of doors for his misdeeds par ticularly for making love to his young mistress and probably for robbing the house for how else should he come by the little money he hath and this says she is your gentleman forsooth! — A servant of Squire Allworthy! says the barber what s his name? — Why he told me his name was Jones says she per haps he goes by a wrong name Nay and he have relations who live in that country nay and some people say he is his son — Why doth he not go by the name of his father? — I can t tell that said the barber many peo-

great men and as my poor first husband used to say never affront any customer that s a gen tleman

Chapter 5

A dialogue between Mr Jones and the barber

This conversation passed partly while Jones was at dinner in his dungeon and partly while he was expecting the barber in the par lour And as soon as it was ended Mr Ben jamin as we have said attended him and was very kindly desired to sit down Jones then filling out a glass of wine drank his health by the appellation of doctissime tonsorum * Ago tibi gratias domine said the barber and then looking very steadfastly at Jones he said with great gravity and with a seeming surprize as if he had recollected a face he had seen before Sir may I crave the favour to know if your name is not Jones? To which the other answered That it was — Proh deum atque hominum fidem! says the barber how strangely things come to pass! Mr Jones I am your most obedient servant I find you do not know me which indeed is no wonder since you never saw me but once and then you was very young Pray sir how doth the good Squire Allworthy? how doth ille optimus omnium patronus? — I find said Jones you do indeed know me but I have not the like happiness of recollecting you — I do not wonder at that cries Benjamin but I am surprized I did not know you sooner for you are not in the least altered And pray sir may I without offence enquire whither you are travelling this way? — Fill the glass Mr Barber said Jones and ask no more questions — Nay sir answered Benjamin I would not be troublesome and I hope you don t think me a man of an impertinent curiosity for that is a vice which nobody can lay to my charge but I ask pardon for when a gentleman of your figure travels without his servants we may suppose him to be as we say in casu incognito and perhaps I ought not to have mentioned your name — I own says Jones I did not expect to have been so well known in this country as I find I am yet for particular reasons I shall be obliged to you if you will not mention my name to any other person till I am gone from hence — Pauca verba answered the barber and I wish no other here knew you but myself for some people have tongues but I promise you I can keep a secret My enemies will allow me that virtue — And yet that is not the characteristic of your profession Mr Barber answered Jones Alas! sir replied Benjamin Non si male nunc et olim sic erit I was not born nor bred a barber I assure you I have spent most of my time among gentlemen and though I say it I understand something of gentility And if you had thought me as worthy of your confidence as you have some other people I should have shown you I could have kept a secret better I should not have degraded your name in a public kitchen for indeed sir some people have not used you well for besides making a public proclamation of what you told them of a quarrel between yourself and Squire Allworthy they added lies of their own things which I knew to be lies —

* A play of words on lucus a grove and lucere to shine a grove from not being light thus a non sequitor

You surprize me greatly cries Jones Upon my word sir answered Benjamin I tell the truth and I need not tell you my landlady was the person I am sure it moved me to hear the story and I hope it is all false for I have a great respect for you I do assure you I have and have had ever since the good nature you showed to Black George which was talked of all over the country and I received more than one letter about it Indeed it made you beloved by everybody You will pardon me therefore for it was real concern at what I heard made me ask many questions for I have no impertinent curiosity about me but I love good nature and thence became amoris abundantia erga te

Every profession of friendship easily gains credit with the miserable it is no wonder therefore if Jones who besides his being miserable was extremely open hearted very readily believed all the professions of Benjamin and received him into his bosom The scraps of Latin some of which Benjamin applied properly enough though it did not savour of profound literature seemed yet to indicate something superior to a common barber and so indeed did his whole behaviour Jones therefore believed the truth of what he had said as to his original and education and at length after much entreaty he said Since you have heard my friend so much of my affairs and seem so desirous to know the truth if you will have patience to hear it I will inform you of the whole — Patience! cries Benjamin that I will if the chapter was never so long and I am very much obliged to you for the honour you do me

Jones now began and related the whole history forgetting only a circumstance or two namely everything which passed on that day in which he had fought with Thwackum and ended with his resolution to go to sea till the rebellion in the North had made him change his purpose and had brought him to the place where he then was

Little Benjamin who had been all attention never once interrupted the narrative but when it was ended he could not help observing that there must be surely something more invented by his enemies and told Mr Allworthy against him or so good a man would never have dismissed one he had loved so tenderly

* The reader will readily understand most of what the "most learned of barbers" says

in such a manner To which Jones answered "He doubted not but such villanous arts had been made use of to destroy him

And surely it was scarce possible for any one to have avoided making the same remark with the barber who had not indeed heard from Jones one single circumstance upon which he was condemned for his actions were not now placed in those injurious lights in which they had been misrepresented to Allworthy nor could he mention those many false accusations which had been from time to time preferred against him to Allworthy for with none of these he was himself acquainted He had likewise as we have observed omitted many material facts in his present relation Upon the whole indeed everything now appeared in such favourable colours to Jones that malice itself would have found it no easy matter to fix any blame upon him

Not that Jones desired to conceal or to dis

for let a man be never so honest the account of his own conduct will in spite of himself be so very favourable that his vices will come purified through his lips and like foul liquors well strained will leave all their foulness behind For though the facts themselves may appear yet so different will be the motives circumstances and consequences when a man tells his own story and when his enemy tells it that we scarce can recognise the facts to be one and the same

Though the barber had drank down this story with greedy ears he was not yet satisfied There cautiously concealed the name of the young lady The barber therefore after some hesitation and many hums and hahs at last begged leave to crave the name of the lady who appeared to be the principal cause of all this mischief Jones paused a moment and then said Since I have trusted you with so much and since I am afraid her name is become too publick already on this occasion I will not conceal it from you Her name is Sophia Western"

Proh deum Western hath a

"Ay and such a woman cries Jones that the world cannot match No eye ever saw anything so beautiful but that is her least excellence Such sense! such goodness! Oh I could praise her for ever and yet should omit half her virtues! — Mr Western a daughter grown up!" cries the barber I remember the father a boy, well Tempus edax rerum

The wine being now at an end the barber pressed very eagerly to be his bottle but Jones absolutely refused saying He had already

Latin or English? I have some curious books in both languages such as Erasmi Colloquia Ovid de Tristibus Gradus ad Parnassum and in English I have several of the best books though some of them are a little torn but I have a great part of Stowe's Chronicle the sixth volume of Pope's Homer the third volume of the Spectator the second volume of Echard's Roman History the Craftsman Robinson Crusoe Thomas à Kempis and two volumes of Tom Brown's Works

"Those last cries Jones are books I never saw so if you please lend me one of those volumes The barber assured him he would be

ceived very strict injunctions of secrecy from Jones and having sworn inviolably to maintain it they separated the barber went home and Jones retired to his chamber

Chapter 6

In which more of the talents of Mr Benjamin will appear as well as who this extraordinary person was

IN THE morning Jones grew a little uneasy at the desertion of his surgeon as he apprehended some inconvenience or even danger might attend the not dressing his wound he enquired therefore of the drawer what other take my advice, there is not a man in the king dom can do your business better than the bar ber who was with you last night We look upon him to be one of the ablest men at a cut in all this neighbourhood For though he hath not been here above three months, he hath done several great cures "

The drawer was presently dispatched for Little Benjamin, who being acquainted in what capacity he was wanted prepared him self accordingly, and attended, but with so different an air and aspect from that which he wore when his basin was under his arm, that he could scarce be known to be the same person

"So, tonsor" says Jones, 'I find you have more trades than one how came you not to in form me of this last night?"—"A surgeon," an swered Benjamin with great gravity, ' is a profession, not a trade The reason why I did not acquaint you last night that I professed this art was that I then concluded you was under the hands of another gentleman, and I never love to interfere with my brethren in their business Ars omnibus communis But now, sir, if you please I will inspect your head, and when I see into your skull I will give my opinion of your case

he had done Benjamin began to groan and shake his head violently Upon which Jones, in a peevish manner, bid him not play the fool, but tell him in what condition he found him

Shall I answer you as a surgeon or a friend?" said Benjamin As a friend and seriously," some salve of mine I will answer for the suc cess Jones gave his consent, and the plaister was applied accordingly

"There sir cries Benjamin ' now I will, if you please resume my former self but a man is obliged to keep up some dignity in his countenance whilst he is performing these operations or the world will not submit to be handled by him You can t imagine, sir, of how much consequence a grave aspect is to a grave character A barber may make you laugh, but a surgeon ought rather to make you cry "

"Mr Barber, or Mr Surgeon or Mr Barber surgeon," said Jones "O dear sir! ' answered Benjamin, interrupting him, "Infandum, re gina, jubes renovare dolorem * You recall to my mind that cruel separation of the united fraternities, so much to the prejudice of both bodies as all separations must be, according to the old adage, Vis unita fortior †, which to be sure there are not wanting some of one or of the other fraternity who are able to construe What a blow was this to me, who unite both in my own person!" ' Well by whatever name you please to be called," continued Jones "you certainly are one of the oddest, most comical fellows I ever met with, and must have some thing very surprizing in your story, which you must confess I have a right to hear"—"I do confess it," answered Benjamin, "and will very readily acquaint you with it, when you have sufficient leisure, for I promise you it will re

but first I will fasten the door, that none may interrupt us ' He did so, and then advancing with a solemn air to Jones said ' I must begin by telling you, sir, that you yourself have been the greatest enemy I ever had " Jones was a little startled at this sudden declaration 'I your enemy, sir!" says he, with much amazement and some sternness in his look "Nay be not angry," said Benjamin, "for I promise you I am not You are perfectly innocent of having intended me any wrong, for you was then an infant but I shall, I believe, unriddle all this the moment I mention my name Did you

his son " "Well, sir," answered Benjamin 'I am that Partridge, but I here absolve you from all filial duty for I do assure you, you are no son of mine ' 'How!" replied Jones "and is it possible that a false suspicion should have drawn all the ill consequences upon you, with which I am too well acquainted?' ' It is pos sible, cries Benjamin, "for it is so but though it is natural enough for men to hate even the innocent causes of their sufferings, yet I am of a different temper I have loved you ever since I heard of your behaviour to Black George as I told you, and I am convinced, from this ex

* A quote of Aeneas speech to Dido, The Æneid II 3 O queen, you bid me call to mind the un speakable grief '

† Power is strengthened by union

traordinary meeting that you are born to make me amends for all I have suffered on that ac count Besides I dreamt the night before I saw you that I stumbled over a stool without hurting myself which plainly showed me some thing good was towards me and last night I dreamt again that I rode behind you on a milk white mare which is a very excellent dream and betokens much good fortune which I am resolved to pursue unless you have the cruelty to deny me

I should be very glad Mr Partridge an swered Jones to have it in my power to make you amends for your sufferings on my account though at present I see no likelihood of it however I assure you I will deny you nothing have so entirely set my heart upon it that if you should refuse me you will kill both a bar ber and a surgeon in one breath

Jones answered smiling that he should be very sorry to be the occasion of so much mis chief to the public He then advanced many prudential reasons in order to dissuade Ben jam n (whom we shall hereafter call Partridge) from his purpose but all were in vain Part ridge relied strongly on his dream of the milk white mare Besides sir says he I promise you I have as good an inclination to the cause as any man can possibly have and go I will whether you admit me to go in your company or not.

Jones who was as much pleased with Part ridge as Partridge could be with him and who had not consulted his own inclination but the good of the other in desiring him to stay behind when he found his friend so resolute at last gave his consent but then recollecting himself he said Perhaps Mr Partridge you think I shall be able to support you but I really am not and then taking out his purse he told out nine guineas which he declared were his whole fortune

Partridge answered That his dependence was only on his future favour for he was thoroughly convinced he would shortly have enough in his power At present sir said he I believe I am rather the richer man of the two but all I have is at your service and at your disposal I insist upon your taking the whole and I beg only to attend you in the quality of your servant *Nil desperandum est Teucro duce et auspice Teucro but to this generous proposal concerning the money Jones would by no means submit

It was resolved to set out the next morning when a difficulty arose concerning the baggage for the portmanteau of Mr Jones was too large to be carr ed without a horse

If I may presume to give my advice says Partridge this portmanteau with everything in it except a few shirts should be left be hind Those I shall be easily able to carry for you and the rest of your cloaths will remain very safe locked up in my house

This method was no sooner proposed than agreed to and then the barber departed in order to prepare everything for his intended expedition

Chapter 7

Containing better reasons than any which have yet appeared for the conduct of Partridge an apology for the weakness of Jones and some further anecdotes concerning my landlady

THOUGH Partridge was one of the most superstitious of men he would hardly perhaps have desired to accompany Jones on his expe dition merely from the omens of the joint stool and white mare if his prospect had been no better than to have shared the plunder gained for any reason which he had heard ass gned He concluded therefore that the whole was a fiction and that Jones of whom he had often from his correspondents heard the wildest character had in reality run away from his father It came into his head therefore that if he could prevail with the young gentleman to return back to his father he should by that means render a service to Allworthy which would obliterate all his former anger nay in deed he conceived that very anger was coun terfeited and that Allworthy had sacrificed

not conceive that any other should think him

* Let us despa r of noth ng while Teucer is our leader and we are under his ausp ces

guilty lastly from the allowance which he had privately received long after the annuity had been publickly taken from him and which he looked upon as a kind of smart money or rather by way of atonement for injustice for it is very uncommon I believe for men to ascribe the benefactions they receive to pure charity when they can possibly impute them to any other motive If he could by any means therefore persuade the young gentleman to return home he doubted not but that he should again be received into the favour of Allworthy [illegible] for his pains nay and [illegible] wished more heartily [illegible]

As for Jones he was well satisfied with the truth of what the other had asserted and believed that Partridge had no other inducements but love to him and zeal for the cause a blameable want of caution and diffidence in the veracity of others in which he was highly worthy of censure To say the truth there are but two ways by which men become possessed of this excellent quality The one is from long experience and the other is from nature which last I presume is often meant by genius or great natural parts and it is infinitely the better of the two not only as we are masters of it much earlier in life but as it is much more infallible and conclusive for a man who hath been imposed on by ever so many may still hope to find others more honest whereas he who receives certain necessary admonitions from within that this is impossible must have very little understanding indeed if he ever renders himself liable to be once deceived As Jones had not this gift from nature he was too young to have gained it by experience for at the diffident wisdom which is to be acquired this way we seldom arrive till very late in life which is perhaps the reason why some old men are apt to despise the understandings of all [illegible] re a little younger than themselves [illegible] he com [illegible] ter [illegible] the husband of the [illegible] ely made his descent downstairs after a long fit of the gout in which distemper he was generally confined to his room during one half of the year and during the rest he walked about the house smoaked his pipe and drank his bottle with his friends without concerning himself in the least with any kind of business. He had been bred as they call it a gentleman that is bred up to do nothing and had spent a very small fortune which he inherited from an industrious farmer his uncle in hunting, horse racing and cock fighting and had been married by my landlady for certain purposes which he had long since desisted from answering for which she hated him heartily But as he was a surly kind of fellow so she contented herself with frequently upbraiding him by disadvantageous comparisons with her first husband whose praise she had eternally in her mouth and as she was for the most part mistress of the profit so she was satisfied to take upon herself the care and government of the family and after a long successless struggle to suffer her husband to be master of himself

In the evening when Jones retired to his room a small dispute arose between this fond couple concerning him — What says the wife you have been tippling with the gentleman I see?" — "Yes answered the husband we have cracked a bottle together and a very gentlemanlike man he is and hath a very pretty notion of horse flesh Indeed he is young and hath not seen much of the world for I believe he hath been at very few horse-races — Oho! he is one of your order is he? replies the landlady he must be a gentleman to be sure if he is a horse-racer The devil fetch such gentry! I am sure I wish I had never seen any of them I have reason to love horse-racers truly! — That you have says the husband for I was one you know — Yes, answered she you are a pure one indeed As my first husband used to say I may put all the good I have ever got by you in my eyes and see never the worse — D—n your first husband! cries he Don t d—n a better man than yourself answered the wife if he had been alive you durst not have done it — "Then you think says he I have not so much courage as yourself for you have d—n d him often in my hearing — If I did says she I have repented of it many s the good time and oft And if he was so good to forgive me a word spoken in haste or so it doth not become such a one as you to twitter me He was a husband to me he was and if ever I did make use of an ill word or so in a passion I never called him rascal I should have told a lie if I had called him rascal Much more she said but not in his hearing for having lighted his pipe he staggered off as fast as he could We shall therefore transcribe no more of her speech as it approached still nearer and nearer to a subject too indelicate to find any place in this history

Early in the morning Partridge appeared ...ed for his other trades he was no indifferent taylor He had already put up his whole stock of linen in it consisting of four shirts to which he now added eight for Mr Jones and then the reckoning

The landlady was as we have said absolute governess in these regions it was therefore necessary to comply with her rules so the bill was presently writ out which amounted to a much larger sum than might have been expected from the entertainment which Jones had met with But here we are obliged to disclose some maxims which publicans hold to ... The first

equipages 2dly To charge the same for the very worst provisions as if they were the best And lastly If any of their guests call but for little to make them pay a double price for everything they have so that the amount by the head may be much the same know not whence it is but all those who get their livelihood by people of fashion contract as much insolence to the rest of mankind as if they really belonged to that rank themselves.

The bill being made and discharged Jones ...

Chapter 8

Jones arrives at Gloucester and goes to the Bell the character of that house and of a petty fogger which he there meets with

Mr. Jones and Partridge or Little Benjamin (which epithet of Little was perhaps given him ironically he being in reality near six feet high) having left their last quarters in the manner before described travelled on to Gloucester without meeting any adventure worth relating

Being arrived here they chose for their house of entertainment the sign of the Bell an excellent house indeed and which I do is absolutely untainted with ...

be conscious of this and ... tions she seems perfectly contented with and resigned to that state of life to which she is istical notions as her husband ... for she freely confesses that her brother's documents made at first some impression upon her and that she had put herself to the expense of a long hood in order to attend the extraordi... but having found

sect To be concise she is a ... natured woman and so industrious to oblige that the guests must be of a very morose disposition who are not extremely well satisfied in her house

Mrs Whitefield happened to be in the yard when Jones and his attendant marched in Her sagacity soon discovered in the air of our heroe something which distinguished him from the vulgar She ordered her servants therefore immediately to show him into a room and ... afterwards invited him to dinner vided would have been fasting and so long a walk

Besides Mr Jones and the good governess of the mansion there sat down at table an at... indeed the very same who there was likewise present an ... stiled himself a lawyer and who lived somewhere near Linlinch in Somersetshire This fellow, I say, stiled himself a lawyer, but was indeed a most vile petty fogger, without sense or knowledge of any kind, one of those who may be termed train bearers to the law, a sort of supernumeraries in the profession, who are the hackneys of attorneys and will ride more miles for half a crown than a postboy

During the time of dinner, the Somerset shire lawyer recollected the face of Jones, which he had seen at Mr Allworthy's for he had often visited in that gentleman's kitchen He therefore took occasion to enquire after the good family there with that familiarity which would have become an intimate friend or acquaintance of Mr Allworthy, and indeed he did all in his power to insinuate himself to ... h he had never had the honour ... higher

tions with much ... membered to have seen the petty fogger be fore and though he concluded from the out ward appearance and behaviour of the man, that he usurped a freedom with his betters, to which he was by no means intitled

As the conversation of fellows of this kind is of all others the most detestable to men of any sense the cloth was no sooner removed than Mr Jones withdrew and a little barbar ously left poor Mrs Whitefield to do a pen ance, which I have often heard Mr Timothy Harris and other publicans of good taste la ment as the severest lot annexed to their call ing namely that of being obliged to keep ... th their guests

... than ... ked Mrs ... fine spark was? She answered She had ne ... seen the gentleman before —'The gentleman in deed!' replied the petty fogger 'a pretty gen tleman truly' Why he s the bastard of a fellow who was hanged for horse-stealing He was dropt at Squire Allworthy s door where one of the servants found him in a box so full of rain water, that he would certainly have been drowned, had he not been reserved for an other fate'— Ay ay you need not mention it, I protest we understand what that fate is very well," cries Dowling with a most facetious grin —' Well continued the other, the squire ordered him to be taken in, for he is a timbersome man everybody knows, and was afraid of drawing himself into a scrape, and there the bastard was bred up and fed and cloathified all to the world like any gentleman, and there he got one of the servant maids with child, and persuaded her to swear it to the squire himself, and afterwards he broke the arm of one Mr. Thwackum a clergyman, only because he reprimanded him for following whores, and afterwards he snapt a pistol at Mr Blifil behind his back, and once when Squire Allworthy was sick, he got a drum and beat it all over the house to prevent him from sleeping, and twenty other pranks he hath played for all which, about four or five days ago just before I left the country, the squire stripped him stark naked, and turned him out of doors"

"And very justly too, I protest," cries Dowl ing "I would turn my own son out of doors, if he was guilty of half as much And pray what is the name of this pretty gentleman?'

"The name o' un?" answered Petty fogger, "why, he is called Thomas Jones"

"Jones!" answered Dowling a little eagerly, "what Mr Jones that lived at Mr Allworthy's? was that the gentleman that dined with us?' —"The very same" said the other "I have heard of the gentleman," cries Dowling 'often, but I never heard any ill character of him'— "And I am sure," says Mrs Whitefield "if half what this gentleman hath said be true, Mr Jones hath the most deceitful countenance I ever saw for sure his looks promise something very different and I must say, for the little I have seen of him, he is as civil a well bred man as you would wish to converse with"

Petty fogger calling to mind that he had not been sworn, as he usually was, before he gave his evidence, now bound what he had declared with so many oaths and imprecations that the landlady's ears were shocked, and she put a stop to his swearing by assuring him of her belief Upon which he said, "I hope, madam you imagine I would scorn to tell such things of any man, unless I knew them to be true What interest have I in taking away the repu tation of a man who never injured me? I promise you every syllable of what I have said is fact and the whole country knows it"

As Mrs Whitefield had no reason to suspect that the petty fogger had any motive or temp tation to abuse Jones the reader cannot blame her for believing what he so confidently af firmed with many oaths She accordingly gave up her skill in physiognomy, and hencefor wards conceived so ill an opinion of her guest that she heartily wished him out of her house

This dislike was now farther increased by a report which Mr Whitefield made from the kitchen, where Partridge had informed the company, 'that though he carried the knapsack, and contented himself with staying among servants, while Tom Jones (as he called him) was regaling in the parlour, he was not his servant, but only a friend and companion, and as good a gentleman as Mr Jones himself'

Dowling sat all this while silent, biting his fingers, making faces, grinning, and looking wonderfully arch, at last he opened his lips and protested that the gentleman looked like another sort of man. He then called for his bill with the utmost haste, declared he must be at Hereford that evening, lamented his great hurry of business, and wished he could divide himself into twenty pieces, in order to be at once in twenty places

The petty fogger now likewise departed and then Jones desired the favour of Mrs Whitefield s company to drink tea with him, but she refused, and with a manner so different from that with which she had received him at dinner, that it a little surprized him And now he soon perceived her behaviour totally changed for instead of that natural affability which we have before celebrated, she wore a constrained severity on her countenance which was so disagreeable to Mr Jones, that he resolved, however late, to quit the house that evening

He did indeed account somewhat unfairly for this sudden change, for besides some hard and unjust surmises concerning female fickleness and mutability he began to suspect that he owed this want of civility to his want of horses, a sort of animals which, as they dirty no sheets, are thought in inns to pay better for their beds than their riders, and are therefore considered as the more desirable company, but Mrs Whitefield to do her justice, had a much more liberal way of thinking She was perfectly well bred and could be very civil to a gentleman though he walked on foot In reality, she looked on our heroe as a sorry scoundrel and therefore treated him as such for which not even Jones himself had he known as much as the reader could have blamed her; nay on the contrary, he must have approved her conduct, and have esteemed her the more for the disrespect shown towards himself This is indeed a most aggravating circumstance, which attends depriving men unjustly of their reputation for a man who is conscious of having an ill character, cannot justly be angry with those who neglect and slight him but ought rather to despise such as affect his conversation, unless where a perfect intimacy must have convinced them that their friend s character hath been falsely and injuriously aspersed

This was not, however, the case of Jones, for as he was a perfect stranger to the truth, so he was with good reason offended at the treat against it to no purpose, at last condescended to take up his knapsack and to attend his friend.

Chapter 9

Containing several dialogues between Jones brink of making a fatal discovery to his friend

THE shadows began now to descend larger from the high mountains, the feathered creation had betaken themselves to their rest Now the highest order of mortals were sitting down to their dinners, and the lowest order to their suppers In a word, the clock struck five just as Mr Jones took his leave of Gloucester, an hour at which (as it was now mid winter) the dirty fingers of Night would have drawn her sable curtain over the universe, had not the moon forbid her, who now, with a face as broad and as red as those of some jolly mortals who like her, turn night into day began to rise from her bed where she had slumbered away the

Partridge the story from the Spectator of two lovers who had agreed to entertain themselves when they were at a great distance from each other by repairing at a certain fixed hour, to look at the moon thus pleasing themselves with the thought that they were both employed in contemplating the same object at the same time 'Those lovers,' added he, 'must have had souls truly capable of feeling all the tenderness of the sublimest of all human passions."—' Very probably," cries Partridge 'but

I envy them more, if they had bodies incapable of feeling cold, for I am almost frozen to death, and am very much afraid I shall lose a piece of my nose before we get to another house of entertainment Nay, truly, we may well expect some judgment should happen to us for our folly in running away so by night from one of the most excellent inns I ever set [illegible]

he may there And to forsake such a house, and go a rambling about the country, the Lord knows whither, per devia rura viarum, I say nothing for my part, but some people might not have charity enough to conclude we were in our sober senses' —"Fie upon it, Mr Partridge!" says Jones, 'have a better heart con sider you are going to face an enemy, and are you afraid of facing a little cold? I wish, indeed, we had a guide to advise which of these roads we should take "—' May I be so bold," says Partridge, 'to offer my advice? Interdum stultus opportuna loquitur"— Why, which of them,' cries Jones, 'would you recommend?' —' Truly neither of them' answered Partridge 'The only road we can be certain of finding is the road we came A good hearty pace will bring us back to Gloucester in an hour, but if we go forward the Lord Harry knows when we shall arrive at any place, for I see at least fifty miles before me and no house in all the way '—' You see, indeed, a very fair prospect, says Jones ' which receives great additional beauty from the extreme lustre of the moon However I will keep the left-hand track as that seems to lead directly to those hills, which we were informed lie not far from Worcester And here if you are inclined to quit me you may and return back again, [illegible] advised hath been as much on your account as on my own but since you are determined to go on, I am as much determined to follow I præ sequar te"

They now travelled some miles without speaking to each other during which suspense of discourse Jones often sighed and Benjamin groaned as bitterly, though from a very different reason At length Jones made a full stop, and turning about cries Who knows Partridge, but the loveliest creature in the universe may have her eyes now fixed on that very moon which I behold at this instant? Very likely sir," answered Partridge, "and if my eyes were [illegible] of roast beef, the devil [illegible]

wast thou ever susceptible of love in thy life, or hath time worn away all the traces of it from thy memory?' "Alack a-day!" cries Partridge, "well would it have been for me if I had never known what love was Infandum regina jubes renovare dolorem I am sure I have tasted all the tenderness, and sublimities and bitternesses of the passion" "Was your mistress unkind, then?" says Jones "Very unkind indeed, sir," answered Partridge, "for she married me, and made one of the most con founded wives in the world However, heaven be praised, she's gone, and if I believed she was in the moon, according to a book I once read, which teaches that to be the receptacle of departed spirits I would never look at it for fear of seeing her, but I wish, sir, that the moon was a looking glass for your sake, and [illegible]

I am certain could never have entered into any mind but that of a lover O Partridge! could I hope once again to see that face, but, alas! all those golden dreams are vanished for ever, [illegible]

Miss Western again?' answered Partridge, if you will follow my advice I will engage you shall not only see her but have her in your arms" ' Ha! do not awaken a thought of that nature," cries Jones "I have struggled sufficiently to conquer all such wishes already" ' Nay," answered Partridge, "if you do not wish to have your mistress in your arms you are a most extraordinary lover indeed" ' Well, well," says Jones "let us avoid this subject; but pray what is your advice?' "To give it you in the military phrase, then," says Partridge "as we are soldiers 'To the right about' Let us return the way we came, we may yet reach Gloucester to night, though late, whereas, if we proceed we are likely for aught I see, to ramble about for ever without coming either to house or home' ' I have already told you my resolution is to go on," answered Jones but I would have you go back. I am obliged to you for your company hither and I beg you to accept a guinea as a small instance of my gratitude Nay, it would be cruel in me to suf beg sir, you will put it up, I will receive none of you at this time, for at present I am, I believe, the richer man of the two And as your resolution is to go on so mine is to follow you if you do Nay, now my presence appears absolutely necessary to take care of you, since your intentions are so desperate, for I promise you my views are much more prudent, as you are resolved to fall in battle if you can, so I am resolved as firmly to come to no hurt if I can help it. And, indeed, I have the comfort to think there will be but little danger, for a popish priest told me the other day the business would soon be over, and he believed without a battle" "A popish priest!" cries Jones, 'I have heard is not always to be believed when he speaks in behalf of his religion" "Yes, but so far," answered the other, "from speaking in behalf of his religion he assured me the Catholicks did not expect to be any gainers by the change, for that Prince Charles was as good a Protestant as any in England, and that nothing but regard to right made him and the rest of the popish party to be Jacobites"—"I believe him to be as much a Protestant as I believe he hath any right," says Jones, "and I make no doubt of our success, but not without a battle So that I am not so sanguine as your friend the popish priest" "Nay, to be sure, sir," answered Partridge, "all the prophecies I have ever read speak of a great deal of blood to be spilt in the quarrel, and the miller with three thumbs, who is now alive, is to hold the horses of three kings, up to his knees in blood Lord, have mercy upon us all and send better times!" "With what stuff and nonsense hast thou filled thy head!' answered Jones 'this too I suppose, comes from the popish priest Monsters and prodigies are the proper arguments to support monstrous and absurd doctrines The cause of King George is the cause of liberty and true religion In other words it is the cause of common sense, my boy, and I warrant you will succeed though Briarius himself was to rise again with his hundred thumbs, and to turn miller" Partridge made no reply to this He was, indeed cast into the utmost confusion by this declaration of Jones For, to

cluded that Jones was of the same party, and was now proceeding to join the rebels An opinion which was not without foundation For the tall, long sided dame, mentioned by truth She had, indeed, changed the name of Sophia into that of the Pretender, and had re-entertained the above-mentioned opinion of Jones and which he had almost discovered to him before he found out his own mistake And at this the reader will be the less inclined to wonder, if he pleases to recollect the doubtful phrase in which Jones first communicated his resolution to Mr Partridge, and, indeed had the words been less ambiguous, Partridge might very well have construed them as he did, being persuaded as he was that the whole nation

rest of the people

But however well affected he might be to James or Charles he was still much more attached to Little Benjamin than to either, for which reason he no sooner discovered the principles of his fellow traveller than he thought proper to conceal and outwardly give up his own to the man on whom he depended for the making his fortune, since he by no means believed the affairs of Jones to be so desperate as they really were with Mr Allworthy, for as he had kept a constant correspondence with some of his neighbours since he left that country he had heard much, indeed more than was true of the great affection Mr Allworthy bore this young man, who, as Partridge had been instructed, was to be that gentleman's heir, and whom, as we have said, he did not in the least doubt to be his son

He imagined therefore that whatever quarrel was between them, it would be certainly made up at the return of Mr Jones, an event curing his return he doubted not, as we have before said but it would as highly advance him in the favour of Mr Allworthy.

We have already observed that he was a very good natured fellow, and he hath himself declared the violent attachment he had to the person and character of Jones but possibly the views which I have just before mentioned, might likewise have some little share in prompting him to undertake this expedition, at least in urging him to continue it, after he had discovered that his master and himself like some prudent fathers and sons though they travelled together in great friendship, had embraced opposite parties I am led into this conjecture, by having remarked that though love, friendship, esteem, and such like, have very powerful operations in the human mind interest, however, is an ingredient seldom omitted by wise men, when they would work others to their own purposes This is indeed a most excellent medicine, and, like Ward's pill, flies at once to the particular part of the body on which you desire to operate, whether it be the tongue, the hand or any other member, where it scarce ever fails of immediately producing the desired effect

Chapter 10

In which our travellers meet with a very extraordinary adventure

Just as Jones and his friend came to the end of their dialogue in the preceding chap [illegible] at the bottom of a very steep [illegible] his [illegible] At [illegible] said, Partridge, I wis[illegible] hill it must certainly afford a most charming prospect especially by this light for the solemn gloom which the moon casts on all objects, is beyond expression beautiful especially to an imagination which is desirous of cultivating melancholy ideas -- Very probably ' answered Partridge but if the top of the hill be properest to produce melancholy thoughts, I suppose the bottom is the likeliest to produce merry ones and these I take to be much the better of the two I protest you have made my blood run cold with the very mentioning the top of that mountain which seems to me to be one of the highest in the world No, no, if we look for anything, let it be for a place under ground, to screen ourselves from the frost."--"Do so," said Jones let it be but within hearing of this place and I will hallow to you at my return back -- Surely sir you are not mad," said Partridge --' Indeed, I am," answered Jones, ' if ascending this hill be madness, but as you complain so much of the cold already, I would have you stay below. I will certainly return to you within an hour"--"Pardon me, sir," cries Partridge, "I have determined to follow you wherever you go" Indeed he was now afraid to stay behind, for though he was coward enough in all respects, yet his chief fear was that of ghosts, with which the present time of night, and the wildness of the place, extremely well suited

At this instant Partridge espied a glimmering light through some trees which seemed very near to them He immediately cried out in a rapture, ' Oh, sir! Heaven hath at last heard my prayers, and hath brought us to a house, perhaps it may be an inn Let me beseech you, sir, if you have any compassion either for me or yourself, do not despise the goodness of Providence, but let us go directly to yon light Whether it be a public house or no I am sure if they be Christians that dwell there, they will not refuse a little house-room to persons in our miserable condition " Jones at length yielded to the earnest supplications of Partridge and both together made directly towards the place whence the light issued.

They soon arrived at the door of this house, or cottage, for it might be called either, without much impropriety Here Jones knocked several times without receiving any answer from within at which Partridge, whose head was full of nothing but of ghosts, devils, witches, and such like, began to tremble, crying ' Lord, have mercy upon us! surely the people must be all dead I can see no light neither now and yet I am certain I saw a candle burning but a moment before --Well' I have heard of such things "--"What hast thou heard of?' said Jones "The people are either fast asleep, or probably, as this is a lonely place, are afraid to open their door " He then began to vociferate pretty loudly, and at last an old woman, opening an upper casement asked, Who they were, and what they wanted? Jones answered, They were travellers who had lost their way and having seen a light in the window had been led thither in hopes of finding some fire to warm themselves "Whoever you are cries the woman "you have no business here, nor shall I open the door to any one at this time of night " Partridge, whom the sound of a human voice had recovered from his fright, fell to the most earnest supplications to be admitted for a few minutes to the fire, saying, he was almost dead with the cold to which fear had indeed contributed equally with the frost He assured her that the gentleman who spoke to her was one of the greatest squires in the country and made use of every argument save one which Jones afterwards effectually added and this was the promise of half a-crown —a bribe too great to be resisted by such a person especially as the genteel appearance of Jones which the light of the moon plainly discovered to her together with his affable behaviour had entirely subdued those apprehensions of thieves which she had at first conceived She agreed therefore at last to let them in where Partridge to his infinite joy found a good fire ready for his reception

The poor fellow however had no sooner warmed himself, than those thoughts which were always uppermost in his mind began a little to disturb his brain There was no article of his creed in which he had a stronger faith than he had in witchcraft nor can the reader conceive a figure more adapted to inspire this idea than the old woman who now stood before him She answered exactly to that picture drawn by Otway in his Orphan Indeed if this woman had lived in the reign of James the First her appearance alone would have hanged her almost without any evidence

Many circumstances likewise conspired to confirm Partridge in his opinion Her living as he then imagined by herself in so lonely a place and in a house the outside of which seemed much too good for her but its inside was furnished in the most neat and elegant manner To say the truth Jones himself was not a little surprized at what he saw for besides the extraordinary neatness of the room it was adorned with a great number of nicknacks and curiosities which might have engaged the attention of a virtuoso

While Jones was admiring these things and Partridge sat trembling with the firm belief that he was in the house of a witch the old woman said I hope gentlemen you will make what haste you can for I expect my master presently and I would not for double the money he should find you here — Then you have a master? cried Jones Indeed you will excuse me good woman but I was surprized to see all those fine things in your house — "Ah sir said she if the twentieth part of these things were mine I should think myself a rich woman But pray sir do not stay much longer for I look for him in every minute — "Why sure he would not be angry with you " said Jones for doing a common act of charity? — Alack a-day sir! said she he is a strange man not at all like other people He keeps no company with anybody and seldom walks out but by night for he doth not care to be seen and all the country people are as much afraid of meeting him for his dress is enough to frighten those who are not used to it They call him the Man of the Hill (for there he walks by night) and the country people are not I believe more afraid of the devil himself He would be terribly angry if he found you here — Pray sir says Partridge don t let us offend the gentleman I am ready to walk and was never warmer in my life Do pray sir let us go Here are pistols over the chimney who knows whether they be charged or no or what he may do with them? — Fear nothing Partridge cries Jones I will secure thee from danger "— Nay for matter o that he never doth any mischief said the woman but to be sure it is necessary he should keep some arms for his own safety for his house hath been beset more than once and it is not many nights ago that we thought we heard thieves about it for my own part I have often wondered that he is not murdered by some villain or other as he walks out by himself at such hours but then as I said the people are afraid of him and besides they think I suppose he hath nothing about him worth taking — I should imagine by this collection of rarities cries Jones that your master had been a traveller "— Yes sir answered she he hath been a very great one there be few gentlemen that know more of all matters than he I fancy he hath been crost in love or whatever it is I know not but I have lived with him above these thirty years and in all that time he hath hardly spoke to six living people She then again solicited their departure in which she was backed by Partridge but Jones purposely protracted the time for his curiosity was greatly raised to see this extraordinary person Though the old woman therefore concluded every one of her answers with desiring him to be gone and Partridge proceeded so far as to pull him by the sleeve he still continued to invent new questions till the old woman with an affrighted countenance, declared she heard her master s signal and at the same instant more than one voice was heard without the door crying D—n your blood show us your money this instant Your money you villain or we will blow your brains about your ears

O good heaven! cries the old woma

'some villains to be sure have attacked my master O la! what shall I do? what shall I do? — How! cries Jones how!—Are these pistols loaded? — O good sir there is nothing in them indeed O pray don t murder us gentlemen! (for in reality she now had the same opinion of those within as she had of those without) Jones made her no answer but snatching an old broad sword which hung in the room he instantly sallied out where he found the old gentleman struggling with two ruffians and begging for mercy Jones asked no questions but fell so briskly to work with his broad sword that the fellows immediately quitted their hold and without offering to attack our heroe betook themselves to their heels and made their escape for he did not attempt to pursue them being contented with having delivered the old gentleman and in deed he concluded he had pretty well done their business for both of them as they ran off cried out with bitter oaths that they were dead men

Jones presently ran to lift up the old gentleman who had been thrown down in the scuffle expressing at the same time great concern lest he should have received any harm from the villains The old man stared a moment at Jones and then cried No sir no I have very little harm I thank you Lord have mercy upon me! — I see sir said Jones you are not free from apprehensions even of those who have had the happiness to be your deliverers nor can I blame any suspicions which you may have but indeed you have no real occasion for any here are none but your friends present Having mist our way this cold night we took the liberty of warming our selves at your fire whence we were just de parting when we heard you call for assistance which I must say Providence alone seems to have sent you — Providence indeed cries the old gentleman if it be so — So it is I assure you cries Jones Here is your own sword sir I have used it in your defence and I now return it into your hand The old man having received the sword which was stained with the blood of his enemies looked stedfastly at Jones during some moments and then with a sigh cried out You will pardon me young gentleman I was not always of a suspicious temper nor am I a friend to ingratitude"

Be thankful then cries Jones to that Providence to which you owe your deliverance as to my part I have only discharged the common duties of humanity and what I would have done for any fellow creature in your situation — Let me look at you a little longer cries the old gentleman You are a human creature then? Well perhaps you are Come pray walk into my little hutt You have been my deliverer indeed

The old woman was distracted between the fears which she had of her master and for him and Partridge was if possible in a greater fright The former of these however when she heard her master speak kindly to Jones and perceived what had happened came again to herself but Partridge no sooner saw the gentleman than the strangeness of his dress infused greater terrors into that poor fellow than he had before felt, either from the strange description which he had heard or from the uproar which had happened at the door

To say the truth it was an appearance which might have affected a more constant mind than that of Mr Partridge This person was of the tallest size with a long beard as white as snow His body was cloathed with the skin of an ass made something into the form of a coat He wore likewise boots on his legs and a cap on his head both composed of the skin of some other animals

As soon as the old gentleman came into his house the old woman began her congratulations on his happy escape from the ruffians Yes cried he I have escaped indeed thanks to my preserver — O the blessing on him! answered she he is a good gentleman I warrant him I was afraid your worship would have been angry with me for letting him in and to be certain I should not have done it had not I seen by the moon light that he was a gentleman and almost frozen to death And to be certain it must have been some good angel that sent him hither and tempted me to do it

I am afraid sir said the old gentleman to Jones that I have nothing in this house which you can either eat or drink unless you will accept a dram of brandy of which I can give you some most excellent and which I have had by me these thirty years Jones declined this offer in a very civil and proper speech and then the other asked him 'Whither he was travelling when he mist his way? saying I must own myself surprized to see such a person as you appear to be journeying on foot at this time of night I suppose sir you are a gentleman of these parts for you do not look like one who is used to travel far without horses?

Appearances cried Jones are often deceitful men sometimes look what they are not I assure you I am not of this country and whither I am travelling in reality I scarce know myself

Whoever you are or whithersoever you are going answered the old man I have obligations to you wh ch I can never return

I once more replied Jones affirm that you have none for there can be no merit in having hazarded that in your service on which I set no value and nothing is so contemptible in my eyes as life

I am sorry young gentleman answered the stranger that you have any reason to be so unhappy at your years

Indeed I am sir answered Jones the most unhappy of mankind — Perhaps you have had a friend or a mistress? replied the other How could you cries Jones mention two words sufficient to drive me to distraction? — Either of them are enough to drive any man to distraction answered the old man I enquire no farther s r perhaps my curiosity hath led me too far already

Indeed sir cries Jones I cannot censure a passion which I feel at this instant in the highest degree You will pardon me when I assure you that everything which I have seen or heard since I first entered this house hath conspired to raise the greatest curiosity in me Something very extraordinary must have determined you to this course of life and I have reason to fear your own history is not without misfortunes

Here the old gentleman again sighed and remained silent for some minutes at last looking earnestly on Jones he said I have read that a good countenance is a letter of recommendation if so none ever can be more strongly recommended than yourself If I d d not feel some yearnings towards you from another consideration I must be the most ungrateful monster upon earth and I am really concerned it is no otherwise in my power than by words to convince you of my gratitude

Jones after a moment s hesitation answered, That it was in his power by words to gratify him extremely I have confest a curiosity sa d he sir need I say how much obliged I should be to you if you would condescend to gratify it? Will you suffer me therefore to beg unless any consideration restrains you that you would be pleased to acquaint me what motives have induced you thus to withdraw from the society of mankind and to betake yourself to a course of l fe to which it sufficiently appears you were not born?

I scarce think myself at liberty to refuse you anything after what hath happened replied the old man If you desire therefore to hear the story of an unhappy man I will relate it to you Indeed you judge rightly in thinking there is commonly something extraordinary in the fortunes of those who fly from society for however it may seem a paradox or even a contradiction certain it is that great philanthropy chiefly inclines us to avoid and detest mankind not on account so much of their private and selfish vices but for those of a relative kind such as envy malice treachery cruelty and every other species of malevolence These are the vices which true philanthropy abhors and which rather than see and converse with she avoids society itself However without a compliment to you you do not appear to me one of those whom I should shun or detest nay I must say in what little hath dropt from you there appears some parity in our fortunes I hope however yours will conclude more successfully

Here some compliments passed between our heroe and his host and then the latter was going to begin his history when Partridge interrupted him His apprehensions had now pretty well left him but some effects of his terrors remained he therefore reminded the gentleman of that excellent brandy wh ch he had mentioned This was presently brought and Partridge swallowed a large bumper

The gentleman then without any farther preface began as you may read in the next chapter

Chapter 11

In which the Man of the Hill begins to relate his history

He had a little estate of about £300 a year of his own and rented another estate of near the same value He was prudent and industrious and so good a husbandman that he not make him poor for he confined her almost entirely at home and rather chose to bear eternal upbraidings in his own house than to injure his fortune by indulging her in the extravagancies she desired abroad

By this Xanthippe (so was the wife of Socrates called said Partridge)— by this Xan thippe he had two sons of which I was the younger He designed to give us both good education but my elder brother who un happily for him was the favourite of my mother utterly neglected his learning inso much that after having been five or six years at school with little or no improvement my home from the hands of that tyrant as she called his master though indeed he gave the lad much less correction than his idleness de served but much more it seems than the young gentleman liked who constantly com plained to his mother of his severe treatment and she as constantly gave him a hearing

Yes yes cries Partridge I have seen such mothers I have been abused myself by them and very unjustly such parents deserve cor rection as much as their children

Jones chid the pedagogue for his interrup

but to his dog and gun with which latter he became so expert that though perhaps you may think it incredible he could not only hit a standing mark with great certainty but hath actually shot a crow as it was flying in the air He was likewise excellent at finding a hare sitting and was soon reputed one of the best sportsmen in the country a reputation which both he and his mother enjoyed as much as if he had been thought the finest scholar

The situation of my brother made me at first think my lot the harder in being con tinued at school but I soon changed my opinion for as I advanced pretty fast in learn ing my labours became easy and my exercise so delightful that holidays were my most un pleasant time for my mother who never loved larly by the parson of the parish than my brother she now hated my sight and made home so disagreeable to me that what is called by school boys Black Monday was to me the whitest in the whole year

Having at length gone through the school at Taunton I was thence removed to Exeter College in Oxford where I remained four years at the end of which an accident took me off entirely from my studies and hence I may truly date the rise of all which happened to me afterwards in life

There was at the same college with myself one Sir George Gresham a young fellow who was intitled to a very considerable fortune which he was not by the will of his father to come into full possession of till he arrived at the age of twenty five However the liberality of his guardians gave him little cause to regret the abundant caution of his father for they allowed him five hundred pounds a year while he remained at the university where he kept his horses and his whore and lived as wicked and as profligate a life as he could have done had he been never so entirely master of his fortune for besides the five hundred a year which he received from his guardians he found means to spend a thousand more He was above the age of twenty-one and had no difficulty in gaining what credit he pleased

This young fellow among many other tol erable bad qualities had one very diabolical He had a great delight in destroying and ruin ing the youth of inferior fortune by drawing them into expenses which they could not afford so well as himself and the better and worthier and soberer any young man was the greater pleasure and triumph had he in his destruction Thus acting the character which is recorded of the devil and going about seek ing whom he might devour

It was my misfortune to fall into an ac quaintance and intimacy with this gentleman My reputation of diligence in my studies made me a desirable object of his mischevous in tention and my own inclination made it suf ficiently easy for him to effect his purpose for though I had applied myself with much in dustry to books in which I took great delight there were other pleasures in which I was capable of taking much greater for I was high mettled had a violent flow of animal spirits was a little ambitious and extremely amorous

I had not long contracted an intimacy with Sir George before I became a partaker of all his pleasures and when I was once entered on that scene neither my inclination nor my spirit would suffer me to play an under part I was second to none of the company in any acts of debauchery nay I soon distinguished myself so notably in all riots and disorders that my name generally stood first in the roll of delinquents and instead of being lamented as the unfortunate pupil of Sir George I was now accused as the person who had misled and debauched that hopeful young gentleman for though he was the ringleader and promoter of all the mischief he was never so considered I fell at last under the censure of the vice-chancellor and very narrowly escaped expulsion

You will easily believe sir that such a life as I am now describing must be incompatible with my further progress in learning and that in proportion as I addicted myself more and more to loose pleasure I must grow more and more remiss in application to my studies This was truly the consequence but this was not all My expenses now greatly exceeded not only my former income but those additions which I extorted from my poor generous father on pretences of sums being necessary for preparing for my approaching degree of batchelor of arts These demands however grew at last so frequent and exorbitant that my father by slow degrees opened his ears to the accounts which he received from many quarters of my present behaviour and which my mother failed not to echo very faithfully and loudly, adding Ay this is the fine gentleman the scholar who doth so much honour to his family and is to be the making of it. I thought what all this learning would come to He is to be the ruin of us all I find after his elder brother hath been denied necessaries for his sake to perfect his education forsooth for which he was to pay us such interest I thought what the interest would come to with much more of the same kind but I have I believe satisfied you with this taste

My father therefore began now to return remonstrances instead of money to my demands, which brought my affairs perhaps a little sooner to a crisis but had he remitted me his whole income you will imagine it could have sufficed a very short time to support one who kept pace with the expenses of Sir George Gresham

It is more than possible that the distress I was now in for money and the impracticability of going on in this manner might have restored me at once to my senses and to my studies had I opened my eyes before I became involved in debts from which I saw no hopes of ever extricating myself This was indeed the great art of Sir George and by which he accomplished the ruin of many whom he afterwards laughed at as fools and coxcombs for vying as he called it with a man of his fortune To bring this about he would now and then advance a little money himself in order to support the credit of the unfortunate youth with other people till by means of that very credit he was irretrievably undone

"My mind being by these means grown as desperate as my fortune there was scarce a wickedness which I did not meditate in order for my relief Self murder itself became the subject of my serious deliberation and I had certainly resolved on it had not a more shameful though perhaps less sinful, thought expelled it from my head —Here he hesitated a moment, and then cried out I protest so many years have not washed away the shame of this act and I shall blush while I relate it Jones desired him to pass over anything that might give him pain in the relation but Partridge eagerly cried out Oh pray sir let us hear this I had rather hear this than all the rest as I hope to be saved I will never mention a word of it Jones was going to rebuke him but the stranger prevented it by proceeding thus I had a chum a very prudent frugal young lad who though he had no very large allowance had by his parsimony heaped up upwards of forty guineas which I knew he kept in his escritore I took therefore an opportunity of purloining his key from his breeches pocket while he was asleep and thus made myself master of all his riches after which I again conveyed his key into his pocket and counterfeiting sleep—though I never once closed my eyes, lay in bed till after he arose and went to prayers—an exercise to which I had long been unaccustomed

Timorous thieves by extreme caution often subject themselves to discoveries which those of a bolder kind escape Thus it happened to me for had I boldly broke open his escritore I had perhaps escaped even his suspicion but as it was plain that the person who robbed him had possessed himself of his key he had no doubt when he first missed his money but that his chum was certainly the thief Now as he was of a fearful disposition and much my inferior in strength and I believe in courage he did not dare to confront me with my guilt for fear of worse bodily consequences which might happen to him He repaired therefore immediately to the vice-chancellor and upon swearing to the robbery and to the circumstances of it, very easily obtained a warrant against one who had now so bad a character through the whole university

Luckily for me I lay out of the college the next evening for that day I attended a young lady in a chaise to Witney where we staid all night and in our return the next morning to Oxford I met one of my cronies who acquainted me with sufficient news concerning myself to make me turn my horse another way

Pray sir did he mention anything of the warrant? said Partridge But Jones begged the gentleman to proceed without regarding any impertinent questions which he did as follows --

Having now abandoned all thoughts of returning to Oxford the next thing which offered itself was a journey to London I imparted this intention to my female companion who at first remonstrated against it but upon producing my wealth she immediately consented We then struck across the country into the great Cirencester road and made such haste that we spent the next evening save one in London

When you consider the place where I now was and the company with whom I was you will I fancy conceive that a very short time brought me to an end of that sum of which I had so iniquitously possessed myself

I was now reduced to a much higher degree of distress than before the necessaries of life began to be numbered among my wants and what made my case still the more grievous was that my paramour of whom I was now grown immoderately fond shared the same distresses with myself To see a woman you love in distress to be unable to relieve her and at the same time to reflect that you have brought her into this situation is perhaps a curse of which no imagination can represent the horrors to those who have not felt it — I believe it from my soul cries Jones and I pity you from the bottom of my heart he then took two or three disorderly turns about the room and at last begged pardon and flung himself into his chair crying I thank Heaven I have escaped that"

"This circumstance continued the gentleman so severely aggravated the horrors of my present situation that they became absolutely intolerable I could with less pain endure the raging in my own natural unsatisfied appetites even hunger or thirst than I could submit to leave ungratified the most whimsical desires of a woman on whom I so extravagantly doated that though I knew she had been the mistress of half my acquaintance I firmly intended to marry her But the good creature was unwilling to consent to an action which the world might think so much to my disadvantage And as possibly, she compassionated the daily anxieties which she must have perceived me suffer on her account she resolved to put an end to my distress She soon indeed found means to relieve me from my troublesome and perplexed situation for while I was distracted with various inventions to supply her with pleasures she very kindly—betrayed me to one of her former lovers at Oxford by whose care and diligence I was immediately apprehended and committed to gaol

Here I first began seriously to reflect on the miscarriages of my former life on the errors I had been guilty of on the misfortunes which I had brought on myself and on the grief which I must have occasioned to one of the best of fathers When I added to all these the perfidy of my mistress such was the horror of [illegible]

unattended by shame

The time of the assizes soon came and I was removed by habeas corpus to Oxford where I expected certain conviction and condemnation but to my great surprize none appeared against me and I was at the end of the sessions discharged for want of procecution In short my chum had left Oxford and whether from indolence or from what other motive I am ignorant had declined concerning himself any farther in the affair

Perhaps cries Partridge ' he did not care to have your blood upon his hands and he was [illegible]

may laugh at me sir if you please answered Partridge but if you will hear a very short story which I can tell and which is most certainly true perhaps you may change your opinion In the parish where I was born— Here Jones would have silenced him but the stranger interceded that he might be permitted to tell his story and in the meantime promised to recollect the remainder of his own

Partridge then proceeded thus In the parish where I was born there lived a farmer whose name was Bridle and he had a son named

Francis a good hopeful young fellow I was at the grammar school with him where I remember he was got into Ovid s Epistles and he could construe you three lines together sometimes without looking into a dictionary Besides all this he was a very good lad never missed church o Sundays and was reckoned one of the best psalm singers in the whole parish He would indeed now and then take a cup too much and that was the only fault he had — Well but come to the ghost cries Jones

Never fear sir I shall come to him soon enough answered Partridge You must know then that farmer Bridle lost a mare a sorrel one to the best of my remembrance and so it fell out that this young Francis shortly afterward being at a fair at Hindon and as I think it was on—— I can t remember the day and being as he was what should he happen to meet but a man upon his father s mare Frank called out presently Stop thief and it being in the middle of the fair it was impossible you know for the man to make his escape So they apprehended him and carried him before the justice I remember it was Justice Willoughby of Noyle a very worthy good gentleman and he committed him to prison and bound Frank in a recognisance I think they call it—a hard word compounded of re and cognosco but it differs in its meaning from the use of the simple as many other compounds do Well at last down came my Lord Justice Page to hold the assizes and so the fellow was had up and Frank was had up for a witness To be sure I shall never forget the face of the judge when he began to ask him what he had to say against the prisoner He made poor Frank tremble and shake in his shoes Well you fellow says my lord what have you to say? Don t stand humming and hawing but speak out But however he soon turned altogether as civil to Frank and began to thunder at the fellow and when he asked him if he had anything to say for himself the fellow said he had found the horse Ay! answered the judge thou art a lucky fellow I have travelled the circuit these forty years and never found a horse in my life but I ll tell thee what friend thou wast more lucky than thou didst know of for thou didst not only find a horse but a halter too I promise thee To be sure I shall never forget the word Upon which everybody fell a laughing as how could they help it? Nay and twenty other jests he made which I can t remember now There was something about his skill in horse-flesh which made all the folks laugh To be certain the judge must have been a very brave man as well as a man of much sel was not suffered to speak for him though he desired only to be heard one very short word but my lord would not hearken to him though he suffered a counsellor to talk against him for above half an hour I thought it hard I own that there should be so many of them my lord and the court and the jury and the counsellors and the witnesses all upon one poor man and he too in chains Well the fellow was hanged as to be sure it could be no otherwise and poor Frank could never be easy about it He never was in the dark alone but he fancied he saw the fellow s spirit — Well and is this thy story? cries Jones No no answered Partridge O Lord have mercy upon me! I am just now coming to the matter for one night coming from the alehouse in a long narrow dark lane there he ran directly up against him and the spirit was all in white and fell upon Frank and Frank who was a sturdy lad fell upon the spirit again and there they had a tussel together and poor Frank was dreadfully beat indeed he made a shift at last to crawl home but what with the beating and what with the fright he lay ill above a fortnight and all this is most certainly true and the whole parish will bear witness to it

The stranger smiled at this story and Jones burst into a loud fit of laughter upon which Partridge cried Ay you may laugh sir and so did some others particularly a squire who is thought to be no better than an atheist who forsooth because there was a calf with a white face found dead in the same lane the next morning would fain have it that the battle

Well sir" said Jones to the stranger Mr Partridge hath finished his story and I hope will give you no future interruption if you will be so kind to proceed He then resumed his narration but as he hath taken breath for a while we think proper to give it to our reader and shall therefore put an end to this chapter

Chapter 12

In which the Man of the Hill continues his history

I HAD NOW regained my liberty said the stranger but I had lost my reputation for there is a wide difference between the case of a man who is barely acquitted of a crime in a court of justice and of him who is acquitted in his own heart and in the opinion of the people I was conscious of my guilt and ashamed to look any one in the face so resolved to leave Oxford the next morning before the daylight discovered me to the eyes of any beholders

When I had got clear of the city it first entered into my head to return home to my father and endeavour to obtain his forgiveness but as I had no reason to doubt his knowledge whether I could have had the assurance to behold him or whether I could upon any terms have submitted to live and converse with those who I was convinced knew me to have been

you have the advantage of solitude without its disadvantage since you may be alone and in company at the same time and while you walk or sit unobserved noise hurry and a constant success on of objects entertain the mind and prevent the spirits from preying on themselves or rather on grief or shame which are the most unwholesome diet in the world and on which

But as there is scarce any human good without its concomitant evil so there are people who find an inconvenience in this unobserv led by those who do not know you And a man may be as easily starved in Leadenhall market as in the deserts of Arabia

"It was as present my fortune to be destitute of that great evil as it is apprehended to be by several writers who I suppose were overburthened with it namely money — With submission sir said Partridge I do not remember any writers who have called it malorum but irritamenta malorum Effodiuntur opes irritamenta malorum *— Well sir continued the stranger whether it be an evil or only the cause of evil I was entirely void of it and at the same time of friends and as I thought of acquaintance when one evening as I was passing through the Inner Temple very hungry and very miserable I heard a voice on a sudden hailing me with great familiarity by my Christian name and upon my turning about I presently recollected the person who so saluted me to have been my fellow collegiate one who had left the university above a year and long before any of my misfortunes had befallen me This gentleman whose name was Watson shook me heartily by the hand and expressing great joy at meeting me proposed our immediately drinking a bot

in my pocket yet not without framing a lie for an excuse and imputing it to my having changed my breeches that morning Mr Watson answered I thought Jack you and I had been too old acquaintance for you to mention such a matter He then took me by the arm and was pulling me along but I gave him very little trouble for my own inclinations pulled me much stronger than he could do

We then went into the Friars which you know is the scene of all mirth and jollity Here when we arrived at the tavern Mr Watson applied himself to the drawer only without taking the least notice of the cook for he had no suspicion but that I had dined long since However as the case was really otherwise I forged another falsehood and told my companion I had been at the further end of the city on business of consequence and had snapt up a mut money enough in your breeches to pay for the mutton-chop? — Your observation is right answered the stranger and I believe such blunders are inseparable from all dealing in untruth —But to proceed—I begin now to feel myself extremely happy The meat and wine soon revived my spirits to a high pitch, and I enjoyed much pleasure in the conversation of my old acquaintance, the rather as I thought him entirely ignorant of what had happened with confusion at those words, which Watson observing, proceeded thus 'Nay, never be ashamed, man, thou hast been acquitted and no one now dares call thee guilty, but prithee, do tell me, who am thy friend--I hope thou didst really rob him? for rat me if it was not a meritorious action to strip such a sneaking, pitiful rascal and instead of the two hundred guineas, I wish you had taken as many thou sand Come, come, my boy, don't be shy of confessing to me you are not now brought before one of the pimps D—n me if I don t honour you for it, for, as I hope for salvation, I would have made no manner of scruple of doing the same thing'

* Riches the incentives to evil are dug out of the earth.

"This declaration a little relieved my abash ment, and as wine had now somewhat opened my heart, I very freely acknowledged the rob bery, but acquainted him that he had been misinformed as to the sum taken, which was little more than a fifth part of what he had mentioned

"'I am sorry for it with all my heart, quoth he, 'and I wish thee better success another time Though if you will take my advice, you shall have no occasion to run any such risque Here,' said he, taking some dice out of his pocket here s the stuff Here are the implements, here are the little doctors which cure the distempers of the purse Follow but my counsel, and I will show you a way to empty the pocket of a queer cull without any danger of the nubbing cheat''

'Nubbing cheat! cries Partridge 'pray, sir, what is that?'

'Why that, sir,' says the stranger, 'is a cant phrase for the gallows, for as gamesters differ little from highwaymen in their morals, so do they very much resemble them in their lan guage

"We had now each drank our bottle when Mr Watson said, the board was sitting and that he must attend earnestly pressing me at the same time to go with him and try my fortune I answered he knew that was at present out of my power, as I had informed him of the emptiness of my pocket To say the truth I doubted not from his many strong expressions of friendship, but that he would offer to lend me a small sum for that purpose, but he an swered 'Never mind that, man, e'en boldly run a levant' [Partridge was going to inquire the meaning of that word, but Jones stopped his mouth] but be circumspect as to the man I will tip you the proper person, which may be necessary, as you do not know the town, nor can distinguish a rum cull from a queer one"

"The bill was now brought, when Watson and take no notice —Or—stay,' says he, 'I will go down stairs first, and then do you take up my money and score the whole reckoning at the bar, and I will wait for you at the corner' I expressed some dislike at this and hinted my expectations that he would have deposited the whole, but he swore he had not another six pence in his pocket

He then went down, and I was prevailed on to take up the money and follow him which I did close enough to hear him tell the drawer the reckoning was upon the table The drawer past by me up stairs, but I made such haste

a large sum of money and placed it before him, as did many others all of them no doubt, con sidering their own heaps as so many decoy birds, which were to intice and draw over the heaps of their neighbours

"Here it would be tedious to relate all the freaks which Fortune, or rather the dice played in this her temple Mountains of gold were in a few moments reduced to nothing at one part of the table, and rose as suddenly in another The rich grew in a moment poor, and the poor as suddenly became rich so that it seemed a philosopher could nowhere have so well in structed his pupils in the contempt of riches, at least he could nowhere have better incul cated the incertainty of their duration

For my own part, after having considerably improved my small estate I at last entirely demolished it Mr Watson too, after much va riety of luck, rose from the table in some heat, but I positively refused saying I would not bring myself a second time into such a di lemma and especially as he had lost all his money and was now in my own condition Pooh! says he I have just borrowed a couple of guineas of a friend and one of them is at your service He immediately put one of them into my hand and I no longer resisted his in clination

I was at first a little shocked at returning to the same house whence we had departed in so unhandsome a manner but when the drawer with very civil address told us he believed we had forgot to pay our reckoning I became perfectly easy and very readily gave him a guinea bid him pay himself and acquiesced in the unjust charge which had been laid on my memory

Mr Watson now bespoke the most extravagant supper he could well think of and

"Our company was soon encreased by the addition of several gentlemen from the gam ing table most of whom as I afterwards found came not to the tavern to drink but in the way

be afterwards pillaged as indeed they were without mercy Of this plunder I had the good fortune to be a sharer though I was not yet let into the secret

There was one remarkable accident at tended this tavern play for the money by de grees totally disappeared so that though at the beginning the table was half covered with gold yet before the play ended which it did not till the next day being Sunday at noon there was scarce a single guinea to be seen on the table and this was the stranger as every person present except myself declared he had lost and what was become of the money un less the devil himself carried it away is difficult to determine

Most certainly he did says Partridge for evil spirits can carry away anything without being seen though there were never so many folk in the room and I should not have been surprized if he had carried away all the com pany of a set of wicked wretches who were at play in sermon time And I could tell you a true story if I would where the devil took a man out of bed from another man s wife, and carried him away through the keyhole of the door I ve seen the very house where it was done and nobody hath lived in it these thirty years

Though Jones was a little offended by the impertinence of Partridge he could not how ever avoid smiling at his simplicity The stran ger did the same and then proceeded with his story as will be seen in the next chapter

Chapter 13

In which the foregoing story is farther continued

My fellow collegiate had now entered me in a new scene of life I soon became ac quainted with the whole fraternity of sharpers and was let into their secrets I mean into the knowledge of those gross cheats which are proper to impose upon the raw and unexpe rienced for there are some tricks of a finer kind which are known only to a few of the gang, who are at the head of their profession a de gree of honour beyond my expectation for drink to which I was immoderately addicted and the natural warmth of my passions pre vented me from arriving at any great success in an art which requires as much coolness as the most austere school of philosophy

Mr Watson with whom I now lived in the closest amity had unluckily the former failing to a very great excess so that instead of mak ing a fortune by his profession as some others did he was alternately rich and poor and was often obliged to surrender to his cooler friends over a bottle which they never tasted that plunder that he had taken from culls at the public table

However we both made a shift to pick up flourishing in affluence and at others being obliged to struggle with almost incredible dif ficulties To-day wallowing in luxury and to morrow reduced to the coarsest and most homely fare My fine clothes being often on my back in the evening and at the pawn shop the next morning

One night as I was returning pennyless from the gaming table I observed a very great disturbance and a large mob gathered to gether in the street As I was in no danger from pickpockets I ventured into the croud where upon enquiry I found that a man had been robbed and very ill used by some ruffians The wounded man appeared very bloody and seemed scarce able to support himself on his legs As I had not therefore been deprived of my humanity by my present life and conversation though they had left me very little of either honesty or shame I immediately offered my assistance to the unhappy person who thankfully accepted it and putting himself under my conduct begged me to convey him to some one who appeared in the dress of a gentleman for as to all the rest of the company present their outside was such that he could not wisely place any confidence in them

I took the poor man by the arm and led him to the tavern where we kept our rendez to hear were not likely to be mortal

The surgeon having very expeditiously and dextrously finished his business began to enquire in what part of the town the wounded man lodged who answered That he was come to town that very morning that his horse was at an inn in Piccadilly and that he had no other lodging and very little or no acquaintance in town

This surgeon whose name I have forgot though I remember it began with an R had the first character in his profession and was serjeant surgeon to the king He had moreover many good qualities and was a very generous good natured man and ready to do any service to his fellow-creatures He offered his patient the use of his chariot to carry him to his inn and at the same time whispered in his ear That if he wanted any money he would furnish him

The poor man was not now capable of returning thanks for this generous offer for having had his eyes for some time stedfastly on me he threw himself back in his chair crying Oh my son! my son! and then fainted away

Many of the people present imagined this accident had happened through his loss of blood but I who at the same time began to recollect the features of my father was now confirmed in my suspicion and satisfied that it was he himself who appeared before me I presently ran to him, raised him in my arms, and kissed his cold lips with the utmost eagerness Here I must draw a curtain over a scene which I cannot describe for though I did not lose my being as my father for a while did my senses were however so overpowered with affright and surprize that I am a stranger to what passed during some minutes and indeed till my father had again recovered from his swoon and I found myself in his arms both tenderly embracing each other while the tears trickled a pace down the cheeks of each of us

Most of those present seemed affected by this scene which we who might be considered as the actors in it were desirous of removing from the eyes of all spectators as fast as we could my father therefore accepted the kind offer of the surgeon s chariot and I attended him in it to his inn

When we were alone together he gently upbraided me with having neglected to write to him during so long a time but entirely omitted the mention of that crime which had occasioned it He then informed me of my mother s death and insisted on my returning home with him saying That he had long suffered the greatest anxiety on my account that he knew not whether he had most feared my death or wished it since he had so many more dreadful apprehensions for me At last he said a neighbouring gentleman who had just recovered a son from the same place informed him where I was and that to reclaim me from this course of life was the sole cause of his journey to London He thanked Heaven he had succeeded so far as to find me out by means of an accident which had like to have

of all my care was my own father

Vice had not so depraved my heart as to ex surgeon who had undertaken his cure

"The day preceding my father s journey (before which time I scarce ever left him) I went desires of a foolish old fellow Such sollicitations, however, had no effect, and I once more saw my own home My father now greatly sollicited me to think of marriage; but my inclinations were utterly averse to any such thoughts I had tasted of love already, and perhaps you know the extravagant excesses of that most tender and most violent passion "—Here the old gentleman paused, and looked earnestly at Jones, whose countenance, within a minute's space, displayed the extremities of both red and white Upon which the old man, without making any observations renewed his narrative

"Being now provided with all the necessaries of life, I betook myself once again to study, and that with a more inordinate application than I had ever done formerly The books which now employed my time solely were those, as well antient as modern, which treat of true philosophy, a word which is by many thought to be the subject only of farce and ridicule I now read over the works of Aristotle and Plato, with the rest of those inestimable treasures which antient Greece had bequeathed to the world

These authors though they instructed me in no science by which men may promise to themselves to acquire the least riches or worldly power, taught me, however, the art of despising the highest acquisitions of both They elevate the mind and steel and harden it against the capricious invasions of fortune They not only instruct in the knowledge of Wisdom but confirm men in her habits and demonstrate plainly that this must be our guide, if we propose ever to arrive at the greatest worldly happiness or to defend ourselves with any toler-

[illegible]

to which all the philosophy taught by the wisest heathens is little better than a dream and is indeed as full of vanity as the silliest jester ever pleased to represent it This is that Divine wisdom which is alone to be found in the Holy Scriptures for they impart to us the more than labour lost for, however pleasant and delightful their lessons may be, or however adequate to the right regulation of our conduct with respect to this world only, yet, when compared with the glory revealed in philosophy makes us wiser, but Christianity makes us better men Philosophy elevates and steels the mind, Christianity softens and sweetens it. The former makes us the objects of human admiration, the latter of Divine love That insures us a temporal, but this an eternal happiness —But I am afraid I tire you with my rhapsody"

[illegible]

[illegible]

"Not at all," cries Partridge; "Lud forbid we should be tired with good things!"

"I had spent," continued the stranger, "about four years in the most delightful manner to myself, totally given up to contemplation, and entirely unembarrassed with the affairs of the world, when I lost the best of fathers, and one whom I so entirely loved, that my grief at his loss exceeds all description I now abandoned my books, and gave myself up for a whole month to the effects of melancholy and despair Time, however, the best physician of the mind, at length brought me relief "—'Ay, ay Tempus edax rerum," said Partridge—'I then, ' continued the stranger, ' betook myself again to my former studies, which I may say perfected my cure, for philosophy and religion may be called the exercises of the mind and when this is disordered, they are as wholesome as exercise can be to a distempered body They do indeed produce similar effects with exercise for they strengthen and confirm the mind till man becomes, in the noble strain of Horace—

Fortis, et in seipso totus teres atque rotundus, Externi ne quid valeat per læve morari
*In quem manca ruit semper Fortuna' **

Here Jones smiled at some conceit which intruded itself into his imagination, but the stranger, I believe, perceived it not, and proceeded thus —

My circumstances were now greatly altered by the death of that best of men for my brother who was now become master of the house differed so widely from me in his inclinations and our pursuits in life had been so very vari ous that we were the worst of company to each other but what made our living together still more disagreeable, was the little harmony which could subsist between the few who resorted to me, and the numerous train of sportsmen who often attended my brother from the field to the table, for such fellows, besides the noise and nonsense with which they persecute the ears of sober men, endeavour always to attack them with affront and contempt This was so much the case, that neither I myself, nor my friends, could ever sit down to a meal with them without being treated with derision, because we were unacquainted with the phrases of sportsmen For men of true learning and almost universal knowledge, always compassionate the ignorance of others, but fellows who excel in some little, low, contemptible art, are always certain to despise those who are unacquainted with that art

[illegible]

'In short, we soon separated, and I went by the advice of a physician to drink the Bath waters, for my violent affliction, added to a sedentary life, had thrown me into a kind of paralytic disorder, for which those waters are accounted an almost certain cure The second day after my arrival, as I was walking by the river the sun shone so intensely hot (though it was early in the year) that I retired to the shelter of some willows and sat down by the river side Here I had not been seated long before I heard a person on the other side of the willows sighing and bemoaning himself bitterly On a sudden having uttered a most impious oath, he cried, I am resolved to bear it no longer,' and directly threw himself into the water I immediately started and ran towards the place, calling at the same time as loudly as I could for assistance An angler happened luckily to be a fishing a little below me, though some very high sedge had hid him from my sight. He immediately came up, and both of us together, not without some hazard of our lives, drew the body to the shore At first we perceived no sign of life remaining but having held the body up by the heels (for we soon had assistance enough) it discharged a vast quantity of water at the mouth and at length began to discover some symptoms of breathing and a little afterwards to move both its hands and its legs

"An apothecary who happened to be present among others, advised that the body which seemed now to have pretty well emptied itself of water, and which began to have many convulsive motions, should b and carried into a warm bed This was accordingly performed, the apothecary and myself attending

"As we were going towards an inn, for we knew not the man s lodgings luckily a woman met us, who, after some violent screaming told us that the gentleman lodged at her house

"When I had seen the man safely deposited there, I left him to the care of the apothecary, who, I suppose, used all the right methods with him, for the next morning I heard he had perfectly recovered his senses

"I then went to visit him, intending to search out, as well as I could, the cause of his having attempted so desperate an act, and to prevent, as far as I was able, his pursuing such wicked intentions for the future I was no sooner admitted into his chamber, than we both instantly knew each other for who should this person be but my good friend Mr Watson! Here I will not trouble you with what past at our first interview for I would avoid prolixity as much as possible"— 'Pray let us hear all' cries Partridge, "I want mightily to know what brought him to Bath"

'You shall hear everything material" answered the stranger and then proceeded to relate what we shall proceed to write, after we have given a short breathing time to both ourselves and the reader

Chapter 14

In which the Man of the Hill concludes his history

"MR WATSON," continued the stranger, "very freely acquainted me, that the unhappy situation of his circumstances, occasioned by a tide of ill luck had in a manner forced him to a resolution of destroying himself

'I now began to argue very seriously with soon make a second attempt of the like horrible kind

'When I had finished my discourse instead of endeavouring to answer my arguments he looked me stedfastly in the face, and with a smile said 'You are strangely altered, my good friend since I remember you I question whether any of our bishops could make

ter argument against suicide than you have entertained me with but unless you can find somebody who will lend me a cool hundred I must either hang or drown or starve and in my opinion the last death is the most terrible of the three

I answered him very gravely that I was in deed altered since I had seen him last That I had found leisure to look into my follies and to repent of them I then advised him to pursue the same steps and at last concluded with an assurance that I myself would lend him a hun dred pound if it would be of any service to his affairs and he would not put it into the power of a die to deprive him of it

Mr Watson who seemed almost composed in slumber by the former part of my discourse was roused by the latter He seized my hand eagerly gave me a thousand thanks and de clared I was a friend indeed adding that he hoped I had a better opinion of him than to imagine he had profited so little by experience as to put any confidence in those damned dice which had so often deceived him No no cries he let me but once handsomely be set up again and if ever Fortune makes a broken merchant of me afterwards I will forgive her

I very well understood the language of setting up and broken merchant I therefore said to him with a very grave face Mr Wat son you must endeavour to find out some busi ness or employment by which you may pro cure yourself a livelihood and I promise you could I see any probability of being repaid hereafter I would advance a much larger sum than what you have mentioned to equip you in any fair and honourable calling but as to gaming besides the baseness and wickedness of making it a profession you are really to my own knowledge unfit for it and it will end in your certain ruin

Why now that s strange answered he neither you nor any of my friends would ever allow me to know anything of the matter and yet I believe I am as good a hand at every game as any of you all and I heartily wish I was to play with you only for your whole for tune I should desire no better sport and I would let you name your game into the bar gain but come my dear boy have you the hundred in your pocket?

I answered I had only a bill for £50 which I delivered him and promising to bring him the rest next morning and after giving him a little more advice took my leave

I was indeed better than my word for I re- turned to him that very afternoon When I entered the room I found him sitting up in his bed at cards with a notorious gamester This sight you will imagine shocked me not a little to which I may add the mortification of seeing my bill delivered by him to his antago nist and thirty guineas only given in exchange for it

The other gamester presently quitted the room and then Watson declared he was ashamed to see me but says he I find luck runs so damnably against me that I will re solve to leave off play for ever I have thought of the kind proposal you made me ever since and I promise you there shall be no fault in me if I do not put it in execution

Though I had no great faith in his promises I produced him the remainder of the hundred in consequence of my own for which he gave me a note which was all I ever expected to see in return for my money

We were prevented from any further dis course at present by the arrival of the apothe cary who with much joy in his countenance and without even asking his patient how he did proclaimed there was great news arrived in a letter to himself which he said would shortly be public That the Duke of Mon mouth was landed in the west with a vast army of Dutch and that another vast fleet hovered over the coast of Norfolk and was to make a descent there in order to favour the duke s enterprize with a diversion on that side

This apothecary was one of the greatest politicians of his time He was more delighted with the most paultry packet than with the best patient and the highest joy he was ca pable of he received from having a piece of news in his possession an hour or two sooner than any other person in the town His advices however were seldom authentic for he would swallow almost anything as a truth—a humour which many made use of to impose upon him

Thus it happened with what he at present communicated for it was known within a short time afterwards that the duke was really landed but that his army consisted only of a few attendants and as to the diversion in Nor folk it was entirely false

The apothecary staid no longer in the room than while he acquainted us with his news and then without saying a syllable to his pa tient on any other subject departed to spread his advices all over the town

Events of this nature in the public are gen erally apt to eclipse all private concerns. Our

. . . ately politi-

. . . persecuting spirit of Popery, little he valued either his royal word, . . . nation oath or the liberties and rights of his people But all had not the sense to foresee this at first and therefore the Duke of Monmouth was weakly supported yet all could feel when the evil came upon them, and therefore all united, at last, to drive out that king, against whose exclusion a great party among us had so warmly contended during the reign of his brother, and for whom they now fought with such zeal and affection "

'What you say," interrupted Jones "is very true, and it has often struck me, as the most wonderful thing I ever read of in history, that so soon after this convincing experience which brought our whole nation to join so unanimously in expelling King James, for the preservation of our religion and liberties, there should be a party among us mad enough to desire the placing his family again on the throne " 'You are not in earnest!" answered the old man "there can be no such party As bad an . . . bel eve to engage in this desperate cause, and think . . . a holy war, but that Protestants, that are members of the Church of England, should be such apostates, such felos de se, I cannot believe it, no no, young man, unacquainted as I am with what has past in the world for these last thirty years, I cannot be so imposed upon as to credit so foolish a tale, but I see you have a mind to sport with my ignorance '—'Can it be possible," replied Jones that you have lived so much out of the world as not to know that during that time there have been two rebellions in favour of the son of King James one of which is now actually raging in the very heart of the kingdom ' At these words the old gentleman started up, and in a most solemn tone of voice, conjured Jones by his Maker to tell him if what he said was really true which the other as solemnly affirming he walked several manner —

. . . of, . . . less . . . and which, to be sure, I have only escaped by . . . ing alone, and at a distance from the contagion, there was a considerable rising in favour of Monmouth, and my principles strongly inclining me to take the same part I determined to join him, and Mr Watson, from different motives concurring in the same resolution (for the spirit of a gamester will carry a man as far . . . of patriot

. . . son, . . . tion . . . orty miles together on the Exeter road, . . . then abandoning our horses, scrambled as well as we could through the fields and bye roads, till we arrived at a little wild hut on a common, where a poor old woman took all the care of us she could, and dressed my wound with salve, which quickly healed it '

'Pray . . . where was the wound?' says Part . . .

morning in order, as he pretended, to g . . . some provision from the town of Collumpton, but—can I relate it, or can you believe it?—this Mr Watson, this friend, this base, barbarous, treacherous villain, betrayed me to a party of horse belonging to King James, and at his return delivered me into their hands

'The soldiers being six in number, had . . . me to

. . . tion, . . .

happen to me, were half so irksome to my mind as the company of my false friend, who, having surrendered himself, was likewise considered as a prisoner, though he was better treated as being to make his peace at my expense He at first endeavoured to excuse his treachery but when he received nothing but scorn and upbraiding from me he soon changed his note, abused me as the most atrocious and arms against his gracious as well as lawful sovereign

This false evidence (for in reality he had been much the forwarder of the two) stung me to the quick and raised an indignation scarce conceivable by those who have not felt it However fortune at length took pity on me for as we were got a little beyond Wellington in a narrow lane my guards received a false alarm that near fifty of the enemy were at hand upon which they shifted for themselves and left me and my betrayer to do the same That villain immediately ran from me and I am glad he did or I should have certainly endeavoured though I had no arms to have executed vengeance on his baseness

I was now once more at liberty and immediately withdrawing from the highway into the fields I travelled on scarce knowing which way I went and making it my chief care to avoid all public roads and all towns—nay even the most homely houses for I imagined every human creature whom I saw desirous of betraying me

At last after rambling several days about the country during which the fields afforded me the same bed and the same food which nature bestows on our savage brothers of the creation I at length arrived at this place where the solitude and wildness of the country invited me to fix my abode The first person with whom I took up my habitation was the mother of this old woman with whom I remained concealed till the news of the glorious revolution put an end to all my apprehensions of danger and gave me an opportunity of once more visiting my own home and of enquiring a little into my affairs which I soon settled as agreeably to my brother as to myself having resigned everything to him for which he paid me the sum of a thousand pounds and settled on me an annuity for life

His behaviour in this last instance as in all others was selfish and ungenerous I could not look on him as my friend nor indeed did he desire that I should so I presently took my leave of him as well as of my other acquaintance and from that day to this my history is little better than a blank

And is it possible sir said Jones that you can have resided here from that day to thi

I

fe

quainted — I have not sir cried Jones the assurance to ask it of you now indeed it would be cruel after so much breath as you have already spent but you will give me leave to wish for some further opportunity of hearing the excellent observations which a man of your sense and knowledge of the world must have made in so long a course of travels — Indeed young gentleman answered the stranger I will endeavour to satisfy your curiosity on this head likewise as far as I am able Jones attempted fresh apologies but was prevented and while he and Partridge sat with greedy and impatient ears the stranger proceeded as in the next chapter

Chapter 15

A brief history of Europe and a curious discourse between Mr Jones and the Man of the Hill

IN ITALY the landlords are very silent In France they are more talkative but yet civil In Germany and Holland they are generally very impertinent And as for their honesty I believe it is pretty equal in all those countries The laquais à louange are sure to lose no opportunity of cheating you and as for the postilions I think they are pretty much alike all the world over These sir are the observations on men which I made in my travels for these were the only men I ever conversed with My design when I went abroad was to divert myself by seeing the wondrous variety of prospects beasts birds fishes insects and vegetables with which God has been pleased to enrich the several parts of this globe a variety which as it must give great pleasure to a contemplative beholder so doth it admirably display the power and wisdom and goodness of the Creator Indeed to say the truth there is but one work in his whole creation that doth him any dishonour and with that I have long since avoided holding any conversation

You will pardon me cries Jones but I have always imagined that there is in this very work you mention as great variety as in all the rest for besides the difference of inclination customs and climates have I am told introduced the utmost diversity into human nature

Very little indeed' answered the other

"those who travel in order to acquaint themselves with the different manners of men might spare themselves much pains by going to a carnival at Venice, for there they will see at once all which they can discover in the several courts of Europe The same hypocrisy, the same fraud, in short, the same follies and vices dressed in different habits In Spain, these are equipped with much gravity, and in Italy, with vast splendor In France, a knave is dressed like a fop, and in the northern countries, like a sloven But human nature is everywhere the same, everywhere the object of detestation and scorn

'As for my own part, I past through all these nations as you perhaps may have done through a croud at a show—jostling to get by them, holding my nose with one hand, and defending my pockets with the other, without speaking a word to any of them, while I was pressing on to see what I wanted to see, which, however entertaining it might be in itself, scarce made me amends for the trouble the company gave me'

'Did not you find some of the nations among which you travelled less troublesome to you than others?" said Jones "O yes" replied the old man "the Turks were much more tolerable to me than the Christians, for they are men of profound taciturnity, and never disturb a stranger with questions Now and then indeed they bestow a short curse upon him, or spit in his face as he walks the streets, but then they have done with him, and a man may live an age in their country without hearing a dozen words from them But of all the people I ever saw, heaven defend me from the French! With their damned prate and civilities and doing the honour of their nation to strangers (as they are pleased to call it), but indeed setting forth their own vanity, they are so troublesome, that I had infinitely rather pass my life with the Hottentots than set my foot in Paris again They are a nasty people, but their nastiness is mostly without, whereas, in France, and some other nations that I won t name it is all within, and makes them stink much more to my reason than that of Hottentots does to my nose

"Thus, sir, I have ended the history of my life, for as to all that series of years during which I have lived retired here, it affords no variety to entertain you, and may be almost considered as one day The retirement has been so compleat, that I could hardly have enjoyed a more absolute solitude in the deserts of the Thebais than here in the midst of this ought to be, for it is much less than what I might have expected in return for what I gave up Visits I admit none, and the old woman who keeps my house knows that her place entirely depends upon her saving me all the trouble of buying the things that I want, keeping off all sollicitation or business from me, and holding her tongue whenever I am within hearing As my walks are all by night, I am pretty secure in this wild unfrequented place from meeting any company Some few persons I have met by chance, and sent them home heartily frighted, as from the oddness of my dress and figure they took me for a ghost or a hobgoblin But what has happened to-night shows that even here I cannot be safe from the villany of men for without your assistance I had not only been robbed, but very probably murdered"

Jones thanked the stranger for the trouble he had taken in relating his story, and then expressed some wonder how he could possibly endure a life of such solitude 'in which," says he, 'you may well complain of the want of variety Indeed I am astonished how you have filled up, or rather killed, so much of your time"

"I am not at all surprized,' answered the other, "that to one whose affections and thoughts are fixed on the world my hours should appear to have wanted employment in this place but there is one single act, for which the whole life of man is infinitely too short what time can suffice for the contemplation and worship of that glorious, immortal and eternal Being among the works of whose stupendous creation not only this globe, but even those numberless luminaries which we may here behold spangling all the sky, though they should many of them be suns lighting different systems of worlds may possibly appear but as a few atoms opposed to the whole earth which we inhabit? Can a man who by divine meditations is admitted as it were into the conversation of this ineffable, incomprehensible Maj

ern horizon nor that the boisterous winds should rush from their caverns and shake the lofty forest nor that the opening clouds should pour their deluges on the plains it is not necessary I say that any of these should proclaim his majesty there is not an insect not a vegetable of so low an order in the creation as not to be honoured with bearing marks of the attributes of its great Creator marks not only of his power but of his wisdom and goodness Man alone the king of this globe the last and greatest work of the Supreme Being below the sun man alone hath basely dishonoured his own nature and by dishonesty cruelty in so foolish and so vile an animal Yet this is the being from whose conversation you think I suppose that I have been unfortunately restrained and without whose blessed society life in your opinion must be tedious and insipid.

In the former part of what you said replied Jones I most heartily and readily concur but I believe as well as hope that the abhorrence which you express for mankind in the conclusion is much too general Indeed you here fall into an error which in my little experience I have observed to be a very com nothing should be esteemed as characteristical of a species but what is to be found among the best and most perfect individuals of that species This error I believe is generally com worthless men two or three instances of which are very unjustly charged on all human nature "

"I think I had experience enough of it answered the other my first mistress and my first friend betrayed me in the basest manner and in matters which threatened to be of the worst of consequences—even to bring me to a shameful death

"But you will pardon me cries Jones if I desire you to reflect who that mistress and who that friend were What better my good sir could be expected in love derived from the stews or in friendship first produced and nourished at the gaming table? To take the characters of women from the former instance or of men from the latter would be as unjust as to assert that air is a nauseous and unwholesome element because we find it so in a jakes I have lived but a short time in the world and yet have known men worthy of the highest friendship and women of the highest love

Alas' young man answered the stranger you have lived you confess but a very short time in the world I was somewhat older than you when I was of the same opinion

'You might have remained so still replies Jones if you had not been unfortunate I will venture to say incautious in the placing your affections If there was indeed much more wickedness in the world than there is it would not prove such general assertions against human nature since much of this arrives by mere accident and many a man who commits evil is not totally bad and corrupt in his heart In truth none seem to have any title to assert human nature to be necessarily and universally evil but those whose own minds afford them one instance of this natural depravity which is not I am convinced your case

And such said the stranger will be always the most backward to assert any such thing Knaves will no more endeavour to persuade us of the baseness of mankind, than a highwayman will inform you that there are thieves on the road This would indeed be a method to put you on your guard and to defeat their own purposes For which reason though knaves as I remember are very apt to abuse particular persons yet they never cast any reflection on human nature in general The old gentleman spoke this so warmly that as Jones despaired of making a convert and was unwilling to offend he returned no answer

The day now began to send forth its first streams of light when Jones made an apology to the stranger for having staid so long and perhaps detained him from his rest The stranger answered He never wanted rest less than at present for that day and night were indifferent seasons to him and that he commonly made use of the former for the time of his repose and of the latter for his walks and lucubrations However said he it is now a most lovely morning and if you can bear any longer to be without your own rest or food I will gladly entertain you with the sight of some very fine prospects which I believe you have not yet seen

Jones very readily embraced this offer and they immediately set forward together from the cottage As for Partridge he had fallen into a profound repose just as the stranger had finished his story for his curiosity was satisfied, and the subsequent discourse was not forcible enough in its operation to conjure down the charms of sleep Jones therefore left him to enjoy his nap and as the reader may perhaps be at this season glad of the same favour we will here put an end to the eighth book of our history

BOOK IX

Containing twelve hours

Chapter 1

Of those who lawfully may and of those who may not, write such histories as this

Among other good uses for which I have thought proper to institute these several introductory chapters I have considered them as a kind of mark or stamp which may hereafter enable a very indifferent reader to distinguish what is true and genuine in this historic kind of writing from what is false and counterfeit Indeed, it seems likely that some such mark may shortly become necessary since the favourable reception which two or three authors have lately procured for their works of this nature from the public will probably serve as an encouragement to many others to undertake the like. Thus a swarm of foolish novels and monstrous romances will be produced either to the great impoverishing of book sellers, or to the great loss of time and depravation of morals in the reader nay often to the spreading of scandal and calumny and to the prejudice of the characters of many worthy and honest people

I question not but the ingenious author of the Spectator was principally induced to prefix Greek and Latin mottos to every paper from the same consideration of guarding against the pursuit of those scribblers who having no talents of a writer but what is taught by the writing master are yet nowise afraid nor ashamed to assume the same titles with the greatest genius than their good brother in the fable was of braying in the lion s skin

By the device therefore of his motto it became impracticable for any man to presume to imitate the Spectators, without understanding at least one sentence in the learned languages. In the same manner I have now secured myself from the imitation of those who are utterly incapable of any degree of reflection and whose learning is not equal to an essay

I would not be here understood to insinuate that the greatest merit of such historical productions can ever lie in these introductory chapters but in fact those parts which contain mere narrative only afford much more encouragement to the pen of an imitator than those which are composed of observation and reflection Here I mean such imitators as Rowe was of Shakespear or as Horace hints some of the Romans were of Cato by bare feet and sour faces

To invent good stories and to tell them well are possibly very rare talents, and yet I have observed few persons who have scrupled to aim at both and if we examine the romances and novels with which the world abounds I think we may fairly conclude that most of the authors would not have attempted to show their teeth (if the expression may be allowed me) in any other way of writing nor could indeed have strung together a dozen sentences on any other subject whatever Scribimus indocti doctique passim * may be more truly said of the historian and biographer than of any other species of writing for all the arts and sciences (even criticism itself) require some little degree of learning and knowledge Poetry indeed may perhaps be thought an exception but then it demands numbers or something like numbers whereas to the composition of novels and romances, nothing is necessary but paper pens and ink with the

* —Each desperate blockhead dares to write Verse is the trade of every living wight —Mr Francis manual capacity of using them This I conceive their productions show to be the opinion of the authors themselves and this must be the opinion of their readers if indeed there be any such

Hence we are to derive that universal contempt which the world who always denominates the whole from the majority have cast on all historical writers who do not draw their materials from records And it is the apprehension of this contempt that hath made us so cautiously avoid the term romance a name with which we might otherwise have been well enough contented Though as we have good authority for all our characters no less indeed than the vast authentic doomsday book of nature as is elsewhere hinted our labours have sufficient title to the name of history Certainly they deserve some distinction from those works which one of the wittiest of men regarded only as proceeding from a pruritus or indeed rather from a looseness of the brain

But besides the dishonour which is thus cast on one of the most useful as well as entertaining of all kinds of writing there is just reason to apprehend that by encouraging such authors we shall propagate much dishonour of another kind I mean to the characters of many good and valuable members of society for the dullest writers no more than the dullest companions are always inoffensive They have both enough of language to be indecent and abusive And surely if the opinion just above cited be true we cannot wonder that works so nastily derived should be nasty themselves or have a tendency to make others so

To prevent therefore for the future such intemperate abuses of leisure of letters and of the liberty of the press especially as the world seems at present to be more than usually threatened with them I shall here venture to mention some qualifications every one of which are in a pretty high degree necessary to this order of historians

The first is genius without a full vein of which no study says Horace can avail us By genius I would understand that power or rather those powers of the mind which are capable of penetrating into all things within our reach and knowledge and of distinguishing their essential differences These are no other than invention and judgment and they are both called by the collective name of genius as they errors for by invention, I believe is generally understood a creative faculty which would indeed prove most romance writers to have herein by in d so the ng out

or to explain it at large a quick and sagacious

ment for how we can be said to have discovered the true essence of two things without discerning their difference seems to me hard to conceive Now this last is the undisputed province of judgment and yet some few men of wit have agreed with all the dull fellows in the world in representing these two to have been seldom or never the property of one and the same person

But though they should be so they are not a good share

any was necessary to prove that tools are of no service to a workman when they are not sharpened by art or when he wants rules to direct

as I have chose to illustrate it with the tools of our profession learning must fit them for use must direct them in it and lastly must contribute part at least of the materials A competent knowledge of history and of the belles-lettres is here absolutely necessary and without this share of knowledge at least to affect the character of an historian is as vain as to endeavour at building a house without timber or mortar or brick or stone Homer and Milton who though they added the ornament of numbers to their works were both historians of our order were masters of all the learning of their times

Again there is another sort of knowledge beyond the power of learning to bestow and this is to be had by conversation So necessary is this to the understanding the characters of men that none are more ignorant of them than those learned pedants whose lives have been entirely consumed in colleges and among books for however exquisitely human nature may have been described by writers the true practical system can be learnt only in the world Indeed the like happens in every other kind of knowledge Neither physic nor law are to be practically known from books Nay the farmer, the planter the gardener must perfect by experience what he hath acquired the rudiments of by reading How accurately soever the ingenious Mr Miller may have described the plant he himself would advise his disciple to see it in the garden As we must perceive that after the nicest strokes of a Shakespear or a Jonson of a Wycherly or an Otway some touches of nature will escape the reader which the judicious action of a Garrick of a Cibber or a Clive * can convey to him so on the real stage the character shows himself in a stronger and bolder light than he can be described And if this be the case in those fine and nervous descriptions which great authors themselves have taken from life how much more strongly will it hold when the writer himself takes his lines not from nature but from books? Such characters are only the faint copy of a copy and can have neither the justness nor spirit of an original

Now this conversation in our historian must be universal that is with all ranks and degrees of men for the knowledge of what is called high life will not instruct him in low nor è converso will his being acquainted with the inferior part of mankind teach him the manners of the superior And though it may be

each other For instance the affectation of high life appears more glaring and ridiculous from the simplicity of the low and again the rudeness and barbarity of this latter strikes with much stronger ideas of absurdity when contrasted with and opposed to the politeness which controls the former Besides to say the truth the manners of our historian will be improved by both these conversations for in the one he will easily find examples of plainness honesty and sincerity in the other of refinement elegance and a liberality of spirit which last quality I myself have scarce ever seen in men of low birth and education

Nor will all the qualities I have hitherto given my historian avail him unless he have what is generally meant by a good heart and be capable of feeling The author who will make me weep says Horace must first weep himself In reality no man can paint a distress well which he doth not feel while he is painting it nor do I doubt but that the most pathetic and affecting scenes have been writ with tears In the same manner it is with the ridiculous I am convinced I never make my reader laugh heartily but where I have laughed be-from which apprehension I will here put an end to it

Chapter 2

Containing a very surprizing adventure indeed which Mr Jones met with in his walk with the Man of the Hill

AURORA now first opened her casement Anglicè the day began to break when Jones walked forth in company with the stranger and mounted Mazard Hill of which they had no sooner gained the summit than one of the most noble prospects in the world presented itself to their view and which we would likewise present to the reader but for two reasons first, we despair of making those who have seen this prospect admire our description secondly we very much doubt whether those your own home or I am mistaken I perceive now the object of your contemplation is not guessed

They now walked to that part of the hill which looks to the north west, and which hangs over a vast and extensive wood Here

*There is a peculiar propriety in mentioning this great actor and these two most justly celebrated actresses in this place as they have all formed themselves on the study of nature only and not on the imitation of their predecessors Hence they have been able to excel all who have gone before them a degree of merit which the servile herd of imitators can never possibly arrive at.

they are committed, and give the name of a bad house, or a house of ill repute, to all those where they are suffered to be carried on

Not that I would intimate that such strict chastity as was preserved in the temple of Vesta can possibly be maintained at a public inn My good landlady did not hope for such a blessing, nor would any of the ladies I have spoken of, or indeed any others of the most rigid note, have expected or insisted on any such thing But to exclude all vulgar concubinage, and to drive all whores in rags from within the walls, is within the power of every one This my landlady very strictly adherred to and this her virtuous guests, who did not travel in rags would very reasonably have expected of her

Now it required no very blameable degree of suspicion to imagine that Mr Jones and his ragged companion had certain purposes in their intention which though tolerated in some Christian countries, connived at in others, and practised in all are however as expressly forbidden as murder, or any other horrid vice, by that religion which is universally believed in those countries The landlady, therefore, had no sooner received an intimation of the entrance of the above said persons than she began to meditate the most expeditious means for their expulsion In order to this, she had provided herself with a long and deadly instrument with which in times of peace, the chambermaid was wont to demolish the labours of the industrious spider In vulgar [illegible] woman upstairs

Nothing can be more provoking to the human temper nor more dangerous to that cardinal virtue patience than solicitations of extraordinary offices of kindness on behalf of those very persons with whom we are highly incensed For this reason Shakespear hath artfully introduced his Desdemona soliciting favours for Cassio of her husband as the means of inflaming not only his jealousy but his rage, to the highest pitch of madness and we find the unfortunate Moor less able to com [illegible]

My landlady, though a very good tempered woman, had, I suppose, some of this pride in her composition, for Jones had scarce ended his request, when she fell upon him with a certain weapon, which, though it be neither long, nor sharp, nor hard, nor indeed threatens from its appearance with either death or wound, hath been however held in great dread and abhorrence by many wise men—nay, by many brave ones; insomuch, that some who have dared to look into the mouth of a loaded cannon, have not dared to look into a mouth where this weapon was brandished, and rather than run the hazard of its execution, have contented themselves with making a most pitiful and sneaking figure in the eyes of all their acquaintance

To confess the truth, I am afraid Mr Jones was one of these, for though he was attacked and violently belaboured with the aforesaid weapon, he could not be provoked to make any resistance, but in a most cowardly manner applied, with many entreaties, to his antagonist to desist from pursuing her blows, in plain English, he only begged her with the utmost earnestness to hear him but before he could obtain his request, my landlord himself entered into the fray, and embraced that side of the cause which seemed to stand very little in need of assistance

There are a sort of heroes who are supposed to be determined in their chusing or avoiding a conflict by the character and behaviour of the person whom they are to engage These are said to know their men, and Jones, I believe, knew his woman for though he had been so submissive to her, he was no sooner attacked by her husband, than he demonstrated an immediate spirit of resentment, and enjoined him silence under a very severe penalty, no less than that, I think, of being converted into fuel for his own fire.

The husband with great indignation, but with a mixture of pity, answered, "You must pray first to be made able I believe I am a better man than yourself, ay, every way, that I am,' and presently proceeded to discharge half a-dozen whores at the lady above stairs, the last of which had scarce issued from his lips when a swinging blow from the cudgel that Jones carried in his hand assulted him over the shoulders

It is a question whether the landlord or the landlady was the most expeditious in returning this blow My landlord, whose hands were empty, fell to with his fist, and the good wife, uplifting her broom and aiming at the head of Jones had probably put an immediate end to the fray and to Jones likewise had not the descent of this broom been prevented—not by the miraculous intervention of any heathen deity but by a very natural though fortunate accident viz by the arrival of Partridge who entered the house at that instant (for fear had caused him to run every step from the hill) and who seeing the danger which threatened his master or companion (which you chuse to call him) prevented so sad a catastrophe by catching hold of the landlady's arm as it was brandished aloft in the air

The landlady soon perceived the impediment which prevented her blow and being unable to rescue her arm from the hands of Partridge she let fall the broom and then leaving Jones to the discipline of her husband she fell with the utmost fury on that poor fellow who had already given some intimation of himself by crying Zounds! do you intend to kill my friend?

Partridge though not much addicted to battle would not however stand still when his friend was attacked nor was he much displeased with that part of the combat which fell to his share he therefore returned my landlady's blows as soon as he received them and now the fight was obstinately maintained on all parts and it seemed doubtful to which side Fortune would incline when the naked lady who had listened at the top of the stairs to the dialogue which preceded the engagement descended suddenly from above and without weighing the unfair inequality of two to one fell upon the poor woman who was boxing with Partridge nor did that great champion desist but rather redoubled his fury when he found fresh succours were arrived to his assistance

Victory must now have fallen to the side of the travellers (for the bravest troops must yield to numbers) had not Susan the chambermaid

or any of her subject Amazons for her form was robust and manlike and every way made for such encounters As her hands and arms be perceived in them and moreover they were so hard that a fist could hardly make any impression on them Lastly her cheekbones stood out as if nature had intended them for two bastions to defend her eyes in those encounters for which she seemed so well calculated and to which she was most wonderfully well inclined challenge and a most desperate fight began between them

Now the dogs of war being let loose began to lick their bloody lips now Victory with lord his wife and maid all which hung in exact balance before her when a good natured accident put suddenly an end to the bloody fray with which half of the combatants had already sufficiently feasted This accident was the arrival of a coach and four upon which my landlord and landlady immediately desisted from fighting and at their entreaty obtained the same favour of their antagonists but Susan was not so kind to Partridge for that Amazonian fair having overthrown and bestrid her enemy was now cuffing him lustily with both her hands without any regard to his request of a cessation of arms or to those loud exclamations of murder which he roared forth

No sooner however had Jones quitted the landlord than he flew to the rescue of his defeated companion from whom he with much end

The landlord who had no visible hurt and the landlady hiding her well-scratched face with her handkerchief ran both hastily to the door to attend the coach from which a young lady and her maid now alighted These the landlady presently ushered into that room where Mr Jones had at first deposited his fair prize as it was the best apartment in the ho

Hither they were obliged to pass thro field of battle which they did with the utmost haste covering their faces with their handkerchiefs as desirous to avoid the notice of any one Indeed their caution was quite unnecessary for the poor unfortunate Helen the fatal cause of all the bloodshed was entirely taken up in endeavouring to conceal her own to stop that bloody torrent which Susan had plentifully set a flowing from his nostrils

Chapter 4

In which the arrival of a man of war puts a final end to hostilities and causes the conclusion of a firm and lasting peace between all parties

A SERJEANT and a file of musqueteers with a deserter in their custody arrived about this time The serjeant presently enquired for the principal magistrate of the town and was informed by my landlord that he himself was vested in that office He then demanded his billets together with a mug of beer and complaining it was cold spread himself before the kitchen fire

Mr Jones was at this time comforting the poor distressed lady who sat down at a table in the kitchen and leaning her head upon her arm was bemoaning her misfortunes but lest my fair readers should be in pain concerning a particular circumstance I think proper here to acquaint them that before she had quitted the room above stairs she had so well covered herself with a pillowbeer which she there found that her regard to decency was not in the least violated by the presence of so many men as were now in the room

One of the soldiers now went up to the serjeant and whispered something in his ear upon which he stedfastly fixed his eyes on the lady and having looked at her for near a minute he came up to her saying I ask pardon madam but I am certain I am not deceived you can be no other person than Captain Waters's lady

The poor woman who in her present distress had very little regarded the face of any person but added I wonder any one should know me in this disguise To which the serjeant replied He was very much surprized to see her ever the gentleman hath done cries the serjeant I am sure the captain will make him amends for it and if I can be of any service your ladyship may command me and I shall

them for it

The landlady who heard from the stairs all that past between the serjeant and Mrs Waters came hastily down and running directly up to her began to ask pardon for the offences she had committed begging that all might be imputed to ignorance of her quality for Lud madam says she how should I have imagined that a lady of your fashion would appear in such a dress? I am sure madam if I had once suspected that your ladyship was your ladyship I would sooner have burnt my tongue out than have said what I have said and I hope your ladyship will accept of a gown till you can get your own cloths"

Prithee woman says Mrs. Waters cease your impertinence how can you imagine I should concern myself about anything which comes from the lips of such low creatures as yourself? But I am surprized at your assurance in thinking after what is past that I will condescend to put on any of your dirty things I would have you know creature, I have a spirit above that Here Jones interfered and begged Mrs Waters to forgive the landlady and to accept her gown for I must confess, cries he our appearance was a little suspicious when first we came in and I am well assured all this good woman did was as she professed out of regard to the reputation of her house"

Yes upon my truly was it says she the gentleman speaks very much like a gentleman and I see very plainly is so and to be certain the house is well known to be a house of as good reputation as any on the road and though I say it is frequented by gentry of the best quality both Irish and English I defy anybody to say black is my eye for that matter And as I was saying if I had known your ladyship to be your ladyship I would as soon have burnt my fingers as have affronted your ladyship, but truly where gentry come and spend their money, I am not willing that they should be scandalized by a set of poor shabby vermin, that, wherever they go, leave more lice than money behind them, such folks never raise my compassion, for to be certain it is foolish to have any for them, and if our justices did as they ought, they would be all whipt out of the kingdom, for to be certain it is what is most fitting for them But as for your ladyship, I am heartily sorry your ladyship hath had a misfortune, and if your ladyship will do me the honour to wear my cloaths till you can get some of your ladyship's own, to be certain the best I have is at your ladyship's service "

Whether cold shame, or the persuasions of Mr Jones prevailed most on Mrs Waters, I will not determine, but she suffered herself to be pacified by this speech of my landlady, and that generous youth, who shook him heartily by the hand and assured him of entire forgiveness saying 'If you are satisfied, my worthy friend, I promise you I am,' and indeed, in one sense, the landlord had the better reason to be satisfied, for he had received a bellyfull of drubbing whereas Jones had scarce felt a single blow.

Partridge, who had been all this time washing his bloody nose at the pump, returned into the kitchen at the instant when his master and the landlord were shaking hands with each other As he was of a peaceable disposition, he was pleased with those symptoms of reconciliation, and though his face bore some marks of Susan's fist, and many more of her nails, he rather chose to be contented with his fortune in the last battle than to endeavour at bettering it in another was struck, and those hands which had been the instruments of war became now the mediators of peace

Matters were thus restored to a perfect calm, at which the serjeant, though it may seem so contrary to the principles of his profession, testified his approbation "Why now, that's friendly," said he, "d—n me I hate to see two people bear ill will to one another after they have had a tussel The only way when friends quarrel is to see it out fairly in a friendly manner, as a man may call it, either with a fist, or sword, or pistol, according as they like, and then let it be all over, for my own part, d—n me if ever I love my friend better than when I am fighting with him! To bear malice is more like a Frenchman than an Englishman "

He then proposed a libation as a necessary part of the ceremony at all treaties of this kind Perhaps the reader may here conclude that he was well versed in antient history, but this, though highly probable, as he cited no authority to support the custom, I will not affirm with any confidence Most likely indeed it is, that he founded his opinion on very good authority, since he confirmed it with many violent oaths

Jones no sooner heard the proposal than, immediately agreeing with the learned serjeant he ordered a bowl, or rather a large mug, filled with the liquor used on these occasions, to be brought in and then began the ceremony himself He placed his right hand in that of the landlord, and seizing the bowl with his left, uttered the usual words, and then made his libation After which, the same was observed by all present Indeed, there is very little need of being particular in describing the whole form, as it differed so little from those libations of which so much is recorded in antient authors and their modern transcribers The principal difference lay in two instances, for, first, the present company poured the liquor only down their throats, and, secondly, the serjeant, who officiated as priest, drank the last, but he preserved, I believe, the antient

assisting at the performance

The good people now ranged themselves round the kitchen fire, where good humour seemed to maintain an absolute dominion, and Partridge not only forgot his shameful defeat, but converted hunger into thirst, and soon became extremely facetious We must however quit this agreeable assembly for a while, and attend Mr Jones to Mrs. Waters's apartment, where the dinner which he had bespoke was now on the table Indeed it took no long time in preparing having been all drest three days before, and required nothing more from the cook than to warm it over again

Chapter 5

An apology for all heroes who have good stomachs, with a description of a battle of the amorous kind

HEROES notwithstanding the high ideas which by the means of flatterers they may entertain of themselves or the world may conceive of them have certainly more of mortal than divine about them However elevated their minds may be their bodies at least (which is much the major part of most) are liable to the worst infirmities and subject to the vilest offices of human nature Among these latter, the act of eating which hath by several wise men been considered as extremely mean and to exact of these dignified characters a much more exorbitant share of this office than she hath obliged those of the lowest order to perform

To say the truth as no known inhabitant of this globe is really more than man so none need be ashamed of submitting to what the necessities of man demand but when those great personages I have just mentioned condescend to aim at confining such low offices to themselves—as when by hoarding or destroying they seem desirous to prevent any others from eating—then they surely become very low and despicable

Now after this short preface we think it no disparagement to our heroe to mention the immoderate ardour with which he laid about him at this season Indeed it may be doubted whether Ulysses who by the way seems to have had the best stomach of all the heroes in that eating poem of the Odyssey ever made a better meal Three pounds at least of that flesh which formerly had contributed to the composition of an ox was now honoured with becoming part of the individual Mr Jones

This particular we thought ourselves obliged to mention as it may account for our heroe s temporary neglect of his fair companion who eat but very little and was indeed employed in considerations of a very different nature which passed unobserved by Jones till he had entirely satisfied that appetite which a fast of twenty four hours had procured him but his dinner was no sooner ended than his attention to other matters revived with these matters therefore we shall now proceed to acquaint the reader

Mr Jones of whose personal accomplishments we have hitherto said very little was in reality one of the handsomest young fellows in the world His face, besides being the picture of health had in it the most apparent marks of sweetness and good nature These qualities were indeed so characteristical in his countenance that while the spirit and sensi strongly was this good nature painted in his look that it was remarked by almost every one who saw him

It was perhaps as much owing to this as to a very fine complexion that his face had a delicacy in it almost inexpressible, and which might have given him an air rather too effeminate had it not been joined to a most masculine person and mien which latter had as much in them of the Hercules as the former had of the Adonis He was besides active genteel gay and good humoured and had a flow of animal spirits which enlivened every conversation where he was present

When the reader hath duly reflected on these many charms which all centered in our heroe and considers at the same time the fresh obligations which Mrs Waters had to him it will be a mark more of prudery than candour to entertain a bad opinion of her because she conceived a very good opinion of him

But whatever censures may be passed upon her it is my business to relate matters of fact with veracity Mrs Waters had in truth not only a good opinion of our heroe but a very great affection for him To speak out boldly at once she was in love according to the present universally received sense of that phrase by which love is applied indiscriminately to the desirable objects of all our passions appetites and senses and is understood to be that preference which we give to one kind of food rather than to another

But though the love to these several objects may possibly be one and the same in all cases its operations however must be allowed to be different for how much soever we may be in love with an excellent surloin of beef or bottle of Burgundy with a damask rose or Cremona fiddle yet do we never simile nor ogle nor dress nor flatter nor endeavour by any other arts or tricks to gain the affection of the said beef &c Sigh indeed we sometimes may but it is generally in the absence not in the presence of the beloved object For otherwise we might possibly complain of their ingratitude and deafness with the same reason as Pasiphae doth of her bull whom she endeavoured to engage by all the coquetry practised with good success in the drawing room on the much more sensible as well as tender hearts of the fine gentlemen there

The contrary happens in that love which operates between persons of the same species but of different sexes Here we are no sooner in love than it becomes our principal care to engage the affection of the object beloved For what other purpose indeed are our youth instructed in all the arts of rendering themselves agreeable? If it was not with a view to this love I question whether any of those trades which deal in setting off and adorning the human person would procure a livelihood Nay those great polishers of our manners who are by some thought to teach what principally distinguishes us from the brute creation even dancing masters themselves might possibly find no place in society In short all the graces which young ladies and young gentlemen too learn from others and the many improvements which by the help of a looking glass they add of their own are in reality those very spicula et faces amoris so often mentioned by Ovid or as they are sometimes called in our own language the whole artillery of love

Now Mrs Waters and our heroe had no sooner sat down together than the former began to play this artillery upon the latter But here as we are about to attempt a description hitherto unassayed either in prose or verse we think proper to invoke the assistance of certain aerial beings who will we doubt not come kindly to our aid on this occasion

Say then ye Graces! you that inhabit the heavenly mansions of Seraphina s countenance for you are truly divine are always in her presence and well know all the arts of charming say what were the weapons now used to captivate the heart of Mr Jones

First from two lovely blue eyes whose bright orbs flashed lightning at their discharge [illegible]

ceived their miscarriage and immediately from her fair bosom drew forth a deadly sigh A sigh which none could have heard unmoved and which was sufficient at once to have swept off a dozen beaus so soft so sweet so tender that the insinuating air must have found its subtle way to the heart of our heroe had it not luckily been driven from his ears by the coarse bubbling of some bottled ale which at that time he was pouring forth Many other weapons did she assay but the god of eating (if there be any such deity for I do not confidently assert it) preserved his votary or perhaps it may not be dignus vindice nodus and the present security of Jones may be accounted for by natural means for as love frequently preserves from the attacks of hunger so may hunger possibly in some cases defend us against love

The fair one enraged at her frequent disappointments determined on a short cessation of arms Which interval she employed in making ready every engine of amorous warfare for the renewing of the attack when dinner should be over

No sooner then was the cloth removed than she again began her operations First having planted her right eye sidewise against Mr Jones she shot from its corner a most penetrating glance which though great part of its force was spent before it reached our heroe did not vent itself absolutely without effect This the fair one perceiving hastily withdrew her eyes and levelled them downwards as if she was concerned for what she had done though by this means she designed only to draw him from his guard and indeed to open his eyes through which she intended to surprise his heart And now gently lifting up those two bright orbs which had already begun to make an impression on poor Jones she discharged a volley of small charms at once [illegible]

This smile our heroe received full in his eyes and was immediately staggered with its force He then began to see the designs of the enemy and indeed to feel their success A parley now was set on foot between the parties [illegible]

obliged to exhaust his small remainder of breath in begging for quarter

The young lady was now desirous to de part and had given orders for her coach to be prepared but all in vain for the coach man was disabled from performing his office for that evening An antient heathen would perhaps have imputed this disability to the god of drink no less than to the god of war for in reality both the combatants had sacrificed as well to the former deity as to the latter To speak plainly they were both dead drunk nor was Partridge in a much better situation As for my landlord drinking was his trade and the liquor had no more effect on him than it had on any other vessel in his house

The mistress of the inn being summoned to attend Mr Jones and his companion at their tea gave a full relation of the latter part of the foregoing scene and at the same time expressed great concern for the young lady who she said was under the utmost un easiness at being prevented from pursuing her journey She is a sweet pretty creature added she and I am certain I have seen her face be fore I fancy she is in love and running away from her friends Who knows but some young gentleman or other may be expecting her, with a heart as heavy as her own?

Jones fetched a heavy sigh at those words of which though Mrs Waters observed it she took no notice while the landlady continued in the room but after the departure of that good woman she could not forbear giving our hero certain hints on her suspecting some very dangerous rival in his affections The aukward behaviour of Mr Jones on this occasion con vinced her of the truth without his giving her a direct answer to any of her questions but she was not nice enough in her amours to be greatly concerned at the discovery The beauty of Jones highly charmed her eye but as she could not see his heart she gave herself no concern about it She could feast heartily at the table of love without reflecting that some other already had been or hereafter might be feasted with the same repast A sentiment which if it deals but little in re finement deals however much in substance and is less capricious and perhaps less ill natured and selfish than the desires of those females who can be contented enough to ab stain from the possession of their lovers pro vided they are sufficiently satisfied that no one else possesses them

Chapter 7

Containing a fuller account of Mrs Waters and by what means she came into that distressful situation from which she was rescued by Jones

Though Nature hath by no means mixed up an equal share either of curiosity or vanity in every human composition there is perhaps no individual to whom she hath not allotted such a proportion of both as requires much arts and pains too to subdue and keep under —a conquest however absolutely necessary to every one who would in any degree deserve the characters of wisdom or good breeding

As Jones therefore might very justly be posed to have occasioned He had indeed at first thrown out some few hints to the lady but when he perceived her industriously avoiding any explanation he was contented to remain in ignorance the rather as he was not without suspicion that there were some circumstances which must have raised her blushes had she related the whole truth

Now since it is possible that some of our readers may not so easily acquiesce under the same ignorance and as we are very desirous to satisfy them all we have taken uncommon pains to inform ourselves of the real fact with the relation of which we shall conclude this book

This lady then had lived some years with one Captain Waters who was a captain in the same regiment to which Mr Northerton be longed She past for that gentleman s wife and went by his name and yet as the serjeant said there were some doubts concerning the reality of their marriage which we shall not at present take upon us to resolve

Mrs Waters I am sorry to say it had for some time contracted an intimacy with the above mentioned ensign which did no great credit to her reputation That she had a re markable fondness for that young fellow is most certain but whether she indulged this to any very criminal lengths is not so extremely clear unless we will suppose that women never grant every favour to a man but one without erton was the ensign so that the former had reached Worcester the very day after the unfortunate re encounter between Jones and Northerton which we have before recorded

Now it had been agreed between Mrs Waters and the captain that she would accompany him in his march as far as Worcester where they were to take their leave of each other and she was thence to return to Bath where she was to stay till the end of the winter's campaign against the rebels

With this agreement Mr Northerton was made acquainted To say the truth the lady had made him an assignation at this very place and promised to stay at Worcester till his division came thither with what view and for what purpose must be left to the reader s divination for though we are obliged to relate facts we are not obliged to do a violence to our nature by any comments to the disadvantage of the loveliest part of the creation

Northerton no sooner obtained a release from his captivity as we have seen than he hasted away to overtake Mrs Waters which as he was a very active nimble fellow he did at the last mentioned city some few hours after Captain Waters had left her At his first arrival he made no scruple of acquainting her with the unfortunate accident which he made appear very unfortunate indeed for he totally extracted every particle of what could be called fault, at least in a court of honour though he left some circumstances which might be questionable in a court of law

Women to their glory be it spoken are more generally capable of that violent and apparently disinterested passion of love which seeks only the good of its object than men Mrs Waters therefore was no sooner apprized of the danger to which her lover was exposed than she lost every consideration besides that

m ght find some conveyance to one of the sea ports in Wales and thence might make his escape abroad In all which expedition Mrs Waters declared she would bear him company and for which she was able to furnish him with money a very material article to Mr Northerton she having then in her pocket three bank notes to the amount of £90 besides some cash and a diamond ring of pretty considerable value on her finger All which she with the utmost confidence revealed to this wicked man little suspecting she should by these means inspire him with a design of robbing her Now as they must by taking horses from Worcester have furnished any pursuers with the means of hereafter discovering their route the ensign proposed and the lady presently agreed to make their first stage on foot for which purpose the hardness of the frost was very seasonable

The main part of the lady s baggage was already at Bath and she had nothing with her at present besides a very small quantity of linen which the gallant undertook to carry in his own pockets All things therefore being settled in the evening they arose early the next morning and at five o clock departed from Worcester it being then above two hours before day but the moon which was then at the full gave them all the light she was capable of affording

Mrs Waters was not of that delicate race of women who are obliged to the invention of vehicles for the capacity of removing themselves from one place to another and with whom consequently a coach is reckoned among the necessaries of life Her limbs were indeed full of strength and agility and as her mind was no less animated with spirit she was perfectly able to keep pace with her nimble lover

Having travelled on for some miles in a high road which Northerton said he was in*formed led to Hereford they came at the break* of day to the side of a large wood where he sud companion to strike with him into a path which seemed to lead directly through the wood and which at length brought them both to the bottom of Mazard Hill

Whether the execrable scheme which he now attempted to execute was the effect of previous deliberation or whether it now first came into his head I cannot determine but being arrived in this lonely place where it was very improbable he should meet with any interruption he suddenly slipped his garter from his leg and laying violent hands on the poor woman endeavoured to perpetrate that dreadful and detestable fact which we have before commemorated and which the providential appearance of Jones did so fortunately prevent

Happy was it for Mrs. Waters that she was not of the weakest order of females for no sooner did she perceive by his tying a kno

ance that she delayed the execution of the villain s purpose several minutes by which means Mr Jones came to her relief at that very instant when her strength failed and she was totally overpowered and delivered her from the ruffian s hands with no other loss than that of her cloaths which were torn from her back and of the diamond ring which during the contention either dropped from her finger or was wrenched from it by Northerton

Thus reader we have given thee the fruits of a very painful enquiry which for thy satis faction we have made into this matter And here we have opened to thee a scene of folly as well as villany which we could scarce have be lieved a human creature capable of being guilty of had we not remembered that this fellow was at that time firmly persuaded that he had already committed a murder and had forfeited his life to the law As he concluded therefore that his only safety lay in flight, he thought the possessing himself of this poor woman s money and ring would make him amends for the additional burthen he was to lay on his conscience

And here reader we must strictly caution thee that thou dost not take any occasion from the misbehaviour of such a wretch as this to reflect on so worthy and honourable a body of men as are the officers of our army in general Thou wilt be pleased to consider that this fel low as we have already informed thee had neither the birth nor education of a gentle man nor was a proper person to be enrolled among the number of such If therefore his baseness can justly reflect on any besides him self it must be only on those who gave him his commission

BOOK X

In which the history goes forward about twelve hours

Chapter 1

Containing instructions very necessary to be perused by modern critics

Reader it is impossible we should know what sort of person thou wilt be for perhaps thou may st be as learned in human nature as Shakespear himself was and perhaps thou may st be no wiser than some of his editors Now lest this latter should be the case we think proper before we go any farther together to give thee a few wholesome admonitions that thou may st not as grossly misunderstand and misrepresent us as some of the said editors have misunderstood and misrepresented their author

First then we warn thee not too hastily to condemn any of the incidents in this our his tory as impertinent and foreign to our main design because thou dost not immediately con ceive in what manner such incident may con duce to that design This work may indeed be considered as a great creation of our own and for a little reptile of a critic to presume to find fault with any of its parts without knowing the manner in which the whole is connected and before he comes to the final catastrophe is a most presumptuous absurdity The allusion and metaphor we have here made use of we must acknowledge to be infinitely too great for our occasion but there is indeed no other, which is at all adequate to express the differ ence between an author of the first rate and a critic of the lowest

Another caution we would give thee my good reptile is that thou dost not find out too near a resemblance between certain characters here introduced as for instance between the landlady who appears in the seventh book and her in the ninth Thou art to know friend that there are certain characteristics in which most individuals of every profession and occupation agree To be able to preserve these character istics and at the same time to diversify their operations is one talent of a good writer Again to mark the nice distinction between two persons actuated by the same vice or folly is another and as this last talent is found in very few writers so is the true discernment of it found in as few readers though I believe the observation of this forms a very principal pleasure in those who are capable of the dis covery, every person, for instance, can distinguish between Sir Epicure Mammon and Sir Fopling Flutter, but to note the difference between Sir Fopling Flutter and Sir Courtly Nice requires a more exquisite judgment for want of which, vulgar spectators of plays very often do great injustice in the theatre, where I have sometimes known a poet in danger of being convicted as a thief, upon much worse evidence than the resemblance of hands hath been held

In the next place, we must admonish thee, my worthy friend (for, perhaps, thy heart may be better than thy head), not to condemn a character as a bad one, because it is not perfectly a good one If thou dost delight in these models of perfection, there are books enow written to gratify thy taste, but, as we have not, in the course of our conversation, ever happened to meet with any such person, we have not chosen to introduce any such here To say the truth, I a little question whether mere man ever arrived at this consummate degree of excellence, as well as whether there hath ever existed a monster bad enough to verify that

—nulla virtute redemptum
A vitiis— *

in Juvenal, nor do I, indeed conceive the good purposes served by inserting characters of such angelic perfection, or such diabolical depravity, in any work of invention, since, from contemplating either, the mind of man is more likely to be overwhelmed with sorrow and shame than to draw any good uses from such patterns, for in the former instance he may be both concerned and ashamed to see a pattern with those uneasy sensations, at seeing the nature of which he is a partaker degraded into so odious and detestable a creature

In fact, if there be enough of goodness in a character to engage the admiration and affection of a well-disposed mind though there should appear some of those little blemishes quas humana parum cavit natura, they will raise our compassion rather than our abhorrence Indeed, nothing can be of more moral use than the imperfections which are seen in examples of this kind, since such form a kind of surprize, more apt to affect and dwell upon our minds than the faults of very vicious and wicked persons The foibles and vices of men, in whom there is great mixture of good, become more glaring objects from the virtues which contrast them and shew their deformity, and when we find such vices attended with their evil consequence to our favourite characters, we are not only taught to shun them for our own sake, but to hate them for the mischiefs they have already brought on those we love.

And now, my friend, having given you these few admonitions, we will, if you please, once more set forward with our history.

Chapter 2

Containing the arrival of an Irish gentleman, with very extraordinary adventures which ensued at the inn

Now the little trembling hare, which the dread of all her numerous enemies, and chiefly of that cunning cruel, carnivorous animal, man, had confined all the day to her lurking place, sports wantonly o'er the lawns, now on some hollow tree the owl, shrill chorister of the night, hoots forth notes which might charm the ears of some modern connoisseurs in music, now, in the imagination of the half-drunk ring she being obliged to wash the kitchen before she retired to the arms of the fond expecting hostler and confused manner, being almost out of breath with eagerness, Whether there was any lady in the house? The hour of night, and the behaviour of the man, who stared very wildly all the time, a little surprized Susan, so that she hesitated before she made any answer, upon which the gentleman, with redoubled eagerness, begged her to give him a true in formation saying he had lost his wife and was come in pursuit of her Upon my shoul cries he I have been near catching her already in two or three places if I had not found her gone just as I came up with her If she be in the house, do carry me up in the dark and show her to me and if she be gone away before me do tell me which way I shall go after her to meet her and upon my shoul I will make you the richest poor woman in the nation He then pulled out a handful of guineas a sight which would have bribed persons of much greater consequence than this poor wench to much worse purposes

* Whose vices are not allayed with a single virtue.

Susan from the account she had received of Mrs Waters made not the least doubt but that she was the very identical stray whom the right owner pursued As she concluded there fore with great appearance of reason that she never could get money in an honester way than by restoring a wife to her husband she made no scruple of assuring the gentleman that the lady he wanted was then in the house and was presently afterwards prevailed upon (by very liberal promises and some earnest paid into her hands) to conduct him to the bedchamber of Mrs Waters

It hath been a custom long established in the polite world and that upon very solid and substantial reasons that a husband shall never enter his wife s apartment without first knock ing at the door The many excellent uses of this custom need scarce be hinted to a reader who hath any knowledge of the world for by this means the lady hath time to adjust herself or to remove any disagreeable object out of the way for there are some situations in which nice and delicate women would not be dis covered by their husbands

To say the truth there are several ceremo nies instituted among the polished part of man kind which though they may to coarser judg ments appear as matters of mere form are found to have much of substance in them by the more discerning and lucky would it have been had the custom above mentioned been observed by our gentleman in the present in stance Knock indeed he did at the door but not with one of those gentle raps which is usual on such occasions On the contrary when he found the door locked he flew at it with such violence that the lock immediately gave way the door burst open and he fell headlong into the room

He had no sooner recovered his legs than forth from the bed upon his legs likewise ap peared—with shame and sorrow are we obliged to proceed—our heroe himself who with a menacing voice demanded of the gentleman who he was and what he meant by daring to burst open his chamber in that outrageous manner

The gentleman at first thought he had com mitted a mistake and was going to ask pardon and retreat when on a sudden as the moon shone very bright he cast his eyes on stays, gowns petticoats caps ribbons stockings gar ters shoes clogs &c all which lay in a dis*ordered manner on the floor All these oper* ating on the natural jealousy of his temper so enraged him that he lost all power of speech and without returning any answer to Jones he endeavoured to approach the bed

Jones immediately interposing a fierce con tention arose which soon proceeded to blows on both sides And now Mrs Waters (for we must confess she was in the same bed) being I suppose awakened from her sleep and see ing two men fighting in her bedchamber be gan to scream in the most violent manner cry ing out murder! robbery! and more frequently rape! which last some perhaps may wonder she should mention who do not consider that these words of exclamation are used by ladies in a fright as fa la la ra, da &c are in mu sic only as the vehicles of sound and without any fixed ideas

Next to the lady s chamber was deposited the body of an Irish gentleman who arrived too late at the inn to have been mentioned be fore This gentleman was one of those whom the Irish call a calabalaro or cavalier He was a younger brother of a good family and hav ing no fortune at home was obliged to look abroad in order to get one for which purpose he was proceeding to the Bath to try his luck with cards and the women

This young fellow lay in bed reading one of Mrs Behn s novels for he had been instructed by a friend that he would find no more effec tual method of recommending himself to the ladies than the improving his understanding and filling his mind with good literature He no sooner therefore heard the violent uproar in the next room than he leapt from his bol ster and taking his sword in one hand and the candle which burnt by him in the other he went directly to Mrs Waters s chamber

If the sight of another man in his shirt at first added some shock to the decency of the lady it made her presently amends by con siderably abating her fears for no sooner had the calabalaro entered the room than he cried out Mr Fitzpatrick what the devil is the maning of this? Upon which the other im mediately answered O Mr Maclachlan! I am rejoiced you are here —This villain hath debauched my wife and is got into bed with her — What wife? cries Maclachlan do not I know Mrs Fitzpatrick very well and don t I see that the lady whom the gentleman who stands here in his shirt is lying in bed with is none of her?

Fitzpatrick now perceiving as well by the glimpse he had of the lady as by her voice which m ght have been distinguished at a greater distance than he now stood from her that he had made a very unfortunate mistake began to ask many pardons of the lady and then turning to Jones he said I would have you take notice I do not ask your pardon for you have bate me for which I am resolved to have your blood in the morning

Jones treated this menace with much con tempt and Mr Maclachlan answered In deed Mr Fitzpatrick you may be ashamed of your own self to disturb people at this time of night if all the people in the inn were not asleep you would have awakened them as you have me The gentleman has served you very rightly Upon my conscience though I have no wife if you had treated her so I would have cut your throat "

Jones was so confounded with his fears for his lady s reputation that he knew neither what to say or do but the invention of women is as hath been observed much readier than that of men She recollected that there was a com munication between her chamber and that of Mr Jones relying therefore on his honour and her own assurance she answered I know not what you mean villains! I am wife to none of you Help! Rape! Murder! Rape! —And now the landlady coming into the room Mrs Waters fell upon her with the utmost viru lence saying She thought herself in a sober inn and not in a bawdy house but that a set of villains had broke into her room with an intent upon her honour if not upon her life and both she said were equally dear to her

The landlady now began to roar as loudly as the poor woman in bed had done before She cried She was undone and that the repu tation of her house which was never blown upon before was utterly destroyed Then turning to the men she cried What in the devil s name is the reason of all this disturb ance in the lady s room?" Fitzpatrick hang ing down his head repeated That he had committed a mistake for which he heartily asked pardon and then retired with his countryman Jones who was too ingenious to have missed the hint given him by his fair one boldly asserted That he had run to her as sistance upon hearing the door broke open with what design he could not conceive unless of robbing the lady which if they intended he said he had the good fortune to prevent

I never had a robbery committed in my house since I have kept it cries the landlady I would have you to know sir I harbour no highwaymen here I scorn the word thof I say it None but honest good gentlefolks are wel come to my house and I thank good luck I have always had enow of such customers in deed as many as I could entertain Here hath been my lord— and then she repeated over him to do it " The reader may inform himself of her answer and indeed of her whole be haviour to the end of the scene by consider ing the situation which she affected it being that of a modest lady who was awakened out of her sleep by three strange men in her cham ber This was the part which she undertook to perform and indeed she executed it so well that none of our theatrical actresses could exceed her in any of their performances either on or off the stage

And hence I think we may very fairly draw an argument to prove how extremely natural virtue is to the fair sex for though there is not perhaps one in ten thousand who is cap able of making a good actress and even among these we rarely see two who are equally able to personate the same character yet this of virtue they can all admirably well put on and as well those individuals who have it not as those who possess it can all act it to the utmost degree of perfection

When the men were all departed Mrs.

again to number the many great persons w had slept under her roof, but the lady stopt her short, and having absolutely acquitted her of having had any share in the past disturb ance, begged to be left to her repose, which, she said, she hoped to enjoy unmolested during the remainder of the night Upon which the landlady, after much civility and many court sies, took her leave

Chapter 3

A dialogue between the landlady and Susan the chambermaid, proper to be read by all inn keepers and their servants, with the arrival, and affable behaviour of a beautiful young lady, which may teach persons of condition how they may acquire the love of the whole world

The landlady, remembering that Susan had been the only person out of bed when the

and when and how he arrived

Susan related the whole story which the reader knows already, varying the truth only in some circumstances as she saw convenient, and totally concealing the money which she had received But whereas her mistress had, in the preface to her enquiry spoken much in compassion for the fright which the lady had been in concerning any intended depredations on her virtue Susan could not help endeavour ing to quiet the concern which her mistress seemed to be under on that account, by swear a woman should cry out and endeavour to twenty people can witness for her she did? I no vagabonds nor wicked beggarly people come here

"Well, says Susan then I must not believe my own eyes No, indeed must you not always," answered her mistress I would not have believed my own eyes against such good gentlefolks I have not had a better supper ordered this half year than they ordered last night, and so easy and good humoured were they, that they found no fault with my Wor cestershire perry, which I sold them for cham pagne, and to be sure it is as well tasted and as wholesome as the best champagne in the kingdom otherwise I would scorn to give it 'em, and they drank me two bottles No, no, I will never believe any harm of such sober good sort of people"

Susan being thus silenced, her mistress pro ceeded to other matters "And so you tell me," continued she, "that the strange gentleman came post, and there is a footman without with the horses, why, then, he is certainly some of your great gentlefolks too Why did not you thing when he finds anybody stirring in the house to dress it Now don't commit any of your usual blunders, by telling him the fire's out and the fowls alive And if he should order mutton, don t blab out that we have none. The butcher I know, killed a sheep just before I went to bed and he never refuses to cut it up warm when I desire it Go, remember there's all sorts of mutton and fowls, go, open the door with, Gentlemen, d ye call? and if they say nothing, ask what his honour will be pleased to have for supper? Don't forget his honour Go, if you don't mind all these mat ters better, you ll never come to anything"

Susan departed, and soon returned with an account that the two gentlemen were got both into the same bed 'Two gentlemen,' says the landlady, "in the same bed! that's impossible, they are two arrant scrubs, I warrant them, and I believe young Squire Allworthy guessed right, that the fellow intended to rob her lady ship for if he had broke open the lady's door with any of the wicked designs of a gentleman, he would never have sneaked away to another room to save the expense of a supper and a bed to himself They are certainly thieves and their searching after a wife is nothing but a pretence '

In these censures my landlady did Mr Fitz patrick great injustice, for he was really born a gentleman, though not worth a groat, and though, perhaps he had some few blemishes in his heart as well as in his head, yet being a sneaking or a niggardly fellow was not one of them In reality, he was so generous a man that, whereas he had received a very handsome fortune with his wife, he had now spent every penny of it, except some little pittance which was settled upon her, and, in order to possess himself of this, he had used her with such cruelty, that, together with his jealousy, which was of the bitterest kind, it had forced the poor woman to run away from him

This gentleman then being well tired with his long journey from Chester in one day, with which, and some good dry blows he had received in the scuffle, his bones were so sore, that, added to the soreness of his mind, it had quite deprived him of any appetite for eating. And being now so violently disappointed in the woman whom, at the maid s instance, he had mistaken for his wife, it never once entered into his head that she might nevertheless be in the house, though he had erred in the first person he had attacked. He therefore yielded to the dissuasions of his friend from searching any farther after her that night, and accepted the kind offer of part of his bed

The footman and post boy were in a different disposition They were more ready to order than the landlady was to provide, however, after being pretty well satisfied by them of the real truth of the case, and that Mr Fitzpatrick was no thief, she was at length prevailed on to set some cold meat before them, which they were devouring with great greediness, when Partridge came into the kitchen He had been first awaked by the hurry which we have before seen and while he was en

His arrival detained my landlady from returning to her rest for she was just about to leave the other two guests to the care of Susan, but the friend of young Squire Allworthy was not to be so neglected, especially as he called for a pint of wine to be mulled She immediately obeyed, by putting the same quantity of perry to the fire, for this readily answered to the name of every kind of wine

The Irish footman was retired to bed and the post boy was going to follow but Partridge invited him to stay and partake of his wine, which the lad very thankfully accepted The schoolmaster was indeed afraid to return to bed by himself, and as he did not know how soon he might lose the company of my landlady, he was resolved to secure that of the boy, in whose presence he apprehended no danger from the devil or any of his adherents

And now arrived another post boy at the gate, upon which Susan, being ordered out, returned, introducing two young women in riding habits, one of which was so very richly laced, that Partridge and the post boy instantly started from their chairs and my landlady fell to her courtsies, and her ladyships, with great eagerness

The lady in the rich habit said, with a smile of great condescension, "If you will give me leave, madam, I will *warm myself a few min*utes at your kitchen fire, for it is really very cold, but I must insist on disturbing no one from his seat" This was spoken on account of Partridge, who had retreated to the other end of the room, struck with the utmost awe and astonishment at the splendor of the lady's dress Indeed, she had a much better title to respect than this, for she was one of the most beautiful creatures in the world

The lady earnestly desired Partridge to return to his seat, but could not prevail She then pulled off her gloves, and displayed to the fire two hands, which had every property of snow in them, except that of melting Her companion, who was indeed her maid, likewise pulled off her gloves, and discovered what bore an exact resemblance, in cold and colour, to a piece of frozen beef

'I wish, madam," quoth the latter, "your ladyship would not think of going any farther to-night I am terribly afraid your ladyship will not be able to bear the fatigue"

"Why sure,' cries the landlady, 'her ladyship's honour can never intend it O, bless me! farther to-night, indeed! let me beseech your ladyship not to think on't——But, to be sure, your ladyship can't What will your honour be pleased to have for supper? I have mutton of all kinds and some nice chicken '

"I think, madam," said the lady, "it would be rather breakfast than supper, but I can't eat anything, and if I stay, shall only lie down for an hour or two However, if you please, madam, you may get me a little sack whey, made very small and thin"

'Yes, madam" cries the mistress of the house, 'I have some excellent white wine"—"You have no sack, then?' says the lady "Yes, an t please your honour, I have, I may challenge the country for that—but let me beg your ladyship to eat something"

'Upon my word, I can't eat a morsel" answered the lady, "and I shall be much obliged to you if you will please to get my apartment ready as soon as possible, for I am resolved to be on horseback again in three hours"

Why Susan cries the landlady is there a fire lit yet in the Wild goose? I am sorry madam all my best rooms are full Several people of the first quality are now in bed Here s a great young squire and many other great gentlefolks of quality Susan answered That the Irish gentlemen were got into the Wild goose

Was ever anything like it? says the mistress why the devil would you not keep some of the best rooms for the quality when you know scarce a day passes without some calling here?——If they be gentlemen I am certain when they know it is for her ladyship they will get up again

Not upon my account says the lady I will have no person disturbed for me If you [illegible] cries the other I have several very good rooms for that matter but none good enough for your honour s ladyship However as you are so condescending to take up with the best I have do Susan get a fire in the Rose this minute Will your ladyship be pleased to go up now or stay till the fire is lighted? I think I have sufficiently warmed myself answered the lady so if you please I will go now I am afraid I have kept people and particularly that gentleman (meaning Partridge) too long in the cold already Indeed I cannot bear to think of keeping any person from the fire this dreadful weather —She then departed with her maid the landlady marching with two lighted candles before her

When that good woman returned the conversation in the kitchen was all upon the charms of the young lady There is indeed in perfect beauty a power which none almost can withstand for my landlady though she was not pleased at the negative given to the supper declared she had never seen so lovely a creature Partridge ran out into the most extravagant encomiums on her face though he could not refrain from paying some com*pliments* to the gold lace on her habit the post boy sung forth the praises of her good*ness which* were likewise echoed by the other post boy who was now come in She s a true good lady I warrant her " says he for she hath mercy upon dumb creatures for she asked me every now and tan upon the journey if I did not think she should hurt the horses by riding too fast? and when she came in she charged me to give them as much corn as ever they would eat

Such charms are there in affability and so sure is it to attract the praises of all kinds of people It may indeed be compared to the celebrated Mrs Hussey * It is equally sure to set off every female perfection to the highest advantage and to palliate and conceal every defect A short reflection which we could not forbear making in this place where my reader hath seen the loveliness of an affable deportment and truth will now oblige us to contrast it by showing the reverse

Chapter 4

Containing infallible nostrums for procuring universal disesteem and hatred

The lady had no sooner laid herself on her pillow than the waiting woman returned to the kitchen to regale with some of those dainties which her mistress had refused

The company at her entrance shewed her the same respect which they had before paid to her mistress by rising but she forgot to imitate her by desiring them to sit down again Indeed it was scarce possible they should have done so for she placed her chair in such a posture as to occupy almost the whole fire She then ordered a chicken to be broiled that instant declaring if it was not ready in a quarter of an hour she would not stay for it Now though the said chicken was then at roost in the stable and required the several ceremonies of catching killing and picking before it was brought to the gridiron my landlady would nevertheless have undertaken to do all within the time but the guests being unfortunately admitted behind the scenes must have been witness to the fourberie† the poor woman was therefore obliged to confess that she had none in the house but madam said she I can get any kind of mutton in an instant from the butcher s

Do you think then answered the waiting-gentlewoman that I have the stomach of a horse to eat mutton at this time of night? Sure you people that keep inns imagine your betters are like yourselves Indeed I expected to get nothing at this wretched place I wonder my lady would stop at it I suppose none but tradesmen and graziers ever call here The landlady fired at this indignity offered to her house however she suppressed her temper and contented herself with saying Very good qual ty frequented it she thanked heaven!

* A celebrated mantua maker in the Strand famous for setting off the shapes of women

† Deceit

Don t tell me cries the other of quality! I believe I know more of people of quality than such as you—But prithee without troubling me with any of your impertinence do tell me could not take me again at such a disadvan tage for I must confess I have nothing in the house unless a cold piece of beef which in deed a gentleman s footman and the post boy have almost cleared to the bone Woman said Mrs Abigail (so for shortness we will call her) I entreat you not to make me sick If I had fasted a month I could not eat what had been touched by the fingers of such fellows Is there nothing neat or decent to be had in this horrid place? What think you of some eggs and bacon madam? said the landlady "Are your eggs new laid? are you certain they were laid to-day? and let me have the bacon cut very nice and thin for I can t endure any thing that s gross—Prithee try if you can do a little tolerably for once and don t think you have a farmer s wife or some of those creatures in the house —The landlady began then to handle her knife but the other stopt her say ing Good woman I must insist upon your first washing your hands for I am extremely nice and have been always used from my cradle to have everything in the most elegant manner

The landlady who governed herself with much difficulty began now the necessary prep arations for as to Susan she was utterly re jected and with such disdain that the poor wench was as hard put to it to restrain her hands from violence as her mistress had been gail began to lament she had not ordered a fire in the parlour but she said that was now too late However said she I have novelty to recommend a kitchen for I do not believe I ever eat in one before Then turn ng to the post boys she asked them Why they were not in the stal le with their horses? If I must eat my hard fare here madam" cries she to the landlady I beg the kitchen may be kept clear that I may not be surrounded

but mob

"Yes yes madam cries Partridge I am a gentleman I do assure you and I am not so easily to be disturbed. Non semper vox casualis est verbo nominativus This Latin she took to be some affront and answered You may be a gentleman sir but you don t show your self as one to talk Latin to a woman Part ridge made a gentle reply and concluded with more Latin upon which she tossed up her nose and contented herself by abusing him with the name of a great scholar

The supper being now on the table Mrs Abigail eat very heartily for so delicate a per son and while a second course of the same was by her order preparing she said And so madam you tell me your house is frequented by people of great quality?

The landlady answered in the affirmative saying There were a great many very good quality and gentlefolks in it now There s young Squire Allworthy as that gentleman there knows

"And pray who is this young gentleman of quality this young Squire Allworthy? said Abigail

Who should he be answered Partridge but the son and heir of the great Squire All worthy of Somersetshire!

Upon my word said she you tell me strange news for I know Mr Allworthy of Somersetshire very well, and I know he hath no son alive

The landlady pricked up her ears at this and Partridge looked a little confounded How ever after a short hesitation he answered Indeed madam it is true everybody doth not know him to be Squire Allworthy s son for he was never married to his mother but his son he certainly is and will be his heir too as certainly as his name is Jones At that word Abigail let drop the bacon which she was conveying to her mouth and cried out You surprize me s r! Is it possible Mr Jones should be now in the house?" Quare non? answered Partr dge "it is possil le and it is certain

Abigail now made haste to finish the re mainder of her meal and then repaired back to her mistress, when the conversation passed which may be read in the next chapter showing who the amiable lady and her unamiable maid were

Chapter 5

As in the month of June the damask rose h chance hath planted among the lilies, of May diffuses her odo r the flowery meadows or as, in the blooming month of April the gentle constant dove perched on some fair bough sits meditating on her mate so looking a hundred charms and breathing as many sweets her thoughts being fixed on her Tommy with a heart as good and innocent as her face was beautiful Sophia (for it was she herself) lay reclining her lovely head on her hand when her maid entered the room and running directly to the bed cried Madam–madam–who doth your ladyship think is in the house? Sophia starting up cried I hope my father hath not overtaken us No madam it is one worth a hundred fathers Mr Jones himself is here at this very instant Mr Jones! says Sophia it is impossible! I cannot be so fortunate Her maid averred the fact and was presently detached by her mistress to order him to be called for she said she was resolved to see h m mmediately

landlady te

woman had indeed been loading her heart with foul language for some time and now it scoured out of her mouth as filth doth from a mud-cart when the board which confines it is removed Partridge likewise shovelled in his share of calumny and (what may surprize the reader) not only bespattered the maid but attempted to sully the lily white character of Sophia herself Never a barrel the better herring cries he Noscitur à socio is a true saying It must be confessed indeed that the lady in the fine garments is the civiller of the two but I warrant neither of them are a bit better than they should be A couple of Bath trulls I ll answer for them your quality don t ride about at this time o night without servants Sbodlikins and that s true cries the landlady you have certainly hit upon the very matter for quality don t come into a house without bespeaking a supper whether they eat it or no

While they were thus discoursing Mrs Honour returned and discharged her commission by bidding the landlady immediately wake Mr Jones and tell him a lady wanted to speak with him The landlady referred her to Partridge saying he was the squire s —alled men alked oplied or my and he would be very angry to be distu soon Mrs Honour insisted still to have him called saying she was sure instead of being angry that he would be to the highest degree delighted when he knew the occasion Another time perhaps he might cries Partridge but non omnia possumus omnes One woman is enough at once for a reasonable man What do you mean by one woman fellow? cries Honour None of your fellow answered Partridge He then proceeded to inform her plainly that Jones was in bed with a wench and made use of an expression too indelicate to be here inserted which so enraged Mrs Honour that she called him jackanapes and returned in a violent hurry to her mistress whom she acquainted with the success of her errand and with the account she had received which if possible she exaggerated being as angry with Jones as if he had pronounced all the words that came from the mouth of Partridge She discharged a torrent of abuse on the master and advised her mistress to quit all thoughts of a man who had never shown himself deserving of her She then ripped up the story of the most malicious rself t not a little countenanced

The spirits of Sophia were too much dissipated by concern to enable her to stop the torrent of her maid At last however she interrupted her saying I never can believe this some villain hath belied him You say you had it from his friend but surely it is not the office of a friend to betray such secrets "I suppose cries Honour the fellow is his pimp for I never saw so ill looked a villain Besides such profligate rakes as Mr Jones are never ashamed of these matters.

To say the truth this behaviour of Partridge was a little inexcusable but he had not slept off the effect of the dose which he swallowed the evening before which had in the morning received the addition of above a pint of wine or indeed rather of malt spirits for the perry was by no means pure Now that part of his head which Nature designed for the reservoir of drink being very shallow a small quantity of liquor overflowed it and opened the sluices of his heart so that all the secrets there deposited run out These sluices were indeed naturally very ill secured To give the best natured turn we can to his disposition he was a very honest man for as he was the most inquisitive of mortals and eternally prying into the secrets of others so he very faithfully paid them by communicating in return everything within his knowledge

While Sophia tormented with anxiety knew not what to believe nor what resolution to take Susan arrived with the sack whey Mrs Honour immediately advised her mistress in a whisper to pump this wench who probably could inform her of the truth Sophia approved it and began as follows Come hither child now answer me truly what I am going to ask you, and I promise you I will very well reward you Is there a young gentleman in this house a handsome young gentleman that—— Here Sophia blushed and was confounded A young gentleman cries Honour that came hither in company with that saucy rascal who is now in the kitchen? Susan answered "There was — Do you know anything of any lady? continues Sophia any lady? I don t ask you whether she is handsome or no perhaps she is not that s nothing to the purpose but do you know of any lady? La madam cries Honour you will make a very bad examiner Hark ee child says she is not that very young gentleman now in bed with some nasty trull or other? Here Susan smiled and was silent Answer the question child says Sophia and here s a guinea for you — A guinea! madam cries Susan la what s a guinea? If my mistress should know it I shall certainly lose my place that very instant "Here s another for you says Sophia and I promise you faithfully your mistress shall never know it Susan after a very short hesitation took the money and told the whole story concluding with saying If you have any great curiosity madam I can steal softly into his room and see whether he be in his own bed or no She accordingly did this by Sophia s desire and returned with an answer in the negative

Sophia now trembled and turned pale Mrs Honour begged her to be comforted and not to think any more of so worthless a fellow Why there says Susan I hope madam your ladyship won t be offended but pray madam is not your ladyship s name Madam Sophia Western? How is it possible you should know me? answered Sophia Why that man that the gentlewoman spoke of who is in the kitchen told about you last night But I hope your ladyship is not angry with me Indeed child said she, I am not pray tell me all and I promise you I ll reward you "

Why madam continued Susan that man told us all in the kitchen that Madam Sophia Western—indeed I don t know how to bring it out —Here she stopt, till having received encouragement from Sophia and being vehemently pressed by Mrs Honour she proceeded thus — He told us madam though to be sure it is all a lie that your ladyship was dying for love of the young squire and that he was going to the wars to get rid of you I thought to myself then he was a false hearted wretch but now to see such a fine rich beautiful lady as you be forsaken for such an ordinary woman for to be sure so she is and another man s wife into the bargain It is such a strange unnatural thing in a manner

Sophia gave her a third guinea and telling her she would certainly be her friend if she mentioned nothing of what had passed nor informed any one who she was dismissed the girl with orders to the post boy to get the horses ready immediately

Being now left alone with her maid she told her trusty waiting woman That she never was more easy than at present I am now convinced said she he is not only a villain but a low despicable wretch I can forgive all rather than his exposing my name in so barbarous a manner That renders him the object of my contempt Yes Honour I am now easy I am indeed I am very easy and then she burst into a violent flood of tears

After a short interval spent by Sophia chiefly in crying and assuring her maid that she was perfectly easy Susan arrived with an account that the horses were ready when a very extraordinary thought suggested itself to our young heroine by which Mr Jones would be acquainted with her having been at the inn in a way which if any sparks of affection for her remained in him would be at least some punishment for his faults

The reader will be pleased to remember a little muff which hath had the honour of being more than once remembered already in this history This muff ever since the departure of Mr Jones had been the constant pation of Sophia by day and her bed

by night and this muff she had at this very instant upon her arm whence she took it off with great indignation and having writ her name with her pencil upon a piece of paper which she pinned to it she bribed the maid to convey it into the empty bed of Mr Jones in which if he did not find it she charged her to take some method of conveying it before his count for what she herself might have eaten she mounted her horse and once more assuring her companion that she was perfectly easy continued her journey

Chapter 6

Containing among other things the ingenuity of Partridge the madness of Jones and the folly of Fitzpatrick

It was now past five in the morning and other company began to rise and come to the kitchen among whom were the serjeant and the coachman who being thoroughly reconciled made a libation or in the English phrase drank a hearty cup together

In this drinking nothing more remarkable happened than the behaviour of Partridge who when the serjeant drank a health to King George repeated only the word King nor

it

Mr Jones being now returned to his own bed (but from whence he returned we must beg to be excused from relating) summoned Partridge from this agreeable company who after a ceremonious preface having obtained leave to offer his advice delivered himself as follows —

It is, sir an old saying and a true one that a wise man may sometimes learn counsel from a fool I wish therefore I might be so bold as to offer you my advice which is to return home again and leave these horrida bella these bloody wars to fellows who are contented to swallow gunpowder because they have nothing else to eat Now everybody knows your honour wants for nothing at home when that s the case why should any man travel abroad?

Partridge " cries Jones thou art certainly a coward I wish therefore thou wouldst return home thyself and trouble me no more

I ask your honour s pardon cries Partridge I spoke on your account more than my own for as to me, Heaven knows my cir

may come off with the loss only of an arm or a leg I assure you sir, I was never less afraid in my life and so if your honour is resolved to go on I am resolved to follow you But in that case I wish I might give my opinion To be sure it is a scandalous way of travelling for a great gentleman like you to walk afoot Now here are two or three good horses in the stable which the landlord will certainly make no scruple of trusting you with but if he should I can easily contrive to take them and let the worst come to the worst the king would certainly pardon you as you are going to fight in his cause

Now as the honesty of Partridge was equal to his understanding and both dealt only in small matters he would never have attempted a roguery of this kind had he not imagined it altogether safe for he was one of those who

any danger for besides that he doubted not but the name of Mr Allworthy would sufficiently quiet the landlord he conceived they

When Mr Jones found that Partridge was in earnest in this proposal he very severely rebuked him and that in such bitter terms that the other attempted to laugh it off and presently turned the discourse to other matters saying he believed they were then in a bawdy house and that he had with much ado prevented two wenches from disturbing his honour in the middle of the night Heyday! says he I believe they got into your chamber whether I would or no for here lies the muff of one of them on the ground Indeed as Jones returned to his bed in the dark he had never perceived the muff on the quilt and in leaping into his bed he had tumbled it on the floor This Partridge now took up and was going to put into his pocket when Jones desired to see it The muff was so very remarkable that our heroe might possibly have recollected it without the information annexed

But his memory was not put to that hard office for at the same instant he saw and read the words Sophia Western upon the paper which was pinned to it His looks now grew frantic in a moment, and he eagerly cried out Oh Heavens! how came this muff here? I know no more than your honour cried Partridge but I saw it upon the arm of one of the women who would have disturbed you if I would have suffered them Where are they? cries Jones jumping out of bed and laying hold of his cloaths Many miles off I believe by this time said Partridge And now Jones upon further enquiry was sufficiently assured that the bearer of this muff was no other than the lovely Sophia herself

The behaviour of Jones on this occasion his thoughts his looks his words his actions were such as beggar all description After many bitter execrations on Partridge and not fewer on himself he ordered the poor fellow who was frightened out of his wits to run down and hire him horses at any rate and a very few minutes afterwards having shuffled on his clothes he hastened down stairs to execute the orders himself which he had just before given

But before we proceed to what passed on his arrival in the kitchen it will be necessary to party when the two Irish gentlemen arose and came downstairs both complaining that they had been so often waked by the noises in the inn that they had never once been able to close their eyes all night

The coach which had brought the young lady and her maid and which perhaps the reader may have hitherto concluded was her own was indeed a returned coach belonging to Mr King of Bath one of the worthiest and honestest men that ever dealt in horse-flesh and whose coaches we heartily recommend to all our readers who travel that road By which means they may perhaps have the pleasure of riding in the very coach and being driven by the very coachman that is recorded in this history

The coachman having but two passengers and hearing Mr Maclachlan was going to Bath offered to carry him thither at a very moderate price He was induced to this by the report of the hostler who said that the horse which Mr Maclachlan had hired from Worcester would be much more pleased with returning to his friends there than to prosecute a long journey for that the said horse was rather a two-legged than a four legged animal

Mr Maclachlan immediately closed with the proposal of the coachman and at the same time persuaded his friend Fitzpatrick to accept of the fourth place in the coach. This conveyance the soreness of his bones made more agreeable to him than a horse and being well assured of meeting with his wife at Bath he thought a little delay would be of no consequence

Maclachlan who was much the sharper man of the two no sooner heard that this lady came from Chester with the other circumstances which he learned from the hostler than it came into his head that she might possibly be his friend s wife and presently acquainted him with this suspicion which had never once occurred to Fitzpatrick himself To say the truth he was one of those compositions which nature makes up in too great a hurry and for selves but no sooner doth a dog of sagacity open his mouth than they immediately do the same and without the guidance of any scent run directly forwards as fast as they are able In the same manner the very moment Mr Maclachlan had mentioned his apprehension Mr Fitzpatrick instantly concurred and flew directly up stairs to surprize his wife before he knew where she was and unluckily (as Fortune loves to play tricks with those gentlemen who put themselves entirely under her conduct) ran his head against several doors and posts to no purpose Much kinder was she to me when she suggested that simile of the hounds just before inserted since the poor wife may on these occasions be so

stroyed in the end

This was not however the case at present for after a long fruitless search Mr Fitzpatrick returned to the kitchen where as if this had been a real chace entered a gentleman hallowing as hunters do when the hounds are at a fault He was just alighted from his horse and had many attendants at his heels

Here reader it may be necessary to acquaint thee with some matters which if thou dost know already thou art wiser than I take thee

Chapter 7

In which are concluded the adventures that happened at the inn at Upton

In the first place then this gentleman just arrived was no other person than Squire Western himself who was come hither in pur … d … ter and had he fortunately …

was the wife of … away with her five years before out of the custody of that sage lady Madam Western

Now this lady had departed from the inn much about the same time with Sophia for having been waked by the voice of her husband she had sent up for the landlady and being by her apprized of the matter had bribed the good … oman at an extravagant price to furnish … lence …

reader yet she was no more … ruption herself than poor Susan had been

Mr Western and his nephew were not known to one another nor indeed would the former have taken any notice of the latter if he had known him for this being a stolen …

poor young creature who was … than eighteen as a monster and had never since suffered her to be named in his presence

The kitchen was now a scene of universal … laugh … wife … nately

As soon as Western saw Jones … up the same holla as is used by sportsmen when their …

The jargon which followed for some … where many spoke different things at the same time as it would be very difficult to describe … Vest … g in … ested … terrefe … his innocence as to knowing anything of the lady when Parson Supple stepped up and said It is folly to deny it for why the marks of guilt are in thy hands I will myself asseverate and bind it by an oath that the muff thou bearest in thy hand belongeth unto Madam Sophia for I have frequently observed her of later days to bear it about her My daughter's muff! cries the squire in a rage Hath he got my daughter s muff? bear witness the goods are found upon him I ll have him before a justice of peace this instant Where is my daughter villain? Sir said Jones I beg you would be pacified The muff I acknowledge is the young lady s but upon my honour I have never seen her At these words Western lost all patience and grew inarticulate with rage

Some of the servants had acquainted Fitz … The good Irish … and by that means might poss … favour stept up to Jones and cried out Upon my conscience sir you may be ashamed of denying your having seen the gentleman s daughter before my face when you know I found you there upon the bed together Then turning to Western he offered to conduct him immediately to the room where his daughter was which offer being accepted he the squire the parson and some others ascended directly to Mrs Waters s chamber, which they entered with no less violence than Mr Fitzpatrick had done before

The poor lady started from her sleep with as much amazement as terror and beheld at her bedside a figure which might very well be supposed to have escaped out of Bedlam Such wildness and confusion were in the looks of Mr Western who no sooner saw the lady than he started back shewing sufficiently by his manner before he spoke, that this was not the person sought after

So much more tenderly do women value their reputation than their persons tha… though the latter seemed now in more dang… than before yet as the former was secure th… lady screamed not with such violence as she ha… done on the other occasion However she … sooner found herself alone than she abandon… all thoughts of further repose and as she h… sufficient reason to be dissatisfied with her pr… ent lodging she dressed herself with all p… sible expedition

Mr Western now proceeded to search … whole house but to as little purpose as he …

disturbed poor Mrs Waters He then returned disconsolate into the kitchen where he found Jones in the custody of his servants

This violent uproar had rais^d all the people in the house though it was yet scarcely day l ght Among these was a grave gentleman who had the honour to be in the commission of the peace for the county of Worcester Of which Mr Western was no sooner informed than he offered to lay his complaint before him The justice declined executing his office as he said he had no clerk present nor no book about justice business and that he could not carry all the law in his head about stealing away daughters and such sort of things

Here Mr Fitzpatrick offered to lend him his assistance informing the company that he had been himself bred to the law (And indeed he had served three years as clerk to an at torney in the north of Ireland when chusing a genteeler walk in life he quitted his master came over to England and set up that busi ness which requires no apprenticeship namely that of a gentleman in which he had suc ceeded as hath been already partly mentioned)

Mr Fitzpatrick declared that the law con cerning daughters was out of the present case that steal ng a muff was undoubtedly felony and the goods being found upon the person were sufficient evidence of the fact

The magistrate upon the encouragement of so learned a coadjutor and upon the violent intercession of the squire was at length pre vailed upon to seat himself in the chair of justice where being placed upon viewing the muff which Jones still held in his hand and upon the parson s swearing it to be the prop erty of Mr Western he desired Mr Fitzpatrick to draw up a commitment which he said he would sign

Jones now desired to be heard which was at last with d fficulty granted him He then produced the evidence of Mr Partridge as to the finding it but what was still more Susan deposed that Sophia herself had de livered the muff to her and had ordered her to convey it into the chamber where Mr Jones had found it prisoner as it had before been against him with which the parson concurred saying the Lord forbid he should be instrumental in com mitting an innocent person to durance The justice then arose acquitted the prisoner and broke up the court

Whether a natural love of justice or the extraordinary comeliness of Jones had wrought

Mr Western now gave every one present a hearty curse and immediately ordering his horses departed in pursuit of his daughter without taking the least notice of his nephew Fitzpatrick or returning any answer to his claim of kindred notwithstanding all the ob l gations he had just received from that gentle man In the violence moreover of his hurry and of his passion he luckily forgot to demand the muff of Jones I say luckily for he would have died on the spot rather than have parted with it

Jones likewise with his friend Partridge set forward the moment he had paid his reckon ing in quest of his lovely Sophia whom he now resolved never more to abandon the pur suit of Nor could he bring himself even to take leave of Mrs Waters of whom he de tested the very thoughts as she had been though not des gnedly the occasion of his miss ing the happiest interview with Sophia to whom he now vowed eternal constancy

As for Mrs Waters she took the opportu nity of the coach which was going to Bath for which place she set out in company with the two Irish gentlemen the landlady kindly lend ing her her cloaths in return for which she was contented only to receive about double

Thus ended the many odd adventures which Mr Jones encountered at his inn at Upton where they talk to this day of the beauty and lovely behaviour of the charming Sophia by the name of the Somersetshire angel

Chapter 8

In which the history goes backward

BEFORE we proceed any farther in our his tory it may be proper to look a little back in order to account for the extraordinary appear ance of Sophia and her father at the inn at Upton

The reader may be pleased to remember that in the ninth chapter of the seventh book of our history we left Sophia after a long debate between love and duty decid ng the cause, as it usually, I believe, happens in favour of the former

This debate had arisen, as we have there shown, from a visit which her father had just before made her, in order to force her consent to a marriage with Blifil, and which he had understood to be fully implied in her acknowledgment "that she neither must nor could refuse any absolute command of his"

Now from this visit the squire retired to his evening potation, overjoyed at the success he had gained with his daughter, and, as he was of a social disposition, and willing to have partakers in his happiness, the beer was ordered to flow very liberally into the kitchen, so that before eleven in the evening there was not a single person sober in the house except only Mrs Western herself and the charming Sophia

Early in the morning a messenger was despatched to summon Mr Blifil, for, though the squire imagined that young gentleman had been much less acquainted than he really was with the former aversion of his daughter, as he had not however yet received her consent, he longed impatiently to communicate it to him not doubting but that the intended bride herself would confirm it with her lips As to the wedding it had the evening before been fixed by the male parties to be celebrated on the next morning save one

Breakfast was now set forth in the parlour, where Mr Blifil attended and where the squire and his sister likewise were assembled, and now Sophia was ordered to be called

O, Shakespeare! had I thy pen! O, Hogarth! had I thy pencil! then would I draw the picture of the poor serving man who with pale countenance staring eyes chattering teeth, faultering tongue, and trembling limbs, entered the room and declared—That Madam Sophia was not to be found

[illegible]

'Not to be found!' cries the squire starting from his chair, "Zounds and d—nation! Blood and fury! Where when how, what—Not to be found! Where?"

"La! brother ' said Mrs Western with true political coldness you are always throwing yourself into such violent passions for nothing My niece, I suppose is only walked out into the garden I protest you are grown so unreasonable, that it is impossible to live in the house with you "

'Nay, nay," answered the squire, returning as suddenly to himself, as he had gone from himself, "if that be all the matter, it signifies not much, but, upon my soul, my mind misgave me when the fellow said she was not to be found ' He then gave orders for the bell to be rung in the garden, and sat himself contentedly down

No two things could be more the reverse of each other than were the brother and sister in most instances, particularly in this, That as the brother never foresaw anything at a distance, but was most sagacious in immediately seeing everything the moment it had happened, so the sister eternally foresaw at a distance, but was not so quick sighted to objects before her eyes Of both these the reader may have observed examples and indeed, both their several talents were excessive, for, as the sister often foresaw what never came to pass so the brother often saw much more than was actually the truth

This was not however the case at present The same report was brought from the garden as before had been brought from the chamber that Madam Sophia was not to be found

The squire himself now sallied forth, and began to roar forth the name of Sophia as loudly and in as hoarse a voice, as whilome did Hercules that of Hylas, and, as the poet tells us that the whole shore echoed back the name of that beautiful youth, so did the house, the garden, and all the neighbouring fields resound nothing but the name of Sophia, in the hoarse voices of the men, and in the shrill pipes of the women, while echo seemed so pleased to repeat the beloved sound, that, if there is really such a person, I believe Ovid hath belied her sex

Nothing reigned for a long time but confusion till at last the squire, having sufficiently spent his breath, returned to the parlour, where he found Mrs Western and Mr Blifil and threw himself, with the utmost dejection in his countenance, into a great chair

Here Mrs Western began to apply the following consolation

'Brother I am sorry for what hath happened and that my niece should have behaved herself in a manner so unbecoming her family, but it is all your own doings, and you have nobody to thank but yourself You know she hath been educated always in a manner directly contrary to my advice, and now you see the consequence Have I not a thousand times argued with you about giving my niece her own will? But you know I never could prevail upon you and when I had taken so much pains to eradicate her headstrong opinions and to rectify your errors in policy you know she was taken out of my hands so that I have nothing to answer for Had I been trusted entirely with the care of her education no such accident as this had ever befallen you so that you must comfort yourself by thinking it was all your own doing and indeed what else could be expected from such indulgence? ——

Zounds' sister answered he you are enough to make one mad Have I indulged her? Have I given her her will?——It was no longer ago than last night that I threatened if she disobeyed me to confine her to her chamber upon bread and water as long as she lived —You would provoke the patience of Job

Did ever mortal hear the like? replied she Brother if I had not the patience of fifty Jobs you would make me forget all decency and decorum Why would you interfere? Did I not beg you did I not intreat you to leave the whole conduct to me? You have defeated all the operations of the campaign by one false step Would any man in his senses have provoked a daughter by such threats as these? How often have I told you that English women are not to be treated like Ciracessian * slaves? We have the protection of the world we are to be won by gentle means only and not to be hectored and bullied and beat into compliance I think Heaven no Salique law governs here Brother you have a roughness in your manner which no woman but myself would bear I do not wonder my niece was frightened and terrified into taking this measure and to speak honestly I think my niece will be justified to the world for what she hath done I repeat it to you again brother you must comfort yourself by rememb ring that it is all your own fault How often have I advised— Here Western rose hastily from his chair and venting two or three horrid imprecations ran out of the room

When he was departed his sister expressed more bitterness (if possible) against him than she had done while he was present for the he said to have proceeded from the too inordinate fondness of a father which must be allowed the name of an amiable weakness

* Poss bly Circassian

So much the more inexcuseable answered the lady for whom doth he ruin by his fondness but his own child? To which Blifil immediately agreed

Mrs Western then began to express great confusion on the account of Mr Blifil and of the usage which he had received from a family to which he intended so much honour On this subject she treated the folly of her niece with great severity but concluded with throwing the whole on her brother who she said was inexcuseable to have proceeded so far without better assurances of his daughter s consent But he was (says she) always of a violent headstrong temper and I can scarce forgive myself for all the advice I have thrown away upon him

After much of this kind of conversation which perhaps would not greatly entertain the reader was it here particularly related Mr Blifil took his leave and returned home not highly pleased with his disappointment which however the philosophy which he had acquired from Square and the religion infused into him by Thwackum together with somewhat else taught him to bear rather better than more passionate lovers bear these kinds of evils

Chapter 9

The escape of Sophia

It is now time to look after Sophia whom the reader if he loves her half so well as I do will rejoice to find escaped from the clutches of her passionate father and from those of her dispassionate lover

Twelve times did the iron register of time beat on the sonorous bell metal summoning the ghosts to rise and walk their nightly round ——In plainer language it was twelve o clock and all the family as we have said lay buried in drink and sleep except only Mrs Western who was deeply engaged in reading a political pamphlet and except our heroine who now softly stole downstairs and having unbarred and unlocked one of the house-doors sallied forth and hastened to the place of appointment

Notwithstanding the many pretty arts which ladies sometimes practise to display their fears on every little occasion (almost as many as the other sex uses to conceal theirs) certainly there is a degree of courage which not only becomes a woman but is often necessary to enable her to discharge her duty It is indeed, the idea of fierceness and not of bravery which destroys the female character for who can read the story of the justly celebrated Arria without conceiving as high an opinion of her gentleness and tenderness as of her fortitude? At the same time perhaps many a woman who shrieks at a mouse or a rat may be capable of poisoning a husband or what is worse of driving him to poison himself

Sophia with all the gentleness which a woman can have had all the spirit which she ought to have When therefore she came to the place of appointment and instead of meeting her maid as was agreed saw a man ride directly up to her she neither screamed out nor fainted away not that her pulse then beat with its usual regularity for she was at first under some surprize and apprehension but these were relieved almost as soon as raised when the man pulling off his hat asked her in a very submissive manner If her ladyship did not expect to meet another lady? and then proceeded to inform her that he was sent to conduct her to that lady

Sophia could have no possible suspicion of any falsehood in this account she therefore mounted resolutely behind the fellow who conveyed her safe to a town about five miles distant where she had the satisfaction of finding the good Mrs Honour for as the soul of the waiting woman was wrapt up in those very habiliments which used to enwrap her body she could by no means bring herself to trust them out of her sight Upon these therefore she kept guard in person while she detached the aforesaid fellow after her mistress having given him all proper instructions

They now debated what course to take in order to avoid the pursuit of Mr Western who they knew would send after them in a few hours The London road had such charms for Honour that she was desirous of going on directly alleging that as Sophia could not be missed till eight or nine the next morning her pursuers would not be able to overtake her even though they knew which way she had gone But Sophia had too much at stake to venture anything to chance nor did she dare trust too much to her tender limbs in a contest which was to be decided only by swiftness She resolved therefore to travel across the country for at least twenty or thirty miles and then to take the direct road to London So having hired horses to go twenty miles one way when she intended to go twenty miles the other she set forward with the same guide behind whom she had ridden from her father's house the guide having now taken up behind him in the room of Sophia a much heavier as well as much less lovely burden being indeed a huge portmanteau well stuffed with those outside ornaments by means of which the fair Honour hoped to gain many conquests and finally to make her fortune in London city

When they had gone about two hundred paces from the inn on the London road Sophia rode up to the guide and with a voice much fuller of honey than was ever that of Plato though his mouth is supposed to have been a bee hive begged him to take the first turning which led towards Bristol

Reader I am not superstitious nor any great believer of modern miracles I do not therefore deliver the following as a certain truth for indeed I can scarce credit it myself but the fidelity of an historian obliges me to relate what hath been confidently asserted The horse then on which the guide rode is reported to have been so charmed by Sophia's voice that he made a full stop and expressed an unwillingness to proceed any farther

Perhaps however the fact may be true and less miraculous than it hath been represented since the natural cause seems adequate to the effect for as the guide at that moment desisted from a constant application of his armed right heel (for like Hudibras he wore but one spur) it is more than possible that this omission al one might occasion the beast to stop especially as this was very frequent with him at other times

But if the voice of Sophia had really an effect on the horse it had very little on the rider He answered somewhat surlily That measter had ordered him to go a different way and that he should lose his place if he went any other than that he was ordered

Sophia finding all her persuasions had no effect began now to add irresistible charms to antients imputed to perfect oratory In a word she promised she would reward him to his utmost expectation

The lad was not totally deaf to these promises but he disliked their being indefinite for though perhaps he had never heard that word yet that in fact was his objection He said Gentlevolks did not consider the case of poor volks that he had like to have been turned away the other day for riding about the country with a gentleman from Squire Allworthy's who did not reward him as he should have done

"With whom?" says Sophia eagerly "With a gentleman from Squire Allworthy's" repeated the lad "the squire's son I think they call 'un" — "Whither? which way did he go?" says Sophia — "Why a little o' one side o' Bristol about twenty miles off" answered the lad — "Guide me" says Sophia "to the same place and I'll give thee a guinea or two if one is not sufficient" — "To be certain" said the boy "it is honestly worth two when your ladyship considers what a risk I run but however if your ladyship will promise me the two guineas I'll e'en venture to be certain it is a sinful thing to ride about my measter's horses but one comfort is I can only be turned away and two guineas will partly make me amends"

The bargain being thus struck the lad turned aside into the Bristol road and Sophia set forward in pursuit of Jones highly contrary to the remonstrances of Mrs Honour who had much more desire to see London than to see Mr Jones for indeed she was not his friend with her mistress, as he had been guilty of some neglect in certain pecuniary civilities which are by custom due to the waiting gentlewoman in all love affairs and more especially in those of a clandestine kind This we impute rather to the carelessness of his temper than to any want of generosity but perhaps she derived it from the latter motive Certain it is that she hated him very bitterly on that account and resolved to take every opportunity of injuring him with her mistress It was therefore highly unlucky for her that she had gone to the very same town and inn whence Jones had started and still more unlucky was she in having stumbled on the same guide and on this accidental discovery which Sophia had made

Our travellers arrived at Hambrook * at the break of day where Honour was against her will charged to enquire the route which Mr Jones had taken Of this indeed the guide himself could have informed them but Sophia I know not for what reason never asked him the question

When Mrs. Honour had made her report from the landlord Sophia with much difficulty procured some indifferent horses which brought her to the inn where Jones had been confined rather by the misfortune of meeting with a surgeon than by having met with a broken head

Here Honour being again charged with a commission of enquiry had no sooner applied herself to the landlady and had described the person of Mr Jones than that sagacious woman began in the vulgar phrase to smell a rat When Sophia therefore entered the room instead of answering the maid the landlady addressing herself to the mistress began the following speech "Good lack a-day! why there now who would have thought it? I protest the loveliest couple that ever eye beheld I fackins madam it is no wonder the squire run on so about your ladyship He told me indeed you was the finest lady in the world and to be sure so you be Mercy on him poor heart! I bepitied him so I did when he used to hug his pillow and call it his dear Madam Sophia I did all I could to dissuade him from going to the wars I told him there were men enow that were good for nothing else but to be killed that had not the love of such fine ladies"

"Sure" says Sophia "the good woman is distracted" "No no" cries the landlady "I am not distracted What doth your ladyship think I don't know then? I assure you he told me all"

"What saucy fellow" cries Honour "told you any thing of my lady?" "No saucy fellow" answered the landlady "but the young gentleman you enquired after and a very pretty young gentleman he is, and he loves Madam Sophia Western to the bottom of his soul" "He love my lady! I'd have you to know woman she is meat for his master" — "Nay Honour" said Sophia interrupting her "don't be angry with the good woman she intends no harm" "No marry don't I" answered the landlady emboldened by the soft accents of Sophia and then launched into a long narrative too tedious to be here set down in which some passages dropt that gave a little offence to Sophia and much more to her waiting woman who hence took occasion to abuse poor Jones to her mistress the moment they were alone together saying "that he must be a very pitiful fellow and could have no love for a lady whose name he would thus prostitute in an ale house"

Sophia did not see his behaviour in so very disadvantageous a light and was perhaps more pleased with the violent raptures of his love (which the landlady exaggerated as much as she had done every other circumstance) than she was offended with the rest and in-

*This was the village where Jones met the Quaker

she imputed the whole to the extravagance or rather ebullience of his passion and to the openness of his heart

This incident however being afterwards revived in her mind and placed in the most odious colours by Honour served to heighten and give credit to those unlucky occurrences at Upton and assisted the waiting woman in her endeavours to make her mistress depart [illegible]

her mistress to task (for indeed she used great freedom) and after a long harangue in which she reminded her of her intention to go to London and gave frequent hints of the impropriety of pursuing a young fellow she at last concluded with this serious exhortation

For heaven s sake madam consider what you are about and whither you are going

This advice to a lady who had already rode near forty miles and in no very agreeable season may seem foolish enough It may be supposed she had well considered and resolved this already nay Mrs Honour by the hints she threw out seemed to think so and this I doubt not is the opinion of many readers who have I make no doubt been long since well convinced of the purpose of our heroine and have heartily condemned her for it as a wanton baggage

But in reality this was not the case Sophia had been lately so distracted between hope and fear her duty and love to her father her hatred to Bl f l her compassion and (why should we not confess the truth?) her love for J nes which last the behaviour of her father of her aunt of every one else and more particularly of Jones himself had blown into a flame that her mind was in that confused state which may be truly said to make us ignorant of what we do or whither we go or rather indeed indifferent as to the consequence of either

The prudent and sage advice of her maid produced however some cool reflection and she at length determined to go to Gloucester and thence to proceed directly to London

But unluckily a few miles before she entered that town she met the hack attorney who as is before mentioned had dined there with Mr Jones This fellow being well known to Mrs Honour stopt and spoke to her of which Sophia at that time took little notice more than to enquire who he was

But having had a more particular account from Honour of this man afterwards at Gloucester and hearing of the great expedition he usually made in travelling for which (as hath been before observed) he was particularly famous recollecting likewise that she had overheard Mrs Honour inform him that they were going to Gloucester she began to fear lest her father might by this fellow s means be able to trace her to that city wherefore if she should there strike into the London road she apprehended he would certainly be able to overtake her She therefore altered her resolution and having hired horses to go a week s journey a way which she did not intend to travel she again set forward after a light refreshment contrary to the desire and earnest entreaties of her maid and to the no less vehement remonstrances of Mrs Whitefield who from good breeding or perhaps from good nature (for the poor young lady appeared much fatigued) pressed her very heartily to stay that evening at Gloucester

Having refreshed herself only with some tea and with lying about two hours on the bed while her horses were getting ready she resolutely left Mrs Whitefield s about eleven at night and striking directly into the Worcester road within less than four hours arrived at that very inn where we last saw her

Having thus traced our heroine very particularly back from her departure till her arrival at Upton we shall in a very few words bring her father to the same place who having received the first scent from the post boy who conducted his daughter to Hambrook very easily traced her afterwards to Gloucester whence he pursued her to Upton as he had learned Mr Jones had taken that route (for Partridge to use the squire s expression left everywhere a strong scent behind him) and he doubted not in the least but Sophia travelled or as he phrased it ran the same way He used indeed a very coarse expression which need not be here inserted as fox hunters who alone will understand it will easily suggest it to themselves

BOOK XI

Containing about three days

Chapter 1

A crust for the critics

In our last initial chapter we may be supposed to have treated that formidable set of men who are called critics with more freedom than becomes us since they exact and indeed generally receive great condescension from authors We shall in this therefore give the reasons of our conduct to this august body and here we shall perhaps place them in a light in which they have not hitherto been seen

This word critic is of Greek derivation and signifies judgment Hence I presume some persons who have not understood the original and have seen the English translation of the primitive have concluded that it meant judgment in the legal sense in which it is frequently used as equivalent to condemnation

I am rather inclined to be of that opinion as the greatest number of critics hath of late years been found amongst the lawyers Many of these gentlemen from despair perhaps of ever rising to the bench in Westminster hall have placed themselves on the benches at the playhouse where they have exerted their judicial capacity and have given judgment i.e., condemned without mercy

The gentlemen would perhaps be well enough pleased if we were to leave them thus compared to one of the most important and honourable offices in the commonwealth and if we intended to apply to their favour we would do so but as we design to deal very sincerely and plainly too with them we must remind them of another officer of justice of a much lower rank, to whom as they not only pronounce but execute their own judgment they bear likewise some remote resemblance

But in reality there is another light in which these modern critics may with great justice and propriety be seen and this is that of a common slanderer If a person who prys into the characters of others with no other design but to discover their faults and to publish them to the world deserves the title of a slanderer of the reputations of men why should not a critic, who reads with the same malevolent view be as properly stiled the slanderer of the reputation of books?

Vice hath not I believe a more abject slave society produces not a more odious vermin nor can the devil receive a guest more worthy of him nor possibly more welcome to him than a slanderer The world I am afraid regards not this monster with half the abhorrence which he deserves and I am more afraid to assign the reason of this criminal lenity shown towards him yet it is certain that the thief looks innocent in the comparison nay the murderer himself can seldom stand in competition with his guilt for slander is a more cruel weapon than a sword as the wounds which the former gives are always incurable One method indeed there is of killing and that the basest and most execrable of all which bears an exact analogy to the vice here disclaimed against and that is poison a means of revenge so base and yet so horrible that is was once wisely distinguished by our laws from all other murders in the peculiar severity of the punishment

Besides the dreadful mischiefs done by slander and the baseness of the means by which they are effected there are other circumstances that highly aggravate its atrocious quality for it often proceeds from no provocation and seldom promises itself any reward unless some black and infernal mind may propose a reward in the thoughts of having procured the ruin and misery of another

Shakespear hath nobly touched this vice when he says—

Who steals my purse steals trash 'tis something nothing
'Twas mine 'tis his, and hath been slave to thousands
But he that filches from me my good name Robs me of that which not enriches him
But makes me poor indeed

With all this my good reader will doubtless agree but much of it will probably seem too severe when applied to the slanderer of books But let it here be considered that both proceed from the same wicked disposition of mind and are alike void of the excuse of temptation Nor shall we conclude the injury done this way to be very slight when we consider a book as the author's offspring and indeed as the child of his brain

The reader who hath suffered his muse to continue hitherto in a virgin state can have but a very inadequate idea of this kind of paternal fondness To such we may parody the tender exclamation of Macduff Alas! Thou hast written no book But the author whose muse hath brought forth will feel the pathetic strain perhaps will accompany me with tears (especially if his darling be already no more) while I mention the uneasiness with which the big muse bears about her burden the painful labour with which she produces it and lastly the care the fondness with which the tender father nourishes his favourite till it be brought to maturity and produced into the world

Nor is there any paternal fondness which called the riches of their father and many of injured by these slanderers whose poisonous breath brings his book to an untimely end

Lastly the slander of a book is in truth the slander of the author for as no one can call another bastard without calling the mother a whore so neither can any one give the names of sad stuff horrid nonsense &c to a book without calling the author a blockhead which though in a moral sense it is a preferable appellation to that of villain is perhaps rather more injurious to his worldly interest

Now however ludicrous all this may appear to some others I doubt not will feel and acknowledge the truth of it nay may perhaps think I have not treated the subject with decent solemnity but surely a man may speak truth with a smiling countenance In reality to depreciate a book maliciously or even wantonly is at least a very ill natured office and a morose snarling critic may I believe be suspected to be a bad man

I will therefore endeavour in the remaining part of this chapter to explain the marks of this character and to show what criticism I here intend to obviate for I can never be understood unless by the very persons here meant to insinuate that there are no proper judges of writing or to endeavour to exclude from the commonwealth of literature any of those noble critics to whose labours the learned world are so greatly indebted Such were Aristotle Horace and Longinus among the antients Dacier and Bossu among the French and some perhaps among us who have certainly been duly authorized to execute at least to the censures of any one past upon works which he hath not himself read Such censurers as these whether they speak from their own guess or suspicion or from the report and opinion of others may properly be said to slander the reputation of the book they condemn

delamatory terms such as vile dull

Again though there may be some faults justly assigned in the work yet if those are not in the most essential parts or if they are compensated by greater beauties it will savour rather of the malice of a slanderer than of the judgment of a true critic to pass a severe sentence upon the whole merely on account of some vicious part This is directly contrary to the sentiments of Horace

Verum ubi plura nitent in carmine non ego paucis Offendor maculis quas aut incuria fudit Aut humana parum cavit natura—

But where the beauties more in number shine
I am not angry when a casual line (That with some trivial faults unequal flows)
A careless hand or human frailty shows

Mr Francis

For as Martial says Aliter non fit Avite liber No book can be otherwise composed All beauty of character as well as of countenance and indeed of everything human is to be tried in this manner Cruel indeed would it be if such a work as this history which hath employed some thousands of hours in the composing should be liable to be condemned because some particular chapter or perhaps chapters may be obnoxious to very just and sensible objections And yet nothing is more common than the most rigorous sentence upon books supported by such objections which if they were rightly taken (and that they are not always) do by no means go to the merit of the whole In the theatre especially a single expression which doth not coincide with the taste of the audience or with any individual critic of that audience is sure to be hissed and one scene which should be disapproved would hazard the whole piece To write within such severe rules as these is as impossible as to live up to some splenetic opinions and if we judge according to the sentiments of some critics and of some Christians no author will be saved in this world and no man in the next

Chapter 2

The adventures which Sophia met with after her leaving Upton

OUR HISTORY just before it was obliged to turn about and travel backwards had mentioned the departure of Sophia and her maid from the inn we shall now therefore pursue the steps of that lovely creature and leave her unworthy lover a little longer to bemoan his ill luck or rather his ill-conduct

Sophia having directed her guide to travel through bye roads across the country they now passed the Severn and had scarce got a mile from the inn when the young lady looking behind her saw several horses coming after on full speed This greatly alarmed her fears and she called to the guide to put on as fast as possible

He immediately obeyed her and away they rode a full gallop But the faster they went the faster were they followed and as the horses behind were somewhat swifter than those before so the former were at length overtaken A happy circumstance for poor Sophia whose

the highest satisfaction to herself returned

The travellers who joined Sophia and who had given her such terror consisted like her own company of two females and a guide The two parties proceeded three full miles together before any one offered again to open their mouths when our heroine having pretty well got the better of her fear (but yet being somewhat surprized that the other still continued to attend her as she pursued no great road and had already passed through several turnings) accosted the strange lady in a most obliging tone and said She was very happy to find they were both travelling the same way The other who like a ghost only wanted to be spoke to readily answered That the happiness was entirely hers that she was a perfect stranger in that country and was so overjoyed at meeting a companion of her own sex that she had perhaps been guilty of an impertinence which required great apology in keeping pace with her More civilities passed between these two ladies for Mrs Honour had now given place to the fine habit of the stranger and had fallen into the rear But though Sophia had great curiosity to know why the other lady continued to travel on through the same bye roads with herself nay though this gave her some uneasiness yet fear or modesty or some other consideration restrained her from asking the question

The strange lady now laboured under a difficulty which appears almost below the dignity of history to mention Her bonnet had been blown from her head not less than five times within the last mile nor could she come at any ribbon or handkerchief to tie it under her chin When Sophia was informed of this she immediately supplied her with a handkerchief for this purpose which while she was pulling from her pocket she perhaps too much neglected the management of her horse for the beast now unluckily making a false step fell upon his fore legs and threw his fair rider from his back

Though Sophia came head foremost to the ground she happily received not the least damage and the same circumstances which had perhaps contributed to her fall now preserved her from confusion for the lane which they were then passing was narrow and very much overgrown with trees so that the moon could here afford very little light and was moreover at present so obscured in a cloud that it was almost perfectly dark By these means the young lady s modesty which was extremely delicate escaped as free from injury as her limbs and she was once more reinstated in her saddle having received no other harm than a little fright by her fall

Daylight at length appeared in its full lustre and now the two ladies who were riding over a common side by side looking stedfastly at each other at the same moment both their eyes became fixed both their horses stopt and both speaking together with equal joy pronounced the one the name of Sophia the other that of Harriet

This unexpected encounter surprized the ladies much more than I believe it will the sagacious reader who must have imagined that the strange lady could be no other than Mrs Fitzpatrick the cousin of Miss Western whom we before mentioned to have sallied from the inn a few minutes after her

So great was the surprize and joy which these two cousins conceived at this meeting (for they had formerly been most intimate acquaintance and friends and had long lived together with their aunt Western) that it is impossible to recount half the congratulations which passed between them before either asked a very natural question of the other namely whither she was going?

This at last however came first from Mrs Fitzpatrick but easy and natural as the question may seem Sophia found it difficult to give it a very ready and certain answer She begged her cousin therefore to suspend all curiosity till they arrived at some inn which I suppose says she can hardly be far distant and believe me Harriet I suspend as much curiosity on my side for indeed I believe our astonishment is pretty equal

The conversation which passed between these ladies on the road was I apprehend little worth relating and less certainly was that between the two waiting women for they likewise began to pay their compliments to each other As for the guides they were debarred from the pleasure of discourse the one being placed in the van and the other obliged to bring up the rear

In this posture they travelled many hours till they came into a wide and well beaten road which as they turned to the right soon brought them to a very fair promising inn where they all alighted but so fatigued was Sophia that as she had sat her horse during the last five or six miles with great difficulty so was she now incapable of dismounting from him without assistance This the landlord who had hold of her horse presently perceiving offered to lift her in his arms from her saddle and she too readily accepted the tender of his service Indeed fortune seems to have resolved to put Sophia to the blush that day and the second malicious attempt succeeded better than the first for my landlord had no sooner received the young lady in his arms than his feet which the gout had lately very severely handled gave way and down he tumbled but at the same time with no less dexterity than gallantry contrived to throw himself under his charming burden so that he alone received any bruise from the fall for the great injury which happened to Sophia was a violent shock given to her modesty by an immoderate grin which at her rising from the ground she observed in the countenances of most of the bye-standers This made her suspect what had really happened and what we shall not here relate for the indulgence of those readers who are capable of laughing at the offence given to a young lady s delicacy Accidents of this kind we have never regarded in a comical light nor will we scruple to say that he must have a very inadequate idea of the modesty of a beautiful young woman who would wish to sacrifice it to so paltry a satisfaction as can arise from laughter

This fright and shock joined to the violent fatigue which both her mind and body had undergone almost overcame the excellent constitution of Sophia and she had scarce strength sufficient to totter into the inn leaning on the arm of her maid Here she was no sooner seated than she called for a glass of water but Mrs Honour very judiciously in my opinion

two last nights and observing her to look very pale and wan with her fatigue earnestly entreated her to refresh herself with some sleep She was yet a stranger to her history or her

ney through bye-roads so entirely removed all danger of pursuit that she was herself perfectly easy on that account

Sophia was easily prevailed on to follow the counsel of her friend which was heartily seconded by her maid Mrs Fitzpatrick likewise offered to bear her cousin company which Sophia with much complacence accepted

The mistress was no sooner in bed than the maid prepared to follow her example She began to make many apologies to her sister Abigail for leaving her alone in so horrid a place

put in her claim to all the honour So after many courtsies and compliments to bed together went the waiting women as their mistresses had done before them

It was usual with my landlord (as indeed it is with the whole fraternity) to enquire particularly of all coachmen footmen post boys, and others into the names of all his guests what their estate was and where it lay It cannot therefore be wondered at that the many particular circumstances which attended our travellers and especially their retiring all to sleep at so extraordinary and unusual an hour give him very little satisfaction On the contrary, they rather enflamed his curiosity than extinguished it

This landlord had the character, among all had contributed not a little to procure him this reputation, for there was in this something wonderfully wise and significant, especially when he had a pipe in his mouth, which, solemn, if not sullen, and when he spoke, which was seldom, he always delivered himself in a slow voice, and, though his sentences were short they were still interrupted with many hums and ha's, ay ays, and other expletives so that, though he accompanied his words with certain explanatory gestures such as shaking or nodding the head, or pointing with his fore-finger, he generally left his hearers to understand more than he expressed, nay, he commonly gave them a hint that he knew much more than he thought proper to disclose This last circumstance alone may, indeed, very well account for his character of wisdom, since men are strangely inclined to worship what they do not understand A grand secret, upon which several imposers on mankind have totally relied for the success of their frauds

This polite person, now taking his wife aside, asked her "what she thought of the ladies lately arrived?' 'Think of them?' said the wife, why what should I think of them? 'I know," answered he, "what I think The guides tell strange stories One pretends to be come from Gloucester, and the other from Upton and neither of them, for what I can find, can tell whither they are going But what people ever travel across the country from Upton hither, especially to London? And one of the maid servants, before she alighted from her horse, asked if this was not the London road? Now I have put all these circumstances together, and whom do you think I have found them out to be?' ' Nay,' answered she, "you know I never pretend to guess at your discoveries "—"It is a good girl," replied he, chucking her under the chin, 'I must own you have always submitted to my knowledge of these matters Why, then, depend upon it, mind what I say—depend upon it, they are certainly some of the rebel ladies, who, they say, travel with the young Chevalier, and have taken a round about way to escape the duke's army.'

"Husband," quoth the wife," you have certainly hit it, for one of them is dressed as fine as any princess, and, to be sure, she looks for all the world like one —But yet, when I consider one thing '—' When you consider,' cries the landlord contemptuously—' Come, pray let s hear what you consider "—' Why, it is," answered the wife, ' that she is too humble to be any very great lady for, while our Betty was warming the bed, she called her nothing but child, and my dear, and sweetheart, and, when Betty offered to pull off her shoes and stockings, she would not suffer her, saying she would not give her the trouble "

"Pugh! 'answered the husband, "that is nothing Dost think, because you have seen some great ladies rude and uncivil to persons below them, that none of them know how to behave themselves when they come before their inferiors? I think I know people of fashion when I see them—I think I do Did not she call for a glass of water when she came in? Another sort of women would have called for a dram you know they would If she be not a woman of very great quality, sell me for a fool, and, I believe, those who buy me will have a bad bargain Now, would a woman of her quality travel without a footman, unless upon some such extraordinary occasion?' 'Nay, to be sure, husband," cries she, "you know these matters better than I, or most folk" I think I do know something" said he "To be sure," answered the wife, "the poor little heart looked so piteous, when she sat down in the chair, I protest I could not help having a compassion for her almost as much as if she had been a poor body But what s to be done, husband? If an she be a rebel, I suppose you intend to betray her up to the court Well, she s a sweet-tempered, good humoured lady, be she what she will and I shall hardly refrain from crying when I hear she is hanged or beheaded" "Pooh!" answered the husband —' But, as to what s to be done, it is not so easy a matter to determine I hope, before she goes away we shall have the news of a battle; for, if the Chevalier should get the better, she may gain us interest at court and make our fortunes without betraying her Why that s true replied the wife and I heartily hope she will have it in her power Certainly she s a sweet good lady it would go horribly against me to have her come to any harm Pooh! cries the landlord women are always so tenderhearted Why you would not harbour rebels would you? No certainly answered the wife and as for betraying her come what will on t nobody can blame us It is what anybody would do in our case

While our politic landlord who had not we

news arrived that the rebels had given the duke the slip and had got a day s march towards London and soon after arrived a famous Jacobite squire who with great joy in his countenance shook the landlord by the hand saying All s our own boy ten thousand honest Frenchmen are landed in Suffolk Old England for ever! ten thousand French my brave lad! I am going to tap away directly

This news determined the opinion of the wise man and he resolved to make his court to the young lady when she arose for he had now (he said) discovered that she was no other than Madam Jenny Cameron herself

Chapter 3

A very short chapter in which however is a Sun a Moon a Star and an Angel

The sun (for he keeps very good hours at this time of the year) had been some time retired to rest when Sophia arose greatly refreshed by her sleep which short as it was nothing but her extreme fatigue could have occasioned for though she had told her maid and perhaps herself too that she was perfectly easy when she left Upton yet it is certain her mind was a little affected with that malady which is attended with all the restless symptoms of a fever and is perhaps the very distemper which physicians mean (if they mean anything) by the fever on the spirits

Mrs. Fitzpatrick likewise left her bed at the same time and having summoned her maid immediately dressed herself She was really a very pretty woman and had she been in any other company but that of Sophia might have been thought beautiful but when Mrs Honour of her own accord attended (for her mistress would not suffer her to be waked) and had equipped our heroine the charms of Mrs Fitzpatrick who had performed the office of the morning star and had preceded greater glories shared the fate of that star and were totally eclipsed the moment those glories shone forth

Perhaps Sophia never looked more beautiful than she did at this instant We ought not therefore to condemn the maid of the inn for her hyperbole who when she descended after having lighted the fire declared and ratified it with an oath that if ever there was an angel upon earth she was now above stairs

Sophia had acquainted her cousin with her design to go to London and Mrs Fitzpatrick had agreed to accompany her for the arrival of her husband at Upton had put an end to her design of going to Bath or to her aunt Western They had therefore no sooner finished their tea than Sophia proposed to set out the moon then shining extremely bright and as for the frost she defied it nor had she any of those apprehensions which many young ladies would have felt at travelling by night for she had as we have before observed some little degree of natural courage and this her present sensations which bordered somewhat on despair greatly encreased Besides as she had already travelled twice with safety by the light of the moon she was the better emboldened to trust to it a third time

The disposition of Mrs Fitzpatrick was more timorous for though the greater terrors had conquered the less and the presence of her husband had driven her away at so unseasonable an hour from Upton yet being now arrived at a place where she thought herself safe from his pursuit these lesser terrors of I know not what operated so strongly that she earnestly entreated her cousin to stay till the next morning and not expose herself to the dangers of travelling by night

Sophia who was yielding to an excess when she could neither laugh nor reason her cousin out of these apprehensions at last gave way to them Perhaps indeed had she known of her father s arrival at Upton it might have been more difficult to have persuaded her for as to

than feared it though I might honestly enough have concealed this wish from the reader as it was one of those secret spontaneous emotions of the soul to which the reason is often a stranger

When our young ladies had determined to remain all that evening in their inn they were attended by the landlady, who desired to know what their ladyships would be pleased to eat Such charms were there in the voice, in the manner, and in the affable deportment of Sophia that she ravished the landlady to the highest degree, and that good woman, con [illegible] cause, from the great sweetness and affability with which she had been treated by his supposed mistress

The two cousins began now to impart to each other their reciprocal curiosity to know what extraordinary accidents on both sides occasioned this so strange and unexpected meeting At last Mrs Fitzpatrick, having obtained of Sophia a promise of communicating likewise in her turn began to relate what the reader, if he is desirous to know her history, may read in the ensuing chapter

Chapter 4

The history of Mrs Fitzpatrick

Mrs Fitzpatrick, after a silence of a few moments fetching a deep sigh thus began [illegible] with a kind of tender grief like what we suffer for departed friends and the ideas of both may [illegible] under the care of my aunt Western Alas! why are Miss Graveairs and Miss Giddy no more? You remember, I am sure, when we knew each other by no other names Indeed you gave the latter appellation with too much cause I have since experienced how much I deserved it You my Sophia was always my superior in everything and I heartily hope you will be so in your fortune I shall never forget the wise and matronly advice you once gave me when I lamented being disappointed of a ball, though you could not be then fourteen years old —O my Sophy how blest must have been my situation when I could think such a disappointment a misfortune, and when indeed it was the greatest I had ever known!

"And yet my dear Harriet," answered Sophia, 'it was then a serious matter with you Comfort yourself therefore with thinking that whatever you now lament may hereafter appear as trifling and contemptible as a ball would at this time '

"Alas my Sophia," replied the other lady, "you yourself will think otherwise of my present situation, for greatly must that tender heart be altered, if my misfortunes do not draw many a sigh, nay, many a tear, from you The knowledge of this should perhaps deter me from relating what I am convinced will so much affect you " Here Mrs Fitzpatrick stopt, till, at the repeated entreaties of Sophia, she thus proceeded

'Though you must have heard much of my marriage, yet as matters may probably have been misrepresented, I will set out from the very commencement of my unfortunate acquaintance with my present husband, which was at Bath soon after you left my aunt, and returned home to your father

'Among the gay young fellows who were at this season at Bath, Mr Fitzpatrick was one. He was handsome, dégagé, extremely gallant, and in his dress exceeded most others In short, my dear, if you was unluckily to see him now, I could describe him no better than by telling you he was the very reverse of everything which he is for he hath rusticated himself so long that he is become an absolute wild Irishman But to proceed in my story the qualifications *which he then possessed so well recom*mended him that, though the people of quality at that time lived separate from the rest of the company and excluded them from all their parties Mr Fitzpatrick found means to gain admittance It was perhaps no easy matter to avoid him, for he required very little or no invitation and as being handsome and genteel, he found it no very difficult matter to in [illegible] been soon expelled by his own sex for surely he had no strict title to be preferred to the English gentry, nor did they seem inclined to show him any extraordinary favour They all abused him behind his back, which might probably proceed from envy for by the women he was well received and very particularly distinguished by them

"My aunt, though no person of quality herself, as she had always lived about the court, was enrolled in that party, for, by whatever means you get into the polite circle, when you are once there, it is sufficient merit for you that you are there This observation young as you was, you could scarce avoid making from my aunt, who was free, or reserved, with all people, just as they had more or less of this merit

"And this merit, I believe, it was, which for he soon grew so very particular in his behaviour to her, that the scandal club first began to take notice of it, and the better-disposed persons made a match between them For my own part, I confess, I made no doubt that his designs were strictly honourable, as the phrase is, that is, to rob a lady of her fortune by way of marriage My aunt was, I conceived neither young enough nor handsome enough to attract much wicked inclination, but she had matrimonial charms in great abundance

'I was the more confirmed in this opinion from the extraordinary respect which he showed to myself from the first moment of our acquaintance This I understood as an attempt to lessen, if possible, that disinclination which my interest might be supposed to give me towards the match, and I know not but in some measure it had that effect, for, as I was well contented with my own fortune, and of all people the least a slave to interested views, so I could not be violently the enemy of a man with whose behaviour to me I was greatly pleased and the more so as I was the only object of such respect, for he behaved at the same time to many women of quality without any respect at all

'Agreeable as this was to me, he soon changed it into another kind of behaviour, which was perhaps more so He now put on much softness and tenderness, and languished and sighed abundantly At times, indeed, whether from art or nature I will not determine, he gave his usual loose to gaiety and mirth but this was always in general company, and with other women for even in a country dance, when he was not my partner he became grave, and put on the softest look imag*inable the moment he approached me* Indeed he was in all things so very particular towards me, that I must have been blind not to have discovered it And and and— "And you was more pleased still, my dear Harriet,' cries Sophia; "you need not be ashamed," added she, sighing, "for sure there are irresistible charms in tenderness, which too many men are able to affect " "True," answered her cousin, "men, who in all other instances want common sense, are very Machiavels in the art of loving I wish I did not know an instance—Well, scandal now began to be as busy with me as it had before been with my aunt, and never saw, nor in the least seemed to suspect, that which was visible enough, I believe, from both our behaviours One would indeed think that love quite puts out the eyes of an old woman In fact, they so greedily swallow the addresses which are made to them, that, like an outrageous glutton, they are not at leisure to observe what passes amongst others at the same table This I have observed in more cases than my own, and this was so strongly verified by my aunt, that, though she often found us together at her return from the pump, the *least chanting word of his, pretending im*patience at her absence, effectually smothered all suspicion One artifice succeeded with her to admiration This was his treating me like a little child, and never calling me by any other name in her presence but that of pretty miss This indeed did him some disservice with your humble servant, but I soon saw through it, especially as in her absence he behaved to me as I have said, in a different manner However, if I was not greatly disobliged by a conduct of which I had discovered the design, I smarted very severely for it, for my aunt really conceived me to be what her lover (as she thought him) called me, and treated me in all respects as a perfect infant To say the truth, I wonder she had not insisted on my again wearing leading strings.

tended to my aunt to my account He lamented conversation —What shall I tell you, my dear Sophia?—Then I will confess the truth I was pleased with my man I was pleased with my conquest To rival my aunt delighted me, to rival so many other women charmed me In short, I am afraid I did not behave as I should do even upon the very first declaration—I wish I did not almost give him positive encouragement before we parted

'The Bath now talked loudly—I might al most say roared against me Several young women affected to shun my acquaintance not so much perhaps from any real suspicion as from a desire of banishing me from a company in which I too much engrossed their favourite man And here I cannot omit expressing my happy woman Child says he I am sorry to see the familiarity which subsists between you and a fellow who is altogether unworthy of you and I am afraid will prove your ruin As for your old stinking aunt if it was to be no injury to you and my pretty Sophy Western (I assure you I repeat his words) I should be heartily glad that the fellow was in possession of all that belongs to her I never advise old women for if they take it into their heads to go to the devil it is no more possible than worth while to keep them from him Innocence and youth and beauty are worthy a bet ter fate, and I would save them from his clutches Let me advise you therefore dear child never suffer this fellow to be particular with you again Many more things he said to me which I have now forgotten and indeed I attended very little to them at that time for inclination contradicted all he said and besides I could not be persuaded that women of quality would condescend to familiarity with such a person as he described

But I am afraid my dear I shall tire you with a detail of so many minute circumstances To be concise therefore imagine me married imagine me with my husband at the feet of my really happened

'The very next day my aunt left the place partly to avoid seeing Mr Fitzpatrick or my self and as much perhaps to avoid seeing any one else for though I am told she hath since denied everything stoutly I believe she was then a little confounded at her disappoint ment. Since that time I have written to her many letters but never could obtain an an swer which I must own sits somewhat the heavier as she herself was though undesign edly the occasion of all my sufferings for had it not been under the colour of paying his ad dresses to her Mr Fitzpatrick would never have found sufficient opportunities to have en gaged my heart which in other circumstances, I still flatter myself would not have been an

but I trusted totally to the opinion of others and very foolishly took the merit of a man for granted, whom I saw so universally well re ceived by the women What is the reason my dear that we who have understandings equal to the wisest and greatest of the other sex so often make choice of the silliest fellows for companions and favourites? It raises my in dignation to the highest pitch to reflect on the numbers of women of sense who have been undone by fools Here she paused a moment but Sophia making no answer she proceeded as in the next chapter

Chapter 5

In which the history of Mrs Fitzpatrick is continued

We remained at Bath no longer than a fortnight after our wedding for as to any reconciliation with my aunt there were no hopes and of my fortune not one farthing could be touched till I was of age of which I now wanted more than two years My hus band therefore was resolved to set out for Ireland against which I remonstrated very earnestly and insisted on a promise which he had made me before our marriage that I should never take this journey against my con sent and indeed I never intended to consent to it nor will anybody I believe blame me for that resolution but this however I never mentioned to my husband and petitioned only for the reprieve of a month but he had fixed the day and to that day he obstinately adhered

The evening before our departure as we were disputing this point with great eagerness on both sides he started suddenly from his chair and left me abruptly saying he was go ing to the rooms He was hardly out of the house when I saw a paper lying on the floor which I suppose he had carelessly pulled from his pocket together with his handkerchief This paper I took up and finding it to be a letter I made no scruple to open and read it and indeed I read it so often that I can repeat it to you almost word for word. This then was

To Mr Brian Fitzpatrick

Sir —Yours received and am surprized you should use me in this manner, as have never seen any of your cash, unless for one linsey woolsey coat and your bill now is upwards of £150 Consider sir, how often you have fobbed me off with your being shortly to be married to this lady and t other lady but I can neither live on hopes or promises nor will my woollen draper take any such in payment You tell me you are secure of having either the aunt or the niece and that you might have married the aunt before this whose jointure you say is immense but that you prefer the niece on account of her ready money Pray sir take a fool s advice for once and marry the first you can get You will pardon my offering my advice as you know I sincerely wish you well Shall draw on you per next post in favour of Messieurs John Drugget and company at fourteen days, which doubt not your honouring and am

Sir, your humble servant,

Sam Cosgrave.

"This was the letter word for word Guess my dear girl—guess how this letter affected me You prefer the niece on account of her ready money! If every one of these words had been a dagger I could with pleasure have stabbed them into his heart but I will not recount my [illegible]

his chair and for a long time we were both silent At length in a haughty tone he said [illegible]

subdued by this provocation and I answered No sir there is a letter still remains unpacked and then throwing it on the table I fell to upbraiding him with the most bitter language I could invent

"Whether guilt or shame or prudence restrained him I cannot say but though he is the most passionate of men he exerted no rage on this occasion He endeavoured on the contrary to pacify me by the most gentle means He swore the phrase in the letter to which I principally objected was not his nor had he ever written any such He owned indeed the having mentioned his marriage and that preference which he had given to myself but denied with many oaths the having assigned any such reason And he excused the having mentioned any such matter at all on account of the straits he was in for money arising he said from his having too long neglected his estate in Ireland And this he said which he could not bear to discover to me was the only reason of his having so strenuously insisted on our journey He then used several very endearing expressions and concluded by a very fond caress and many violent protestations of love

There was one circumstance which though he did not appeal to it had much weight with me in his favour and that was the word jointure in the taylor s letter, whereas my aunt never had been married and this Mr Fitzpatrick well knew ——As I imagined therefore that the fellow must have inserted this of his own head or from hearsay I persuaded myself he might have ventured likewise on that odious line on no better authority What reasoning was this my dear? was I not an advocate rather than a judge?—But why do I mention such a circumstance as this or appeal to it for the justification of my forgiveness?—In short had he been guilty of twenty times as much half the tenderness and fondness which he used would have prevailed on me to have forgiven him I now made no farther objections to our setting out which we did the next morning and in a little more than a week arrived at the seat of Mr Fitzpatrick

Your curiosity will excuse me from relating any occurrences which past during our journey for it would indeed be highly disagreeable to travel it over again and no less so to you to travel it over with me

This seat then is an ancient mansion house if I was in one of those merry humours in which you have so often seen me I could describe it to you ridiculously enough It looked as if it had been formerly inhabited by a gentleman Here was room enough and not the less room on account of the furniture for indeed there was very little in it An old woman who seemed coeval with the building, and greatly resembled her whom Chamont mentions in the Orphan received us at the gate and in a howl scarce human and to me unintelligible welcomed her master home In short the whole scene was so gloomy and melancholy that it threw my spirits into the lowest dejection which my husband discerning instead of relieving encreased by two or three malicious observations There are good houses madam says he as you find in other places besides England but perhaps you had rather be in a dirty lodgings at Bath.

"Happy my dear is the woman who in any state of life hath a cheerful good natured companion to support and comfort her! But why do I reflect on happy situations only to aggravate my own misery? my companion far from clearing up the gloom of solitude soon convinced me that I must have been wretched with him in any place and in any condition In a word he was a surly fellow a character perhaps you have never seen for, indeed no woman ever sees it exemplified but in a father a brother or a husband and though you have a father he is not of that character This surly fellow had formerly appeared to me the very reverse and so he did still to every other person Good heaven! how is it possible for a man to maintain a constant lie in his appearance abroad and in company and to content himself with shewing disagreeable truth only at home? Here my dear they make themselves amends for the uneasy restraint which they put on their tempers in the world for I have observed the more merry and gay and good humoured my husband hath at any time been in company the more sullen and morose he was sure to become at our next private meeting How shall I describe his barbarity? To my fondness he was cold and insensible My little comical ways, which you my Sophy and which others have called so agreeable he treated with contempt In my most serious moments he sung and whistled and whenever I was thoroughly dejected and miserable he was angry and abused me, for though he was never pleased with my good humour nor ascribed it to my satisfaction in him yet my low spirits always offended him and those he imputed to my repentance of having (as he said) married an Irishman

You will easily conceive my dear Graveairs (I ask your pardon I really forgot myself) that when a woman makes an imprudent match in the sense of the world that is when she is not an arrant prostitute to pecuniary interest she must necessarily have some inclination and affection for her man You will as easily believe that this affection may possibly be lessened nay I do assure you contempt will wholly eradicate it This contempt I now began to entertain for my husband whom I now discovered to be—I must use the expression—an arrant blockhead Perhaps you will wonder I did not make this discovery long before but women will suggest a thousand excuses to themselves for the folly of those they like besides give me leave to tell you it requires a most penetrating eye to discern a fool through the disguises of gaiety and good breeding

It will be easily imagined that when I once despised my husband as I confess to you I soon did I must consequently dislike his company and indeed I had the happiness of being very little troubled with it for our house was now most elegantly furnished our cellars well stocked and dogs and horses provided in great abundance As my gentleman therefore entertained his neighbours with great hospitality so his neighbours resorted to him with great alacrity and sports and drinking consumed so much of his time that a small part of his conversation that is to say of his ill humours fell to my share

Happy would it have been for me if I *could as easily have avoided all other disagree*able company but alas! I was confined to some which constantly tormented me and the more as I saw no prospect of being relieved from them These companions were my own racking thoughts which plagued and in a manner haunted me night and day In this situation I past through a scene the horrors of which can neither be painted nor imagined. Think my dear figure if you can to yourself what I must have undergone I became a mother by the man I scorned hated and detested I went through all the agonies and miseries of a lying in (ten times more painful in such a circumstance than the worst labour can be when one endures it for a man one loves) in a desert or rather indeed, a scene of riot and revel without a friend without a companion or without any of those agreeable circumstances which often alleviate and perhaps sometimes more than compensate the sufferings of our sex at that season

Chapter 6

In which the mistake of the landlord throws Sophia into a dreadful consternation

Mrs Fitzpatrick was proceeding in her narrative when she was interrupted by the entrance of dinner greatly to the concern of Sophia for the misfortunes of her friend had raised her anxiety and left her no appetite but what Mrs Fitzpatrick was to satisfy by her relation

The landlord now attended with a plate under his arm, and with the same respect in his countenance and address which he would have put on had the ladies arrived in a coach and six.

The married lady seemed less affected with her own misfortunes than was her cousin for the former eat very heartily whereas the latter could hardly swallow a morsel Sophia likewise showed more concern and sorrow in her countenance than appeared in the other lady who having observed these symptoms in her friend begged her to be comforted saying Perhaps all may yet end better than either you or I expect

Our landlord thought he had now an opportunity to open his mouth and was resolved not to omit it I am sorry madam cries he that your ladyship can t eat for to be sure you must be hungry after so long fasting I hope your ladyship is not uneasy at anything for as madam there says all may end better than anybody expects A gentleman who was [illegible]

they will find people who will be very ready to receive them

All persons under the apprehension of danger convert whatever they see and hear into the objects of that apprehension Sophia therefore immediately concluded from the foregoing speech that she was known and pursued by her father She was now struck with the utmost consternation and for a few minutes deprived of the power of speech which she no sooner recovered than she desired the landlord to send his servants out of the room and then addressing herself to him said I perceive sir you know who we are but I beseech you—nay I am convinced if you have any compassion or goodness you will not betray us

I betray your ladyship! quoth the landlord no (and then he swore several very hearty oaths) I would sooner be cut into ten thousand pieces I hate all treachery I! I never betrayed any one in my life yet and I am sure I shall not begin with so sweet a lady as your ladyship All the world would very much blame me if I should since it will be in your ladyship s power so shortly to reward me My wife can witness for me I knew your ladyship the moment you came into the house I said it was your honour before I lifted you from your horse and I shall carry the bruises I got in your ladyship s service to the grave but what signified that as long as I saved your ladyship? To be sure some people this morning would have thought of getting a reward but no such thought ever entered into my head I would sooner starve than take any reward for betraying your ladyship

I promise you sir' says Sophia if it be ever in my power to reward you you shall not lose by your generosity

Alack a-day madam! answered the landlord in your ladyship s power! Heaven put it as much into your will! I am only afraid your honour will forget such a poor man as an innkeeper but if your ladyship should not I hope you will remember what reward I refused—refused! that is I would have refused and to be sure it may be called refusing for I might have had it certainly and to be sure you might have been in some houses —but for my part I would not methinks for the world have your ladyship wrong me so much as to imagine I ever thought of betraying you even before I heard the good news

What news pray? says Sophia something eagerly

Hath not your ladyship heard it then? cries the landlord nay like enough for I heard it only a few minutes ago and if I had never heard it may the devil fly away with me this instant if I would have betrayed your honour! no if I would may I— Here he subjoined several dreadful imprecations which Sophia at last interrupted and begged to know what he meant by the news —He was going to answer when Mrs Honour came running into the room all pale and breathless and cried out Madam we are all undone all ruined they are come they are come! These words almost froze up the blood of Sophia but Mrs Fitzpatrick asked Honour who were come?—Who? answered she why the French several hundred thousands of them are landed and we shall be all murdered and ravished

As a miser who hath in some well built city a cottage value twenty shillings when at a distance he is alarmed with the news of a fire turns pale and trembles at his loss but when he finds the beautiful palaces only are burnt and his own cottage remains safe he comes instantly to himself and smiles at his good fortunes or as (for we dislike something in the former simile) the tender mother when terrified with the apprehension that her darling boy is drowned is struck senseless and almost dead with consternation but when she is told that little master is safe and the Victory only with twelve hundred brave men gone to the bottom life and sense again return maternal fondness enjoys the sudden relief from all its fears, and the general benevolence which at another time would have deeply felt the dreadful catastrophe, lies fast asleep in her mind,—so Sophia, than whom none was more capable of tenderly feeling the general calamity of her country, found such immediate satisfaction from the relief of those terrors she had of being overtaken by her father, that the arrival of the French scarce made any impression on her She gently chid her maid for the fright into which she had thrown her, and said "she was glad it was no worse, for that she had

French are our very best friends, and come over hither only for our good They are the people who are to make Old England flourish again I warrant her honour thought the duke sand French are landed to join him on the road"

Sophia was not greatly pleased with this

And now the landlord, having removed the cloth from the table withdrew, but at his departure frequently repeated his hopes of being remembered hereafter

The mind of Sophia was not at all easy under the supposition of being known at this house, for she still applied to herself many things which the landlord had addressed to Jenny Cameron, she therefore ordered her maid to pump out of him by what means he had become acquainted with her person, and who had offered him the reward for betraying her, she likewise ordered the horses to be in readiness by four in the morning at which hour Mrs Fitzpatrick promised to bear her company, and then, composing herself as well as she could, she desired that lady to continue her story

Chapter 7

In which Mrs Fitzpatrick concludes her history

While Mrs Honour, in pursuance of the commands of her mistress, ordered a bowl of punch, and invited my landlord and landlady to partake of it, Mrs Fitzpatrick thus went on with her relation

'Most of the officers who were quartered at a town in our neighbourhood were of my husband's acquaintance Among these there was a lieutenant, a very pretty sort of man, and who was married to a woman, so agreeable both in her temper and conversation, that from our first knowing each other, which was soon after my lying in, we were almost inseparable companions, for I had the good fortune to make myself equally agreeable to her

"The lieutenant who was neither a sot nor a sportsman was frequently of our parties, indeed he was very little with my husband, and no more than good breeding constrained him to be, as he lived almost constantly at our house My husband often expressed much dissatisfaction at the lieutenant's preferring my company to his, he was very angry with me on a milksop of him'

You will be mistaken, my dear Sophia, if you imagine that the anger of my husband to the house No child, it was envy the worst and most rancorous kind of envy, the envy of superiority of understanding The wretch could not bear to see my conversation preferred before marriage and see whether he can bear marriage and I promise you I would rather self be brought to give up, but never this Nature would not have allotted this superiority to the wife in so many instances if she had intended we should all of us have surrendered it to the husband This, indeed, men of sense never expect of us, of which the lieutenant I have just mentioned was one notable example, for though he had a very good understanding, he always acknowledged (as was really true) that his wife had a better And this, perhaps, was one reason of the hatred my tyrant bore her.

"Before he would be so governed by a wife, he said especially such an ugly b— (for, indeed, she was not a regular beauty, but very agreeable and extremely genteel), he would see all the women upon earth at the devil, which was a very usual phrase with him He said, he wondered what I could see in her to be so charmed with her company since this woman, says he, hath come among us there is an end of your beloved reading, which you pretended to like so much, that you could not afford time to return the visits of the ladies in this country, and I must confess I had been guilty of a little rudeness this way, for the ladies there are at least no better than the mere country ladies here, and I think I need make no other excuse to you for declining any intimacy with them

"This correspondence, however, continued a whole year, even all the while the lieutenant was quartered in that town for which I was contented to pay the tax of being constantly abused in the manner above mentioned by my husband I mean when he was at home for he was frequently absent a month at a time at Dublin, and once made a journey of two months to London in all which journeys I thought it a very singular happiness that he never once desired my company nay, by his frequent censures on men who could not travel, as he phrased it, without a wife tied up to their tail, he sufficiently intimated that, had I been never so desirous of accompanying him my wishes would have been in vain, but, Heaven knows such wishes were very far from my thoughts

"At length my friend was remo...

... how many ...

thousand, child!" answered the other "I read a good deal in Daniel's English History of France, a great deal in Plutarch's Lives, the Atalantis, Pope's Homer, Dryden's Plays, Chil...

plicating, and, I thought, moving letters to my aunt, but, as I received no answer to any of them, my disdain would not suffer me to continue my application." Here she stopt, and, looking earnestly at Sophia, said, "Methinks, my dear, I read something in your eyes which reproaches me of a neglect in another place, where I should have met with a kinder return" "Indeed, dear Harriet," answered Sophia, "your story is an apology for any neglect, but, indeed, I feel that I have been guilty of a remissness, without so good an excuse —Yet pray proceed, for I long, though I tremble, to hear the end "

Thus, then, Mrs Fitzpatrick resumed her narrative —"My husband now took a second journey to England, where he continued up-...

for perfect solitude can never be reconciled to a social mind, like mine, but when it relieves you from the company of those you hate. What added to my wretchedness was the loss of my little infant not that I pretend to have had for it that extravagant tenderness of which I believe I might have been capable under other circumstances but I resolved, in every instance, to discharge the duty of the tenderest mother, and this care prevented me from feeling the weight of that heaviest of all things, when it can be at all said to lie heavy on our hands

"I had spent full ten weeks almost entirely by myself, having seen nobody all that time, except my servants and a very few visitors, when a young lady a relation to my husband, came from a distant part of Ireland to visit me She had staid once before a week at my house, and then I gave her a pressing invitation to return for she was a very agreeable woman, and had improved good natural parts by a proper education Indeed, she was to me a welcome guest

"A few days after her arrival, perceiving me in very low spirits, without enquiring the cause, which, indeed, she very well knew, the young lady fell to compassionating my case She said, 'Though politeness had prevented me from complaining to my husband's relations of his behaviour, yet they all were very sensible of it, and felt great concern upon that account but none more than herself And after some more general discourse on this head which I own I could not forbear countenancing at last after much previous precaution and enjoined concealment she communicated to me as a profound secret—that my husband kept a mistress.

You will certainly imagine I heard this news with the utmost insensibility—Upon my word if you do your imagination will mislead you Contempt had not so kept down my anger to my husband but that hatred rose again on this occasion What can be the reason of this? Are we so abominably selfish that we can be concerned at others having possession even of what we despise? or are we not rather abominably vain and is not this the greatest injury done to our vanity? What think you Sophia?

I don t know indeed answered Sophia I have never troubled myself with any of these deep contemplations but I think the lady did very ill in communicating to you such a secret

And yet my dear this conduct is natural replied Mrs Fitzpatrick and when you have seen and read as much as myself you will acknowledge it to be so

I am sorry to hear it is natural returned Sophia for I want neither reading nor experience to convince me that it is very dishonourable and very ill natured nay it is surely as ill bred to tell a husband or wife of the faults of each other as to tell them of their own

Well continued Mrs Fitzpatrick my husband at last returned and if I am thoroughly acquainted with my own thoughts I hated him now more than ever but I despised him rather less for certainly nothing so much weakens our contempt as an injury done to our pride or our vanity

He now assumed a carriage to me so very different from what he had lately worn and so nearly resembling his behaviour the first week of our marriage that, had I now had any spark of love remaining he might possibly have rekindled my fondness for him But though hatred may succeed to contempt and may perhaps get the better of it love I believe cannot The truth is the passion of love is too restless to remain contented without the gratification which it receives from its object and one can no more be inclined to love without loving than we can have eyes without seeing When a husband therefore ceases to be the object of this passion it is most probable some other man—I say my dear if your husband grows indifferent to you—if you once come to despise him—I say—that is—if you have the passion of love in you—Lud! I have bewildered myself so—but one is apt in these abstracted considerations to lose the concatenation of ideas as Mr Locke says —in short the truth is —in short I scarce know what it is but as I was saying my husband returned and his behaviour at first greatly surprized me but he soon acquainted me with the motive and taught me to account for it In a word then he had spent and lost all the ready money of my fortune and as he could mortgage his own estate no deeper he was now desirous to supply himself with cash for his extravagance by selling a little estate of mine which he could not do without my assistance and to obtain this favour was the whole and sole motive of all the fondness which he now put on

With this I peremptorily refused to comply I told him and I told him truly that had I been possessed of the Indies at our first marriage he might have commanded it all for it had been a constant maxim with me that where a woman disposes of her heart she should always deposit her fortune but as he had been so kind long ago to restore the former into my possession I was resolved likewise to retain what little remained of the latter

I will not describe to you the passion into which these words and the resolute air in which they were spoken threw him nor will I trouble you with the whole scene which succeeded between us Out came you may be well assured the story of the mistress and out it did come with all the embellishments which anger and disdain could bestow upon it

Mr Fitzpatrick seemed a little thunderstruck with this and more confused than I

me What was this but recrimination? He affected to be jealous —he may for aught I know be inclined enough to jealousy in his natural temper nay he must have had it from nature or the devil must have put it into his head for I defy all the world to cast a just aspersion on my character nay the most scandalous tongues have never dared censure my reputation My fame I thank heaven hath been always as spotless as my life and let falsehood itself accuse that if it dare No my dear Graveairs, however provoked however ill treated however injured in my love I have firmly resolved never to give the least room for censure on this account —And yet my dear there are some people so malicious some tongues so venomous that no innocence can escape them The most undesigned word the most accidental look the least familiarity the most innocent freedom will be misconstrued and magnified into I know not what by some people But I despise my dear Graveairs I despise all such slander No such malice I assure you ever gave me an uneasy moment No no I promise you I am above all that — But where was I? O let me see I told you my husband was jealous—And of whom I pray?— Why of whom but the lieutenant I mentioned to you before! He was obliged to resort above a year and more back to find any object for this unaccountable passion if indeed he really felt any such and was not an arrant counterfeit in order to abuse me

But I have tired you already with too many particulars I will now bring my story to a very speedy conclusion In short then after many scenes very unworthy to be repeated in which my cousin engaged so heartily on my side that Mr Fitzpatrick at last turned her out of doors when he found I was neither to be soothed nor bullied into compliance he took a very violent method indeed Perhaps you will conclude he beat me but this though he hath approached very near to it he never actually did He confined me to my room without suffering me to have either pen ink paper or book and a servant every day made my bed and brought me my food

When I had remained a week under this imprisonment he made me a visit and with the voice of a schoolmaster or what is often much the same of a tyrant asked me If I would yet comply? I answered very stoutly That I would die first Then so you shall and be d—nd cries he for you shall never go alive out of this room

Here I remained a fortnight longer and to say the truth my constancy was almost subdued and I began to think of submission when one day in the absence of my husband who was gone abroad for some short time by the greatest good fortune in the world an accident happened —I—at a time when I began to give way to the utmost despair——every thing would be excusable at such a time—at that very time I received——But it would take up an hour to tell you all particulars —In one word then (for I will not tire you with circumstances) gold the common key to all padlocks opened my door and set me at liberty

I now made haste to Dublin where I immediately procurred a passage to England and was proceeding to Bath in order to throw myself into the protection of my aunt or of your father or of any relation who would afford it me My husband overtook me last night at the inn where I lay and which you left a few minutes before me but I had the good luck to escape him and to follow you

And thus my dear ends my history a tragical one I am sure it is to myself but perhaps I ought rather to apologise to you for its dulness

Sophia heaved a deep sigh and answered Indeed Harriet I pity you from my soul!— But what could you expect? Why why would you marry an Irishman?

Upon my word replied her cousin your censure is unjust There are among the Irishmen of as much worth and honour as any among the English nay to speak the truth generosity of spirit is rather more common among them I have known some examples there too of good husbands and I believe these are not very plenty in England Ask me rather what I could expect when I married a fool and I will tell you a solemn truth I did not know him to be so — Can no man said Sophia in a very low and altered voice do you think make a bad husband who is not a fool? That answered the other, is too general a negative but none I believe is so likely as a fool to prove so Among my acquaintance the silliest fellows are the worst husbands and I will venture to assert as a fact that a man of sense rarely behaves very ill to a wife who deserves very well

Chapter 8

A dreadful alarm in the inn with the arrival of an unexpected friend of Mrs Fitzpatrick

Sophia now at the desire of her cousin related—not what follows but what hath gone before in this history for which reason the reader will I suppose excuse me for not repeating it over again

One remark however I cannot forbear making on her narrative namely that she made no more mention of Jones from the beginning to the end than if there had been no such person alive This I will neither endeavour to account for nor to excuse Indeed if this may be called a kind of dishonesty it seems the more inexcusable from the apparent openness and explicit sincerity of the other lady—But so it was

Just as Sophia arrived at the conclusion of her story there arrived in the room where the two ladies were sitting a noise not unlike in loudness to that of a pack of hounds just let out from their kennel nor in shrillness to cats when caterwauling or to screech owls or, indeed more like (for what animal can resemble a human voice?) to those sounds which in the pleasant mansions of that gate which seems to derive its name from a duplicity of tongues, issue from the mouths and sometimes from the nostrils of those fair river nymphs ycleped of old the Naïades in the vulgar tongue translated oyster wenches for when instead of the antient libations of milk and honey and oil the rich distillation from the juniper berry or perhaps from malt, hath by the early devotion of their votaries been poured forth in great abundance should any daring tongue with unhallowed license prophane i e depreciate the delicate fat Milton oyster the plaice sound and firm the flounder as much alive as when in the water the shrimp as big as a prawn the fine cod alive but a few hours ago or any other of the various treasures which those water-deities who fish the sea and rivers have committed to the care of the nymphs the angry Naiades lift up their immortal voices and the prophane wretch is struck deaf for his impiety

Such was the noise which now burst from one of the rooms below and soon the thunder which long had rattled at a distance began to approach nearer and nearer till having ascended by degrees upstairs it at last entered the apartment where the ladies were In short to drop all metaphor and figure Mrs Honour having scolded violently below stairs and continued the same all the way up came in to her mistress in a most outrageous passion crying out What doth your ladyship think? Would you imagine that this impudent villain the master of this house hath had the impudence to tell me nay to stand it out to my face that your ladyship is that nasty stinking wh—re (Jenny Cameron they call her) that runs about the country with the Pretender? Nay the lying saucy villain had the assurance to tell me that your ladyship had owned yourself to be so but I have clawed the rascal I have left the marks of my nails in his impudent face My lady! says I you saucy scoundrel my lady is meat for no pretenders. She is a young lady of as good fashion and family and fortune as any in Somersetshire Did you never hear of the great Squire Western sirrah? She is his only daughter she is—— and heiress to all his great estate My lady to be called a nasty Scotch wh—re by such a varlet!—To be sure I wish I had knocked his brains out with the punch l

¹ Sophia

self caused by ha

ered who she was However as this ...

of the landlord sufficiently accounted for those passages which Sophia had before mistaken she acquired some ease on that account nor could she upon the whole forbear smiling This enraged Honour, and she cries, Indeed madam I did not think your ladyship would have made a laughing matter of it To be called whore by such an impudent low rascal Your ladyship may be angry with me for aught I know for taking your part since proffered service they say stinks but to be sure I could never bear to hear a lady of mine called whore —Nor will I bear it I am sure your ladyship is as virtuous a lady as ever sat foot on English ground and I will claw any villain's eyes out who dares for to offer to presume for to say the least word to the contrary Nobody ever could say the least ill of the character of any lady that ever I waited upon

Hinc illæ lachrymæ in plain truth Honour had as much love for her mistress as most servants have that is to say—But besides this her pride obliged her to support the character of the lady she waited on for she thought her own was in a very close manner connected with it In proportion as the character of her mistress was raised hers likewise as she conceived was raised with it and on the contrary she thought the one could not be lowered without the other

On this subject, reader I must stop a moment to tell thee a story The famous Nell Gwynn stepping one day from a house where she had made a short visit into her coach saw a great mob assembled and her footman all bloody and dirty the fellow being asked by his mistress the reason of his being in that condition answered I have been fighting madam with an impudent rascal who called your ladyship a wh—re You blockhead replied Mrs Gwynn at this rate you must fight every day of your life why you fool all the world knows it Do they? cries the fellow, a muttering voice after he had shut the door they shan t call me a whore s footman for all that"

Thus the passion of Mrs Honour appears natural enough even if it were to be no other wise accounted for but in reality there was another cause of her anger for which we must beg leave to remind our reader of a circumstance mentioned in the above simile There are indeed certain liquors which being applied to our passions or to fire produce effects the very reverse of those produced by water as they serve to kindle and inflame rather than to extinguish Among these the generous liquor called punch is one It was not therefore without reason that the learned Dr Cheney used to call drinking punch pouring liquid fire down your throat

Now Mrs Honour had unluckily poured so much of this liquid fire down her throat that the smoke of it began to ascend into her pericranium and blinded the eyes of Reason which is there supposed to keep her residence while the fire itself from the stomach easily reached the heart and there inflamed the noble passion of pride So that upon the whole we shall cease to wonder at the violent rage of the waiting woman though at first sight we must confess the cause seems inadequate to the effect

Sophia and her cousin both did all in their power to extinguish these flames which had roared so loudly all over the house They at length prevailed or to carry the metaphor one step farther the fire having consumed all the fuel which the language affords to wit every reproachful term in it at last went out of its own accord

But though tranquillity was restored above stairs it was not so below where my landlady highly resenting the injury done to the beauty of her husband by the flesh spades of Mrs Honour called aloud for revenge and justice As to the poor man who had principally suffered in the engagement he was perfectly quiet Perhaps the blood which he lost might have cooled his anger for the enemy had not only applied her nails to his cheeks but likewise her fist to his nostrils which lamented the blow with tears of blood in great abundance

T[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] his error for as to the behaviour of Mrs Honour it had the more confirmed him in his opinion but he was now assured by a person of great figure and who was attended by a great equipage that one of the ladies was a woman of fashion and his intimate acquaintance

By the orders of this person the landlord now ascended and acquainted our fair travellers that a great gentleman below desired to do them the honour of waiting on them Sophia turned pale and trembled at this message though the reader will conclude it was too civil notwithstanding the landlord s blunder to have come from her father but fear hath the common fault of a justice of peace and is apt to conclude hastily from every slight circumstance without examining the evidence on both sides

To ease the reader s curiosity therefore rather than his apprehensions we proceed to inform him that an Irish peer had arrived very late that evening at the inn in his way to London This nobleman having sallied from his supper at the hurricane before commemorated had seen the attendant of Mrs Fitzpatrick and upon a short enquiry was informed that her lady with whom he was very particularly acquainted was above This information he had no sooner received than he addressed himself to the landlord pacified him and sent him upstairs with compliments rather civiller than those which were delivered

It may perhaps be wondered at that the waiting woman herself was not the messenger employed on this occasion but we are sorry to say she was not at present qualified for that or indeed for any other office The rum (for so the landlord chose to call the distillation from malt) had basely taken the advantage of the fatigue which the poor woman had undergone and had made terrible depredations on her noble faculties at a time when they were very unable to resist the attack

[illegible]

have been glad to have spared Many historians indeed for want of this integrity or of diligence to say no worse often leave the reader to find out these little circumstances in the dark and sometimes to his great confusion and perplexity

Sophia was very soon eased of her causeless fright by the entry of the noble peer who was not only an intimate acquaintance of Mrs Fitzpatrick but in reality a very particular friend of that lady To say truth it was by his assistance that she had been enabled to escape from her husband, for this nobleman had the same gallant disposition with those renowned knights of whom we read in heroic story, and had delivered many an imprisoned nymph from durance He was indeed as bitter an enemy to the savage authority too often exercised by husbands and fathers, over the young and lovely of the other sex, as ever knight errant was to the barbarous power of enchanters nay, to say truth, I have often suspected that those very enchanters with which romance everywhere abounds were in reality no other than the husbands of those days, and matrimony itself was, perhaps, the enchanted castle in which the nymphs were said to be confined

This nobleman had an estate in the neighbourhood of Fitzpatrick, and had been for sometime acquainted with the lady. No sooner, therefore, did he hear of her confinement, than he earnestly applied himself to procure her liberty, which he presently effected, not by storming the castle, according to the example of antient heroes, but by corrupting the governor, in conformity with the modern art of war, in which craft is held to be preferable to the reader We rather chose to leave him a while under a supposition that she had found, or coined or by some very extraordinary perhaps supernatural means had possessed herself of the money with which she had bribed her keeper, than to interrupt her narrative by giving a hint of what seemed to her of too little importance to be mentioned

The peer, after a short conversation, could not forbear expressing some surprize at meeting the lady in that place, nor could he refrain from telling her he imagined she had been gone to Bath Mrs Fitzpatrick very freely answered, 'That she had been prevented in her purpose by the arrival of a person she need not mention In short," says she, 'I was overtaken by my husband (for I need not affect to conceal what the world knows too well already) I had the good fortune to escape in a most surprizing manner, and am now going to London with this young lady, who is a near relation of mine, and who hath escaped from as great a tyrant as my own "

His lordship, concluding that this tyrant was likewise a husband, made a speech full of compliments to both the ladies, and as full of invectives against his own sex, nor indeed did he avoid some oblique glances at the matrimonial institution itself, and at the unjust powers given by it to man over the more sensible and more meritorious part of the species He ended his oration with an offer of his protection, and of his coach and six, which was instantly accepted by Mrs Fitzpatrick, and at last, upon her persuasions, by Sophia

Matters being thus adjusted, his lordship took his leave, and the ladies retired to rest, where Mrs Fitzpatrick entertained her cousin with many high encomiums on the character

high rank who was entirely constant to the marriage bed "Indeed," added she, ' my dear deceived "

A gentle sigh stole from Sophia at these words, which perhaps contributed to form a dream of no very pleasant kind, but, as she never revealed this dream to any one, so the reader cannot expect to see it related here

Chapter 9

The morning introduced in some pretty writing A stage-coach The civility of chambermaids The heroic temper of Sophia. Her generosity The return to it The departure of the company, and their arrival at London, with some remarks for the use of travellers attends the levee of his fellow labourer the ox, the cunning artificer, the diligent mechanic, spring from their hard mattress and now the bonny housemaid begins to repair the disordered drum room while the riotous authors of that disorder, in broken interrupted slumbers tumble and toss as if the hardness of down disquieted their repose

In simple phrase, the clock had no sooner struck seven, than the ladies were ready for their journey and, at their desire, his lordship and his equipage were prepared to attend them

And now a matter of some difficulty arose, and this was how his lordship himself should be conveyed, for though in stage coaches, where passengers are properly considered as so much luggage the ingenious coachman stows half a dozen with perfect ease into the place of four, for well he contrives that the fat hostess or well fed alderman may take up no more room than the slim miss, or taper master, it being the nature of guts, when well squeezed, to give way, and to lie in a narrow compass yet in these vehicles, which are called, for distinction s sake, gentlemen's coaches though they are often larger than the others, this method of packing is never attempted

His lordship would have put a short end to the difficulty by very gallantly desiring to mount his horse, but Mrs Fitzpatrick would by no means consent to it It was therefore con

saddle for that purpose

Everything being settled at the inn, the ladies discharged their former guides, and Sophia made a present to the landlord partly to repair the bruise which he had received under herself and partly on account of what he had suffered under the hands of her enraged waiting woman And now Sophia first discovered a loss which gave her some uneasiness bill was not to be found and she was at last fully persuaded that she had lost it from her pocket when she had the misfortune of tumbling from her horse in the dark lane as before and the great difficulty with which she had drawn forth her handkerchief the very instant before her fall in order to relieve the distress of Mrs Fitzpatrick

Misfortunes of this kind whatever inconveniencies they may be attended with, are in worse timed than th

lordship conducted the ladies into the vehicle, as he did likewise Mrs Honour, who after many civilities and more dear madams at last yielded to the well bred importunities of her sister Abigail and submitted to be complimented with the first ride in the coach in which indeed she would afterwards have been contented to have pursued her whole journey, had not her mistress after several fruitless intimations, at length forced her to take her turn on horseback

The coach, now having received its company, began to move forwards attended by many servants, and led by two captains, who had before rode with his lordship, and who would have been dismissed from the vehicle upon a much less worthy occasion than was this of accommodating two ladies In this they acted only as gentlemen but they were ready at any time to have performed the office of a footman or indeed would have condescended lower, for the honour of his lordship's company, and for the convenience of his table

My landlord was so pleased with the present he had received from Sophia, that he rather rejoiced in than regretted his bruise or his scratches The reader will perhaps be curious to know the quantum of this present but we cannot satisfy his curiosity Whatever it was, it satisfied the landlord for his bodily hurt but he lamented he had not known before how little the lady valued her money, 'For to be sure, says he, 'one might have charged every article double, and she would have made no cavil at the reckoning"

His wife however, was far from drawing this conclusion whether she really felt any injury done to her husband more than he did him better how to dispose of her money than you imagine She might very well think we should not put up such a business without some satisfaction and the law would have cost her an infinite deal more than this poor little matter, which I wonder you would take" 'You are always so bloodily wise ' quoth the husband it would have cost her more would it? dost fancy I don t know that as well as thee? but would any of that more, or so much, have come into our pockets? Indeed, if son Tom the law

I have no relation now who is a lawyer, and why should I go to law for the benefit of strangers? Nay to be sure answered she, you must know best I believe I do" replied he I fancy when money is to be got I can smell it out as well as another Everybody let me tell you would not have talked people out of this Mind that I say everybody would not have cajoled this out of her mind that The wife then joined in the applause of her hus band s sagacity and thus ended the short dia logue between them on this occasion

We will therefore take our leave of these good people and attend his lordship and his fair companions who made such good expedi tion that they performed a journey of ninety miles in two days and on the second evening arrived in London without having encoun tered any one adventure on the road worthy the dignity of this history to relate Our pen therefore shall imitate the expedition which it describes and our history shall keep pace with the travellers who are its subject Good writers will indeed do well to imitate the in genious traveller in this instance who always proportions his stay at any place to the beauties elegancies and curiosities which it affords At Eshur at Stowe at Wilton at Eastbury and at Prior s Park days are too short for the ravished imagination while we admire the wondrous power of art in improving nature In some of these art chiefly engages our admiration in others nature and art contend for our ap- plause but in the last the former seems to triumph Here Nature appears in her richest attire and Art dressed with the modestest object which can be exceeded only in the other

The same taste the same imagination which luxuriously riots in these elegant scenes can be amused with objects of far inferior note The woods the rivers the lawns of Devon and of Dorset attract the eye of the ingenious trav eller and retard his pace which delay he after wards compensates by swiftly scouring over the view unless the clouds in compassion to our tired spirits, kindly open their variegated man sions to our prospect

Not so travels the money meditating trades man the sagacious justice the dignified doctor the warm-clad grazier with all the numerous offspring of wealth and dulness On they jog with equal pace through the verdant meadows or over the barren heath their horses measur ing four miles and a half per hour with the utmost exactness the eyes of the beast and of his master being alike directed forwards, and employed in contemplating the same objects in the same manner With equal rapture the the good rider surveys the proudest boasts of the architect and those fair buildings with which some unknown name hath adorned the rich cloathing town where heaps of bricks are piled up as a kind of monument to show that heaps of money have been piled there before

And now reader as we are in haste to at

out our aid Bestir thyself therefore on this occasion for though we will always lend thee proper assistance in difficult places, as we do not like some others expect thee to use the arts of divination to discover our meaning yet we shall not indulge thy laziness where noth ing but thy own attention is required for thou art highly mistaken if thou dost imagine that we intended when we begun this great work to leave thy sagacity nothing to do or

Chapter 10

Containing a hint or two concerning virtue, and a few more concerning suspicion

Our company being arrived at London were set down at his lordship s house where while they refreshed themselves after the fa tigue of their journey servants were despatched to provide a lodging for the two ladies for as her ladyship was not then in town Mrs Fitz patrick would by no means consent to accept a bed in the mansion of the peer

Some readers will perhaps condemn this extraordinary delicacy as I may call it of vir tue as too nice and scrupulous but we must make allowances for her situation which must be owned to have been very ticklish and when we consider the malice of censorious tongues, we must allow if it was a fault the fault was an excess on the right side and which every woman who is in the self-same situation do well to imitate The most formal ap

ance of virtue when it is only an appearance may perhaps in very abstracted considerations seem to be rather less commendable than virtue itself without this formality but it will however be always more commended and this I believe will be granted by all that it is necessary unless in some very particular cases for every woman to support either the one or the other

A lodging being prepared Sophia accompanied her cousin for that evening but resolved early in the morning to enquire after the lady into whose protection as we have formerly mentioned she had determined to throw herself when she quitted her father s house And this she was the more eager in doing from some observations she had made during her journey in the coach

Now as we would by no means fix the odious character of suspicion on Sophia we are almost afraid to open to our reader the conceits which filled her mind concerning Mrs Fitzpatrick of whom she certainly entertained at present some doubts which as they are very apt to enter into the bosoms of the worst of people we think proper not to mention more plainly till we have first suggested a word or two to our reader touching suspicion in general

Of this there have always appeared to me to be two degrees The first of these I chuse to derive from the heart as the extreme velocity of its discernment seems to denote some previous inward impulse and the rather as this superlative degree often forms its own objects sees what is not and always more than really exists This is that quick sighted penetration whose hawk s eyes no symptom of evil can escape which observes not only upon the actions but upon the words and looks of men and as it proceeds from the heart of the observer so it dives into the heart of the observed and there espies evil as it were in the first embryo nay sometimes before it can be said to be conceived An admirable faculty if it were infallible but as this degree of perfection is not even claimed by more than one mortal being so from the fallibility of such acute discernment have arisen many sad mischiefs and most grievous heart aches to innocence and virtue I cannot help therefore regarding this vast quick sightedness into evil as a vicious excess and as a very pernicious evil [illegible]

[illegible] tioned and for one more namely because I never knew it the property of a good one Now from this degree of suspicion I entirely and absolutely acquit Sophia

A second degree of this quality seems to arise from the head This is indeed no other than the faculty of seeing what is before your eyes and of drawing conclusions from what you see The former of these is unavoidable by those who have any eyes and the latter is perhaps no [illegible]

[illegible] cence nor can I see it in an unamiable light even though through human fallibility it should be sometimes mistaken For instance if a husband should accidentally surprize his wife in the lap or in the embraces of some of [illegible]

[illegible] more than what he saw from the familiarities which he really had seen and which we are at [illegible]

[illegible] add but one more which however uncurist [illegible] it may be thought by some I cannot help esteeming to be strictly justifiable and this is a suspicion that a man is capable of doing what he hath done already and that it is possible for one who hath been a villain once to act the same part again And to confess the truth of this degree of suspicion I believe Sophia was guilty From this degree of suspicion she had in fact conceived an opinion that her cousin was really not better than she should be

The case it seems was this Mrs Fitzpatrick wisely considered that the virtue of a young lady is in the world in the same situation with a poor hare which is certain whenever it ventures abroad to meet its enemies for it can hardly meet any other No sooner therefore was she determined to take the first opportunity of quitting the protection of her husband than she resolved to cast herself under the protection of some other man and whom [illegible]

[illegible] inclines men to knighterrantry that is to be the champions of ladies in distress had often declared a violent attachment to herself and had already given her all the instances of [illegible] in his power?

But as the law hath foolishly omitted this office of vice husband or guardian to an eloped lady and as malice is apt to denominate him by a more disagreeable appellation it was concluded that his lordship should perform all such kind offices to the lady in secret and without publickly assuming the character of her protector Nay to prevent any other person from seeing him in this light it was agreed that the lady should proceed directly to Bath [illegible]

Now all this Sophia very plainly understood not from the lips or behaviour of Mrs Fitzpatrick but from the peer who was infinitely less expert at retaining a secret than was the good lady and perhaps the exact secrecy which Mrs Fitzpatrick had observed on this head in her narrative served not a little to heighten those suspicions which were now risen in the mind of her cousin

Sophia very easily found out the lady she sought for indeed there was not a chairman in town to whom her house was not perfectly well known and as she received in return of her first message a most pressing invitation she immediately accepted it Mrs Fitzpatrick indeed did not desire her cousin to stay with her with more earnestness than civility required Whether she had discerned and resented the suspicion above mentioned or from what other motive it arose I cannot say but certain it is she was full as desirous of parting with Sophia as Sophia herself could be of going

The young lady when she came to take leave of her cousin could not avoid giving her a short hint of advice She begged her for heaven s sake to care of herself and to consider in how dangerous a situation she stood adding she hoped some method would be found of reconciling her to her husband You must remember my dear says she the maxim which my aunt Western hath so often repeated to us both that whenever the matrimonial alliance is broke and war declared between husband and wife she can hardly make a disadvantageous peace for herself on any conditions These are my aunt s very words and she hath had a great deal of experience in the world Mrs Fitzpatrick answered with a contemptuous smile Never fear me child take care of yourself for you are younger than I I will come and visit you in a few days but dear Sophy let me give you one piece of advice leave the character of Graveairs in the country for believe me it will sit very awkwardly upon you in this town

Thus the two cousins parted and Sophia repaired directly to Lady Bellaston where she found a most hearty as well as a most polite welcome The lady had taken a great fancy to her when she had seen her formerly with her aunt Western She was indeed extremely glad to see her and was no sooner acquainted with the reasons which induced her to leave the squire and to fly to London than she highly applauded her sense and resolution and after expressing the highest satisfaction in the opinion which Sophia had declared she entertained of her ladyship by chusing her house for an asylum she promised her all the protection which it was in her power to give

As we have now brought Sophia into safe hands the reader will I apprehend be contented to deposit her there a while and to look a little after other personages and particularly poor Jones whom we have left long enough to do penance for his past offences which as is the nature of vice brought sufficient punishment upon him themselves

BOOK XII

Containing the same individual time with the former

Chapter 1

Showing what is to be deemed plagiarism in a modern author, and what is to be considered as lawful prize

The learned reader must have observed that in the course of this mighty work I have often translated passages out of the best antient authors without quoting the original or without taking the least notice of the book from whence they were borrowed erudition and of equal judgment it will be easy says he for the reader to observe that I have frequently had greater regard to him than to my own reputation for an author certainly pays him a considerable compliment when for his sake he suppresses learned quotations that come in his way and which would have posed upon to buy a second time in fragments and by retail what they have already in gross if not in their memories upon their shelves and it is still more cruel upon the illiterate who are drawn in to pay for what is of no manner of use to them A writer who inter

they are treated by the auctioneers who often endeavour so to confound and mix up their lots that in order to purchase the commodity you want you are obliged at the same time to purchase that which will do you no service

And yet as there is no conduct so fair and disinterested but that it may be misunderstood by ignorance and misrepresented by malice I have been sometimes tempted to preserve my own reputation at the expense of my reader and to transcribe the original or at least to quote chapter and verse whenever I have made use either of the thought or expression of another I am indeed in some doubt that I have often suffered by the contrary method and that by suppressing the original author s name I have been rather suspected of plagiarism than reputed to act from the amiable motive assigned by that justly celebrated Frenchman

Now to obviate all such imputations for the future I do here confess and justify the fact The antients may be considered as a rich common where every person who hath the smallest tenement in Parnassus hath a free right to fatten his muse Or to place it in a clear light we moderns are to the antients what the poor are to the rich By the poor here I mean that large and venerable body which in English we call the mob Now whoever hath had the honour to be admitted to any degree of intimacy with this mob must well know that it is one of their established maxims to plunder and pillage their rich neighbours without any reluctance and that this is held to be neither sin nor shame among them And so constantly do they abide and act by this maxim that in every parish almost in the kingdom there is a kind of confederacy ever carrying on against a certain person of opulence called the squire whose property is considered as free booty by all his poor neighbours who as they conclude that there is no manner of guilt in such depredations look upon it as a point of honour and moral obligation to conceal and to preserve each other from punishment on all such occasions

In like manner are the antients such as Homer Virgil Horace Cicero and the rest to be esteemed among us writers as so many wealthy squires from whom we the poor of Parnassus claim an immemorial custom of taking whatever we can come at This liberty I maintain the same strict honesty among ourselves which the mob show to one another To steal from one another is indeed highly criminal and indecent for this may be strictly stiled defrauding the poor (sometimes perhaps those who are poorer than ourselves) or to set it under the most opprobrious colours robbing the spittal

Since therefore upon the strictest examination my own conscience cannot lay any such pitiful theft to my charge I am contented to plead guilty to the former accusation nor shall I ever scruple to take to myself any passage which I shall find in an antient author to my purpose without setting down the name of the author from whence it was taken Nay I absolutely claim a property in all such sentiments the moment they are transcribed into my writings and I expect all readers hence forwards to regard them as purely and entirely my own This claim however I desire to be allowed me only on condition that I preserve strict honesty towards my poor brethren from whom if ever I borrow any of that little of which they are possessed I shall never fail to put their mark upon it that it may be at all times ready to be restored to the right owner

The omission of this was highly blameable in one Mr Moore who having formerly borrowed some lines of Pope and company took the liberty to transcribe six of them into his play of the Rival Modes Mr Pope however very luckily found hem in the said play and laying violent hands on his own property transferred it back again into his own works and for a further punishment imprisoned the said Moore in the loathsome dungeon of the Dunciad where his unhappy memory now remains and eternally will remain as a proper punishment for such his unjust dealings in the poetical trade

Chapter 2

In which though the squire doth not find his daughter somethıng is found which puts an end to his pursuit

The history now returns to the inn at Upton whence we shall first trace the foot steps of Squire Western for as he will soon arr

Ihe hostler having informed him that she had crossed the Severn he likewise past that river with his equipage and rode full speed vowing the utmost vengeance against poor Sophia if he should but overtake her

He had not gone far before he arrived at a crossway Here he called a short council of war in which after hearing different opinions he at last gave the direction of his pursuit to fortune and struck directly into the Worcester road

In this road he proceeded about two miles when be began to bemoan himself most bitterly frequently crying out What a pity is it! Sure never was so unlucky a dog as myself! And then burst forth a volley of oaths and execrations

The parson attempted to administer comfort to him on this occasion Sorrow not sir says he like those without hope Howbeit we have not yet been able to overtake young order to renovate her corporeal functions and in that case in all moral certainty you will very briefly be compos voti

Pogh! d—n the slut! answered the squire I am lamenting the loss of so fine a morning for hunting It is confounded hard to lose one of the best scenting days in all appearance which hath been this season and especially after so long a frost

Whether Fortune who now and then shows some compassion in her wantonest tricks might not take pity of the squire and as she had determined not to let him overtake his daughter might not resolve to make him amends some other way I will not assert but he had hardly uttered the words just before commemorated and two or three oaths at their heels when a pack of hounds began to open their melodious throats at a small distance from them which the squire s horse and his rider both perceiving both immediately pricked up with his master and now the whole company crossing into a corn field rode directly towards the hounds with much hallowing and whooping while the poor parson blessing himself brought up the rear

Thus fable reports that the fair Grimalkin whom Venus at the desire of a passionate lover converted from a cat into a fine woman no sooner perceived a mouse than mindful of her former sport and still retaining her pristine nature she leaped from the bed of her husband to pursue the little animal

What are we to understand by this? Not that the bride was displeased with the embraces of her amorous bridegroom for though some have remarked that cats are subject to ingratitude yet women and cats too will be pl and purr on certain occasions. The truth the sagacious Sir Roger L Estrange observes in his deep reflections that if we shut Nature out at the door she will come in at the window and that puss though a madam will be a mouser still In the same manner we are not to arraign the squire of any want of love for his daughter for in reality he had a great deal we are only to consider that he was a squire and a sportsman and then we may apply the fable to him and the judicious reflections likewise

The hounds ran very hard as it is called and the squire pursued over hedge and ditch with all his usual vociferation and alacrity and with all his usual pleasure nor did the thoughts of Sophia ever once intrude themselves to allay the satisfaction he enjoyed in the chace which he said was one of the finest he ever saw and which he swore was very well worth going fifty miles for As the squire forgot his daughter the servants we may easily believe forgot their mistress and the parson after having expressed much astonishment in Latin to himself at length likewise abandoned all farther thoughts of the young lady and jogging on at a distance behind began to meditate a portion of doctrine for the ensuing Sunday

The squire who owned the hounds was highly pleased with the arrival of his brother squire and sportsman for all men approve merit in their own way and no man was more expert in the field than Mr Western nor did any other better know how to encourage the dogs with his voice and to animate the hunt with his holla

Sportsmen in the warmth of a chace are too much engaged to attend to any manner of ceremony nay even to the offices of humanity for if any of them meet with an accident by tumbling into a ditch or into a river the rest pass on regardless and generally leave him to his fate during this time therefore the two squires though often close to each other interchanged not a single word The master of the hunt however often saw and approved the great judgment of the stranger in drawing the

therefore as the sport was ended by the death of the little animal which had occasioned it the two squires met and in all squire like greeting saluted each other

The conversation was entertaining enough and what we may perhaps relate in an appendix or on some other occasion but as it nowise concerns this history we cannot prevail on ourselves to give it a place here It concluded with a second chace and that with an invitation to dinner This being accepted was followed by a hearty bout of drinking which ended in as hearty a nap on the part of Squire Western

Our squire was by no means a match either for his host or for parson Supple at his cups that evening for which the violent fatigue of mind as well as body that he had undergone may very well account without the least derogation from his honour He was indeed according to the vulgar phrase whistle drunk for before he had swallowed the third bottle

having acquainted the other squire with all relating to Sophia he obtained his promise of seconding those arguments which he intended to urge the next morning for Mr Western s return

No sooner therefore had the good squire shaken off his evening and began to call for his morning draught and to summon his horses in order to renew his pursuit than Mr Supple began his dissuasives which the host so strongly seconded that they at length prevailed and Mr Western agreed to return home being principally moved by one argument viz that he knew not which way to go and might probably be riding farther from his daughter instead of towards her He then took leave of his brother sportsman and expressing great joy that the frost was broken (which might perhaps be no small motive to his hastening home) set forwards or rather backwards for Somersetshire but not before he had

could invent

Chapter 3

The departure of Jones from Upton with what passed between him and Partridge on the road

At length we are once more come to our heroe and to say truth we have been obliged to part with him so long that considering the condition in which we left him I apprehend many of our readers have concluded we intended to abandon him for ever he being at present in that situation in which prudent people usually desist from enquiring any farther after their friends, lest they should be shocked by hearing such friends had hanged themselves

But, in reality, if we have not all the virtues, I will boldly say, neither have we all the vices of a prudent character; and though it is not easy to conceive circumstances much more miserable than those of poor Jones at present, ridge, left the inn a few minutes after the departure of Squire Western, and pursued the same road on foot, for the hostler told them that no horses were by any means to be at that time procured at Upton On they marched with heavy hearts, for though their disquiet proceeded from very different reasons, yet displeased they were both, and if Jones sighed bitterly, Partridge grunted altogether as sadly at every step

When they came to the cross roads where the squire had stopt to take counsel, Jones stopt likewise, and turning to Partridge, asked his opinion which track they should pursue "Ah sir," answered Partridge, 'I wish your honour would follow my advice "' Why should I not?" replied Jones, "for it is now indifferent to me whither I go, or what becomes of me" "My advice, then," said Partridge, "is that you immediately face about and return home, for who that hath such a home to return to as your honour, would travel thus about the country like a vagabond? I ask pardon, sed vox ea sola reperta est"

"Alas!' cries Jones, "I have no home to return to,—but if my friend, my father would receive me, could I bear the country from which Sophia is flown? Cruel Sophia! Cruel! No let me blame myself!—No, let me blame thee D—nation seize thee—fool—blockhead' thou hast undone me, and I will tear thy soul from thy body"—At which words he laid violent hands on the collar of poor Partridge, and shook him more heartily than an ague-fit, or his own fears had ever done before

Partridge fell trembling on his knees and begged for mercy, vowing he had meant no harm—when Jones, after staring wildly on him for a moment, quitted his hold and discharged a rage on himself, that had it fallen on the other, would certainly have put an end to his being which indeed the very apprehension of it had almost effected.

We would bestow some pains here in minutely describing all the mad pranks which Jones played on this occasion, could we be well assured that the reader would take the same pains in perusing them, but as we are apprehensive that, after all the labour which we should employ in painting this scene, the said reader would be very apt to skip it entirely over, we have saved ourselves that trouble To say the truth, we have, from this reason alone, often done great violence to the luxuriance of our genius and have left many excellent descriptions out of our work, which would otherwise have been in it And this suspicion to be honest, arises, as is generally the case, from our own wicked heart, for we have, ourselves been very often most horridly given to jumping as we have run through the pages of voluminous historians

Suffice it then simply to say, that Jones, after having played the part of a madman for many minutes, came, by degrees, to himself, which no sooner happened, than, turning to Partridge he very earnestly begged his pardon for the attack he had made on him in the violence of his passion, but concluded, by desiring him never to mention his return again for he resolved never to see that country any more

Partridge easily forgave, and faithfully promised to obey the injunction now laid upon him And then Jones very briskly cried out, 'Since it is absolutely impossible for me to pursue any farther the steps of my angel—I will pursue those of glory Come on my brave lad, and, by mere chance pursued the very same through which Sophia had before passed

Our travellers now marched a full mile without speaking a syllable to each other, though Jones indeed muttered many things to himself As to Partridge, he was profoundly silent, for he was not perhaps perfectly recovered from his former fright, besides he had apprehensions of provoking his friend to a second fit of wrath especially as he now began to entertain a conceit, which may not perhaps create any great wonder in the reader In short, he began now to suspect that Jones was absolutely out of his senses

At length Jones being weary of soliloquy, addressed himself to his companion, and blamed him for his taciturnity; for which the

poor man very honestly accounted, from his fear of giving offence And now this fear being pretty well removed, by the most absolute promises of indemnity, Partridge again took the bridle from his tongue, which, perhaps, rejoiced no less at regaining its liberty, than a young colt, when the bridle is slipt from his neck, and he is turned loose into the pastures

As Partridge was inhibited from that topic which would have first suggested itself, he fell upon that which was next uppermost in his mind, namely, the Man of the Hill "Certainly, sir," says he, "that could never be a man, who dresses himself and lives after such a strange manner, and so unlike other folks Besides, his diet, as the old woman told me, is chiefly upon herbs, which is a fitter food for a horse than a Christian· nay, landlord at Upton says that the neighbours thereabouts have very fearful notions about him It runs strangely in my head that it must have been some spirit, who, perhaps, might be sent to forewarn us and who knows but all that matter which he told us, of his going to fight, and of his being taken prisoner, and of the great danger he was in of being hanged, might be intended as a warning [illegible]

infandum, regina, jubes renovare dolorem "

'The story, Partridge [illegible] who go into battle Perhaps we shall both fall in it—and what then?' What then?" replied Partridge, 'why then there is an end of us is there not? when I am gone all is over with me. What matters [illegible]

foot under ground? there will be an end of poor Partridge" And an end of poor Partridge' cries Jones, "there must be one time or other If you love Latin I will repeat you some fine lines out of Horace which would inspire courage into a coward

'Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori Mors et fugacem persequitur virum, Nec parcit imbellis juventæ Poplitibus, timidoque tergo'"

I wish you would construe them" cries Partridge 'for Horace is a hard author, and I cannot understand as you repeat them"

"I will repeat you a bad imitation or rather paraphrase, of my own," said Jones, "for I am but an indifferent poet

Who would not die in his dear country's cause!
Since, if base fear his dastard step withdraws,
From death he cannot fly —One common grave Receives, at last, the coward and the brave"

'That's very certain," cries Partridge "Ay, sure, Mors omnibus communis but there is a [illegible] shot to-day or to-morrow, like a mad dog, or, perhaps hacked in twenty pieces with the sword, and that too before we have repented of all our sins O Lord, have mercy upon us! to be sure the soldiers are a wicked kind of [illegible] would repent before it is too late, and not think of going among them —Evil communication corrupts good manners. That is my principal reason For as for that matter, I am no more afraid than another man, not I, as to matter of that I know all human flesh must die, but yet a man may live many years, for all that Why, I am a middle aged man now, and yet I may live a great number of years I have read of several who have lived to be above a hundred [illegible] praised that is a great ways off yet, and I am not afraid of dying then, no more than another man but, surely, to attempt death before a man's time is come seems to me downright wickedness and presumption Besides, if it was to do any good indeed, but, let the cause be what it will what mighty matter of good can two people do? and, for my part, I understand nothing of it I never fired off a gun above ten minutes in my life, and then it was not charged with bullets And for the sword, I never learned to fence and know nothing of the matter And then there are those cannons, which certainly it must be thought the highest presumption to go in the way of and nobody but a madman—I ask pardon upon my soul I meant no harm I beg I may not throw your honor into another passion '

Be under no apprehension, Partridge," cries Jones 'I am now so well convinced of thy cowardice, that thou couldst not provoke me on any account" 'Your honour, answered he may call me coward or anything else you please If loving to sleep in a whole skin makes a man a coward non immunes ab illis malis sumus * I never read in my grammar that a man can t be a good man without fighting Vir bonus est quis? Qui consulta patrum qui leges juraque servat † Not a word of fighting and I am sure the scripture is so much against it that a man shall never persuade me he is a good Christian while he sheds Christian blood

Chapter 4

The adventure of a beggar man

Just as Partridge had uttered that good and pious doctrine with which the last chapter concluded they arrived at another cross way when a lame fellow in rags asked them for alms upon which Partridge gave him a severe rebuke saying Every parish ought to keep their own poor Jones then fell a laughing and asked Partridge if he was not ashamed with so much charity in his mouth to have no charity in his heart Your religion says he serves you only for an excuse for your faults but is no incentive to your virtue Can any man who is really a Christian abstain from relieving one of his brethren in such a miserable condition? And at the same time putting his hand in his pocket he gave the poor object a shilling

Master cries the fellow after thanking h m Ih good a gentleman and so kind to the poor you won t suspect a man of being a thief only because he is poor He then pulled out a little gilt pocketbook and delivered it into the hands of Jones

Jones presently opened it and (guess reader what he felt) saw in the first page the words Sophia Western written by her own fair hand He no sooner read the name than he prest it close to his lips nor could he avoid falling into some very frantic raptures notwithstanding

a book worm or an author who had nothing to eat but his own works a piece of paper fell from its leaves to the ground which Partridge took up and delivered to Jones who presently perceived it to be a bank bill It was indeed the very bill which Western had given his daughter the night before her departure and a Jew would have jumped to purchase it at five shillings less than £100

The eyes of Partridge sparkled at this news which Jones now proclaimed aloud and so did (though with somewhat a different aspect) those of the poor fellow who had found the book and who (I hope from a principle of honesty) had never opened it but we should not deal honestly by the reader if we omitted to inform him of a circumstance which may be here a little material viz, that the fellow could not read

Jones who had felt nothing but pure joy and transport from the finding the book was affected with a mixture of concern at this new discovery for his imagination instantly suggested to him that the owner of the bill might possibly want it before he should be able to convey it to her He then acquainted the finder that he knew the lady to whom the book belonged and would endeavour to find her out as soon as possible and return it her

The pocket book was a late present from Mrs Western to her niece it had cost five-and twenty shillings having been bought of a celebrated toyman but the real value of the silver which it contained in its clasp was about eighteen pence and that price the said toyman as shilling or perhaps sixpence for it nay some perhaps would have given nothing and left the fellow to his action of trover which some learned serjeants may doubt whether he could under these circumstances have maintained

Jones, on the contrary whose character was on the outside of generosity and may perhaps not very unjustly have been suspected of extravagance without any hesitation gave a guinea in exchange for the book The poor man who had not for a long time before been possessed of so much treasure gave Mr Jones a thousand thanks and discovered little less of transport in his muscles than Jones had before shown when he had first read the name of Sophia Western

* We are not free from these ills

† Who is the good man? He who obeys the decrees of the conscript fathers and the laws

The fellow very readily agreed to attend our travellers to the place where he had found the pocket book Together therefore they proceeded directly thither but not so fast as Mr Jones desired for his guide unfortunately happened to be lame and could not possibly travel faster than a mile an hour As this place therefore was at above three miles distance though the fellow had said otherwise the reader need not be acquainted how long they were in walking it

Jones opened the book a hundred times during their walk kissed it as often talked much to himself and very little to his companions At all which the guide exprest some signs of astonishment to Partridge who more than once shook his head and cryed Poor gentleman! orandum est ut sit mens sana in corpore sano *

At length they arrived at the very spot where Sophia unhappily dropt the pocket book and where the fellow had as happily found it Here Jones offered to take leave of his guide and to improve his pace but the fellow in whom that violent surprize and joy which the first receipt of the guinea had occasioned was now considerably abated and who had now had sufficient time to recollect himself put on a discontented look and scratching his head said He hoped his worship would give him some thing more Your worship said he will I hope take it into your consideration that if I had not been honest I might have kept the whole And indeed this the reader must confess to have been true If the paper there said he be worth £100 I am sure the finding and talks very much like a gentleman yet I have only your worship s bare word and certainly if the right owner ben t to be found it all belongs to the first finder I hope your worship will consider of all these matters I am but a poor man and therefore don t desire to have all but it is but reasonable I should have my share Your worship looks like a good man and I hope will consider my honesty for I might have kept every farthing and nobody ever the wiser I promise thee upon my honour cries Jones that I know the right owner and will restore it her Nay your worship answered the fellow may do as you please as to that if you will but give me my share that is one half of the money your honour may keep the rest yourself if you please and concluded with swearing by a very vehement oath that he would never mention a syllable of it to any man living

* We should pray for a sound mind in a sound body

Lookee friend cries Jones the right owner shall certainly have again all that she lost and as for any farther gratuity I really cannot give it you at present but let me know your name and where you live and it is more than possible you may hereafter have further reason to rejoice at this morning s adventure

I don t know what you mean by venture" cries the fellow it seems I must venture whether you will return the lady her money or no but I hope your worship will consider–

Come come said Partridge tell his honour your name and where you may be found I warrant you will never repent having put the money into his hands The fellow seeing no hopes of recovering the possession of the pocket book at last complied in giving in his name and place of abode which Jones writ upon a piece of paper with the pencil of Sophia and then placing the paper in the same page where she had writ her name he cries out There friend you are the happiest man alive I have joined your name to that of an angel I don t know anything about angels answered the fellow but I wish you would give me a little more money or else return me the pocket book Partridge now waxed wroth he called the poor cripple by opportunity of serving him Mr Jones departed as fast as his heels would carry him and Partridge into whom the thoughts of the hundred pound had infused new spirits followed his leader while the man who was obliged to stay behind fell to cursing them both as well as his parents for had they says he sent me to charity school to learn to write and read and cast accounts I should have known the value of these matters as well as other people

Chapter 5

Containing more adventures which Mr Jones and his companion met on the road

Our travellers now walked so fast that they had very little time or breath for conversation Jones meditating all the way on Sophia and Partridge on the bank bill which though it gave him some pleasure caused him at the same time to repine at fortune which in all his walks had never given him such an opportunity of showing his honesty They had proceeded [illegible]

comply as he had for some time lost the footsteps of the horses which the thaw had enabled him to trace for several miles and he was now upon a wide common where were several roads

He here therefore stopt to consider which of these roads he should pursue when on a sudden they heard the noise of a drum that seemed at no great distance This sound presently alarmed the fears of Partridge and he cried out Lord have mercy upon us all they are certainly a coming! Who is coming? cries Jones for fear had long since given place to softer ideas in his mind and since his adventure with the lame man he had been totally intent on pursuing Sophia without entertaining one thought of an enemy Who? cries Partridge why the rebels but why should I call them rebels? they may be very honest gentlemen for anything I know to the contrary The devil take him that affronts them I say I am sure if they have nothing to say to me I will have nothing to say to them but in a civil way For Heaven s sake sir don t affront them if they should come and perhaps they may do us no harm but would it not be the wiser way to creep into some of yonder bushes till they are gone by? What can two unarmed men do perhaps against fifty thousand? Certainly nobody but a madman I hope your honour is not offended but certainly no man who hath mens sana in corpore sano— Here Jones interrupted this torrent of eloquence which fear had inspired saying That by the drum he perceived they were near some town He then made directly towards the place whence the noise proceeded bidding Partridge take courage for that he would lead him into no danger and adding it was impossible the rebels should be so near

Partridge was a little comforted with this last assurance and though he would more gladly [illegible]

common and were come into a narrow lane

And now Partridge who kept even pace with Jones discovered something painted flying in the air a very few yards before him which fancying to be the colours of the enemy he fell a bellowing O Lord sir here they are there is the crown and coffin Oh Lord! I never saw anything so terrible and we are within gun shot of them already

Jones no sooner looked up than he plainly perceived what it was which Partridge had thus mistaken Partridge says he I fancy you will be able to engage this whole army yourself for by the colours I guess what the drum was which we heard before and which beats up for recruits to a puppet show

A puppet show! answered Partridge with most eager transport And is it really no more than that? I love a puppet show of all the pastimes upon earth Do good sir let us tarry and see it Besides I am quite famished to death for it is now almost dark and I have not eat a morsel since three o clock in the morning

They now arrived at an inn or indeed an ale house where Jones was prevailed upon to stop the rather as he had no longer any assurance of being in the road he desired They walked both directly into the kitchen where better success for Jones could not hear news of Sophia but Partridge to his great satisfaction found good reason to expect very shortly the agreeable sight of an excellent smoking dish of eggs and bacon

In strong and healthy constitutions love hath a very different effect from what it causes in the puny part of the species In the latter it generally destroys all that appetite which tends towards the conservation of the individual but in the former though it often induces forgetfulness and a neglect of food as well as of everything else yet place a good piece of well powdered buttock before a hungry lover and he seldom fails very handsomely to play his part Thus it happened in the present case for though Jones perhaps wanted a prompter and might have travelled much farther had he been alone with an empty stomach yet no sooner did he sit down to the bacon and eggs, than he fell to as heartily and voraciously as Partridge himself

Before our travellers had finished their dinner night came on and as the moon was now past the full it was extremely dark Partridge therefore prevailed on Jones to stay and see the puppet show which was just going to be gin and to which they were very eagerly in vited by the master of the said show who de clared that his figures were the finest which the world had ever produced and that they had given great satisfaction to all the quality and serious part of the Provoked Husband and it was indeed a very grave and solemn en tertainment without any low wit or humour or jests or to do it no more than justice with out anything which could provoke a laugh The audience were all highly pleased A grave matron told the master she would bring her two daughters the next night as he did not show any stuff and an attorney s clerk and an exciseman both declared that the characters of Lord and Lady Townley were well pre served and highly in nature Partridge likewise concurred with this opinion

The master was so highly elated with these encomiums that he could not refrain from adding some more of his own He said The present age was not improved in anything so much as in their puppet shows which by throwing out Punch and his wife Joan and such idle trumpery were at last brought to be a rational entertainment I remember said he when I first took to the business there was a great deal of low stuff that did very well to make folks laugh but was never calculated to improve the morals of young people which certainly ought to be principally aimed at in every puppet show for why may not good and instructive lessons be conveyed this way as well as any other? My figures are as big as the life and they represent the life in every par ticular and I question not but people rise from my little drama as much improved as they do from the great I would by no means de grade the ingenuity of your profession an swered Jones but I should have been glad to have seen my old acquaintance master Punch for all that and so far from improving I think by leaving out him and his merry wife Joan you have spoiled your puppet show opinion but I have the satisfaction to know the best judges differ from you and it is im possible to please every taste I confess indeed some of the quality at Bath two or three years ago wanted mightily to bring Punch again upon the stage I believe I lost some money for not agreeing to it but let others do as they will a little matter shall never bribe me to degrade my own profession nor will I ever willingly consent to the spoiling the decency and regularity of my stage by introducing any such low stuff upon it "

The dancer of wires conceived an immediate

Right friend " cries the clerk "you are very right Always avoid what is low There are several of my acquaintance in London who are resolved to drive everything which is low from the stage Nothing can be more proper" cries the exciseman pulling his pipe from his mouth I remember added he (for I then lived with my lord) I was in the footman s gallery the night when this play of the Provoked Husband was acted first There was a great deal of low stuff in it about a country gen tleman come up to town to stand for parlia ment man and there they brought a parcel of his servants upon the stage his coachman I remember particularly but the gentlemen in our gallery could not bear anything so low and they damned it I observe friend you have left all that matter out and you are to be commended for it

Nay gentlemen cries Jones "I can never maintain my opinion against so many in deed if the generality of his audience dislike him the learned gentleman who conducts the show might have done very right in dismissing Punch from his service

The master of the show then began a second harangue and said much of the great force of example and how much the inferior part of mankind would be deterred from vice by observing how odious it was in their superiors when he was unluckily interrupted by an in cident which though perhaps we might have omitted it at another time we cannot help relating at present but not in this chapter

Chapter 6

From which it may be inferred that the best things are liable to be misunderstood and misinterpreted

A VIOLENT uproar now arise in the entry where my landlady was well cuffing her maid both with her fist and tongue She had indeed missed the wench from her employment and after a little search had found her on the puppet show stage in company with the Merry Andrew and in a situation not very proper to be described

Though Grace (for that was her name) had forfeited all title to modesty yet had she not impudence enough to deny a fact in which she was actually surprized she, therefore, took an other turn, and attempted to mitigate the offence 'Why do you beat me in this manner, mistress?' cries the wench If you don't like my doings, you may turn me away If I am a w—e" (for the other had liberally bestowed that appellation on her), "my betters are so as well as I What was the fine lady in the puppet show just now? I suppose she did not lie all night out from her husband for nothing'

The landlady now burst into the kitchen, and fell foul on both her husband and the poor puppet mover "Here, husband says she, "you see the consequence of harbouring these people in your house If one doth draw a little drink the more for them one is hardly made amends for the litter they make and then to have one s house made a bawdy house of by such lousy vermin In short, I desire you would be gone to morrow morning for I will puppet shows were made of good scripture stories as Jephthah s Rash Vow and such good things, and when wicked people were carried away by the devil There was some sense in those matters, but as the parson told us last Sunday nobody believes in the devil now a days and here you bring about a parcel of puppets drest up like lords and ladies, only to turn the heads of poor country wenches and when their heads are once turned topsy turvy, no wonder everything else is so"

Virgil, I think, tells us that when the mob are assembled in a riotous and tumultuous manner, and all sorts of missile weapons fly about, if a man of gravity and authority appears amongst them, the tumult is presently appeased and the mob, which when collected into one body, may be well compared to an ass, erect their long ears at the grave man's discourse

On the contrary, when a set of grave men and philosophers are disputing when wisdom herself may in a manner be considered as present, and administering arguments to the disputants should a tumult arise among the mob, or should one scold, who is herself equal in noise to a mighty mob appear among the said philosophers, their disputes cease in a moment, wisdom no longer performs her ministerial office, and the attention of every one is immediately attracted by the scold alone

Thus the uproar aforesaid, and the arrival of the landlady silenced the master of the

trived such another stratagem to confound the poor fellow, while he was so triumphantly descanting on the good morals inculcated by his exhibitions His mouth was now as effectually stopt as that of quack must be, if, in the midst of a declamation on the great virtues of his pills and powders the corpse of one of his martyrs should be brought forth and deposited before the stage, as a testimony of his skill

Instead, therefore, of answering my landlady the puppet show man ran out to punish his Merry Andrew, and now the moon begin-landlady had just awaked from a profound nap to prepare for his journey, but Partridge, having lately carried two points as my reader hath seen before was emboldened to attempt a third which was to prevail with Jones to take up a lodging that evening in the house where he then was He introduced this with an affected surprize at the intention which Mr knew which way the lady was gone, every step he took might very possibly lead him the farther from her, 'for you find sir,' said he, 'by all the people in the house that she is not gone

'your servant gives you most excellent advice, for who would travel by night at this time of the year?" He then began in the usual stile to trumpet forth the excellent accommodation

host and hostess it is sufficient to tell him Jones was at last prevailed on to stay and refresh himself with a few hours rest which indeed he very much wanted for he had hardly shut his eyes since he had left the inn where the accident of the broken head had happened

As soon as Jones had taken a resolution to proceed no farther that night he presently retired to rest with his two bedfellows the pocket book and the muff but Partridge who at several times had refreshed himself with several naps was more inclined to eating than to sleeping and more to drinking than to either

And now the storm which Grace had raised

woman in her passion had cast on his performances a face of perfect peace and tranquillity reigned in the kitchen where sat assembled round the fire the landlord and landlady of the house the master of the puppet show the attorney's clerk the exciseman and the ingenious Mr Partridge in which company past the agreeable conversation which will be found in the next chapter

Chapter 7

Containing a remark or two of our own and many more of the good company assembled in the kitchen

Though the pride of Partridge did not submit to acknowledge himself a servant yet he condescended in most particulars to imitate the manners of that rank One instance of this was his greatly magnifying the fortune of his companion as he called Jones such is a general custom with all servants among strangers as none of them would willingly be thought the attendant on a beggar for the higher the situation of the master is the higher consequently is that of the man in his own opinion the truth of which observation appears from the behaviour of all the footmen of the nobility

But though title and fortune communicate a splendor all around them and the footmen of men of quality and of estate think themselves entitled to a part of that respect which is paid to the quality and estates of their mas well afford to let any others partake with them As these therefore reflect no honour on the domestic so neither is he at all dishonoured by the most deplorable want of both in his master Indeed it is otherwise in the want of what is called virtue in a mistress the consequence of which we have before seen for in this dishonour there is a kind of contagion which like that of poverty communicates itself to all who approach it

Now for these reasons we are not to wonder that servants (I mean among the men only) should have no great regard for the reputation of the wealth of their masters and little or none at all for their character in other points and that though they would be ashamed to be the footman of a beggar they are not so to attend upon a rogue or a blockhead and do consequently make no scruple to spread the fame of the iniquities and follies of their said masters as far as possible and this often with great humour and merriment In reality a footman is often a wit as well as a beau at the expence of the gentleman whose livery he wears.

After Partridge therefore had enlarged greatly on the vast fortune to which Mr Jones was heir he very freely communicated an apprehension which he had begun to conceive the day before and for which as we hinted at that very time the behaviour of Jones seemed to have furnished a sufficient foundation In short he was now pretty well confirmed in an opinion that his master was out of his wits with which opinion he very bluntly acquainted the good company round the fire

With this sentiment the puppet show man immediately coincided I own" said he the gentleman surprized me very much when he talked so absurdly about puppet shows It is indeed hardly to be conceived that any man be so for no one but a madman would have thought of leaving so good a house to ramble to Partridge if he be a madman" says he

"he should not be suffered to travel thus about the country for possibly he may do some mis chief It is a pity he was not secured and sent home to his relations

Now some conceits of this kind were likewise lurking in the mind of Partridge for as he was now persuaded that Jones had run away [illegible]

[illegible]

such scheme as impossible to be executed and [illegible]

[illegible] exciseman than he embraced that opportunity of declaring his own and expressed a hearty wish that such a matter could be brought about

Could be brought about! says the excise man why there is nothing easier

Ah! sir answered Partridge you don t know what a devil of a fellow he is He can take me up with one hand and throw me out at window and he would too if he did but imagine—

Pogh! says the exciseman I believe I am as good a man as he Besides here are five of us

I don t know what five, cries the landlady my husband shall have nothing to do in it Nor shall any violent hands be laid upon any body in my house The young gentleman is as pretty a young gentleman as ever I saw in my life and I believe he is no more mad than any of us What do you tell of his having a wild look with his eyes? they are the prettiest eyes I ever saw and he hath the prettiest look with them and a very modest civil young man he is I am sure I have bepitied him heartily ever since the gentleman there in the corner told us he was crost in love Certainly that is enough to make any man especially such a sweet young gentleman as he is to look a little otherwise than he did before Lady indeed! what the devil would the lady have better than such a handsome man with a great estate? I suppose she is one of your quality folks one of your Townly ladies that we saw last night in the puppet show who don t know what they would be at

The attorney s clerk likewise declared he would have no concern in the business without the advice of counsel Suppose " says he "an action of false imprisonment should be brought against us what defence could we make? Who knows what may be sufficient evidence of mad ness to a jury? But I only speak upon my own account for it don t look well for a lawyer to be concerned in these matters unless it be as a lawyer Juries are always less favourable to us than to other people I don t therefore dis suade you Mr Thomson (to the exciseman) nor the gentleman nor anybody else

The exciseman shook his head at this speech and the puppet show man said Madness was sometimes a difficult matter for a jury to de cide for I remember says he I was once present at a tryal of madness where twenty witnesses swore that the person was as mad as a March hare and twenty others that he was as much in his senses as any man in England — And indeed it was the opinion of most people that it was only a trick of his relations to rob the poor man of his right "

Very likely! cries the landlady I myself knew a poor gentleman who was kept in a mad house all his life by his family and they enjoyed his estate but it did them no good for though the law gave it them it was the right of another

Pogh! cries the clerk with great contempt who hath any right but what the law gives them? If the law gave me the best estate in the country I should never trouble myself much who had the right

If it be so says Partridge Felix quem faciunt aliena pericula cautum *

My landlord who had been called out by the arrival of a horseman at the gate now re turned into the kitchen and with an affrighted countenance cried out What do you think gentlemen? The rebels have given the duke the slip and are got almost to London It is certainly true for a man on horseback just now told me so

I am glad of it with all my heart " cries Partridge then there will be no fighting in these parts

I am glad cries the clerk for a better reason for I would always have right take place

Ay but answered the landlord I have heard some people say this man hath no right "

I will prove the contrary in a moment cries the clerk if my father dies seized of a right do you mind me seized of a right I say doth not that right descend to his son and doth not one right descend as well as another?

But how can he have any right to make us papishes? says the landlord

* Happy he whom dangers make wary

Never fear that cries Partridge As to the matter of right the gentleman there hath proved it as clear as the sun and as to the mat ter of religion it is quite out of the case The papists themselves don t expect any such thing A popish priest whom I know very well and who is a very honest man told me upon his word and honour they had no such design

And another priest of my acquaintance said the landlady hath told me the same thing but my husband is always so afraid of papishes I know a great many papishes that are very honest sort of people and spend their money very freely and it is always a maxim with me that one man s money is as good as another s"

Very true mistress said the puppet show man I don t care what religion comes pro vided the Presbyterians are not uppermost for they are enemies to puppet shows

And so you would sacrifice your religion to your interest cries the exciseman and are desirous to see popery brought in are you?

Not I truly answered the other I hate popery as much as any man but yet it is a com fort to one that one should be able to live under it which I could not do among Presby terians To be sure every man values his live lihood first that must be granted and I war rant if you would confess the truth you are more afraid of losing your place than any thing else but never fear friend there will be an excise under another government as well as under this

Why certainly replied the exciseman I should be a very ill man if I did not honour the king whose bread I eat That is no more than natural as a man may say for what sig nifies it to me that there would be an excise office under another government since my [illegible]

hopes only of keeping my place under another government for I should certainly be no bet ter and very probably might be worse

Why that is what I say cries the land lord whenever folks say who knows what may happen! Odsooks! should not I be a block head to lend my money to I know not who be cause mayhap he may return it again? I am sure it is safe in my own bureau and there I will keep it

The attorney s clerk had taken a great fancy to the sagacity of Partridge Whether this pro ceeded from the great discernment which the former had into men as well as things or whether it arose from the sympathy between their minds for they were both truly Jacobites in principle they now shook hands heartily and drank bumpers of strong beer to healths which we think proper to bury in oblivion

These healths were afterwards pledged by all present and even by my landlord himself though reluctantly but he could not with stand the menaces of the clerk who swore he would never set his foot within his house again if he refused The bumpers which were swallowed on this occasion soon put an end to the conversation Here therefore we will put an end to the chapter

Chapter 8

In which fortune seems to have been in a better humour with Jones than we have hitherto seen her

As THERE is no wholesomer so perhaps there are few stronger sleeping potions than fatigue Of this Jones might be said to have taken a very large dose and it operated very forcibly upon him He had already slept nine hours and might perhaps have slept longer had he not been awakened by a most violent noise at his chamber-door where the sound of many heavy blows was accompanied with many exclamations of murder Jones presently leapt from his bed where he found the master of the puppet show belabouring the back and ribs of his poor Merry Andrew, without either mercy or moderation

Jones instantly interposed on behalf of the suffering party and pinned the insulting con queror up to the wall for the puppet show man was no more able to contend with Jones than the poor party-coloured jester had been to contend with this puppet man

But though the Merry Andrew was a little fellow and not very strong he had neverthe less some choler about him He therefore no sooner found himself delivered from the en emy than he began to attack him with the only weapon at which he was his equal From this he first discharged a volley of general abusive words and thence proceeded to some particular accusations— D—n your bl—d you [illegible] habit no longer ago than yesterday in the back lane here? Can you deny that you wished to have her alone in a wood to strip her—to strip one of the prettiest ladies that ever was seen in the world? and here you have fallen

Jones no sooner heard this than he quitted the master, laying on him at the same time the most violent injunctions of forbearance from any further insult on the Merry Andrew, and then taking the poor wretch with him into the utmost expedition.

It was almost eight of the clock before all matters could be got ready for his departure for Partridge was not in any haste, nor could the reckoning be presently adjusted, and when both these were settled and over, Jones would not quit the place before he had perfectly reconciled all differences between the master and the man

When this was happily accomplished, he set forwards, and was by the trusty Merry Andrew conducted to the spot by which Sophia had past, and then having handsomely rewarded his conductor, he again pushed on with the utmost eagerness, being highly delighted with the extraordinary manner in which he received his intelligence Of this Partridge was no sooner acquainted, than he, with great earnestness, began to prophesy, and assured Jones that he would certainly have good success in the end for, he said, "two such accidents could never have happened to direct him after his mistress, if Providence had not designed to bring them together at last And this was the first time that Jones lent any attention to the superstitious doctrines of his companion

They had not gone above two miles when a violent storm of rain overtook them and as they happened to be at the same time in sight of an ale house, Partridge with much earnest entreaty, prevailed with Jones to enter and weather the storm Hunger is an enemy (if indeed it may be called one) which partakes more of the English than of the French disposition, for, though you subdue this never so often, it will always rally again in time, and so it did with Partridge, who was no sooner arrived within the kitchen, than he began to ask the same questions which he hearty breakfast, though the latter began to grow again uneasy, as the people of the house could give him no fresh information concerning Sophia

Their meal being over, Jones was again preparing to sally, notwithstanding the violence of the storm still continued, but Partridge your hand, a single mug shan't serve the turn this bout. Why, here's more news of Madam Sophia come to town The boy there standing by the fire is the very lad that rode before her I can swear to my own plaister on his face"— "Heavens bless you sir" cries the boy "it is your own plaister sure enough, I shall have always reason to remember your goodness, for it hath almost cured me" name in the presence of many people and,

upon to mention her sirname

Hard therefore, was it, and perhaps in the opinion of many sagacious readers, very absurd

the freedoms which she thought (and not without good reason) he had taken with her name and character than at any freedoms in which, under his present circumstances, he had indulged himself with the person of another woman and to say truth, I believe Honour could never have prevailed on her to leave Upton without her seeing Jones, had it not

But so matters fell out and so I must relate them and if any reader is shocked at their ap- [illegible]

reconcile every matter to the received notions concerning truth and nature But if this was never so easy to do perhaps it might be more prudent in me to avoid it For instance as the fact at present before us now stands without any comment of mine upon it though it may at first sight offend some readers yet upon more mature consideration it must please all for wise and good men may consider what happened to Jones at Upton as a just punishment for his wickedness with regard to women of which it was indeed the immediate consequence and silly and bad persons may comfort themselves in their vices by flattering their own hearts that the characters of men are rather owing to accident than to virtue Now perhaps the reflections which we should be here inclined to draw would alike contradict both these conclusions and would show that these incidents contribute only to confirm the great useful and uncommon doctrine which it is the purpose of this whole work to inculcate and which we must not fill up our pages by frequently repeating as an ordinary parson fills his sermon by repeating his text at the end of every paragraph

We are contented that it must appear however unhappily Sophia had erred in her opinion of Jones she had sufficient reason for her opinion since I believe every other young lady would in her situation have erred in the same manner Nay had she followed her lover at this very time and had entered this very alehouse the moment he was departed from it she would have found the landlord as well acquainted with her name and person as the [illegible]

occasions became perfectly well acquainted with the tumble of Sophia from her horse &c with the mistake concerning Jenny Cameron with the many consequences of the punch and in short with almost everything which had happened at the inn whence we dispatched our ladies in a coach and six when we last took our leaves of them

Chapter 9

Containing little more than a few odd observations

Jones had been absent a full half hour when he returned into the kitchen in a hurry [illegible] let him know that in [illegible]

lent liquor was somewhat compensated by hearing that he was to proceed no farther on foot for Jones by golden arguments had prevailed with the boy to attend him back to the inn whither he had before conducted Sophia but to this however the lad consented upon condition that the other guide would wait for him at the alehouse because as the landlord at Upton was an intimate acquaintance of the landlord at Gloucester it might some time or other come to the ears of the latter that his horses had been let to more than one person and so the boy might be brought to account for money which he wisely intended to put in his own pocket

We were obliged to mention this circumstance trifling as it may seem since it retarded Mr Jones a considerable time in his setting out for the honesty of this latter boy was somewhat high—that is somewhat high priced and would indeed have cost Jones very dear had not Partridge who as we have said was a very cunning fellow artfully thrown in half a-crown to be spent at that very alehouse while the boy was waiting for his companion This half crown the landlord no sooner got scent of than he opened after it with such vehement and persuasive outcry that the boy was soon overcome and consented to take half a-crown more for his stay Here we cannot help observing that as there is so much of policy in the lowest life great men often overvalue themselves on these refinements in imposture in which they are frequently excelled by some of the lowest of the human species

The horses being now produced Jones directly leapt into the side saddle on which his dear Sophia had rid The lad indeed very civilly offered him the use of his but he chose [illegible]

grading his manhood he therefore accepted the boy's offer and now Jones being mounted on the side saddle of his Sophia the boy on that of Mrs Honour, and Partridge bestriding the third horse they set forwards on their journey and within four hours arrived at the inn where the reader hath already spent so much time Partridge was in very high spirits during the whole way and often mentioned to Jones the many good omens of his future success which had lately befriended him and which the reader without being the least superstitious must allow to have been particularly fortunate Partridge was moreover better pleased with the present pursuit of his companion than he had been with his pursuit of glory and from these very omens which assured the pedagogue of success he likewise first acquired a clear idea of the amour between Jones and Sophia to which he had before given very little attention as he had originally taken a wrong scent concerning the reasons of Jones's de

conclusions from thence than that poor Jones was a downright madman a conceit which was not at all disagreeable to the opinion he before had of his extraordinary wildness of which he thought his behaviour on their quitting Gloucester so well justified all the accounts he had formerly received He was now however pretty well satisfied with his present expedition and henceforth began to conceive much worthier sentiments of his friend's understanding

The clock had just struck three when they arrived and Jones immediately bespoke post horses but unluckily there was not a horse to be procured in the whole place which the reader will not wonder at when he considers the hurry in which the whole nation and especially this part of it was at this time engaged when expresses were passing and repassing every hour of the day and night

Jones endeavoured all he could to prevail with his former guide to escorte him to Coventry but he was inexorable While he was arguing with the boy in the inn yard a person

Dowling the lawyer with whom he had dined at Gloucester and with much courtesy returned the salutation

Dowling very earnestly pressed Mr Jones to go no further that night and backed his solicitations with many unanswerable arguments such as that it was almost dark that

Jones had probably suggested to himself before but as they were then ineffectual so they were still and he continued resolute in his design even though he should be obliged to set out on foot

When the good attorney found he could not prevail on Jones to stay he as strenuously applied himself to persuade the guide to accom trouble?

Two to one are odds at every other thing as well as at footfall But the advantage which this united force hath in persuasion or entreaty must have been visible to a curious observer for he must have often seen that when a father a master a wife or any other person in authority have stoutly adhered to a denial against all the reasons which a single man could produce they have afterwards yielded to the repetition of the same sentiments by a second or third person who hath undertaken the cause without attempting to advance anything new in its behalf And hence perhaps proceeds the phrase of seconding an argument or a motion and the great consequence this is of in all assemblies of public debate Hence likewise probably it is that in our courts of law we often hear a learned gentleman (generally a serjeant) repeating for an hour together what another learned gentleman who spoke just before him had been saying

Instead of accounting for this we shall proceed in our usual manner to exemplify it in the conduct of the lad above mentioned who submitted to the persuasions of Mr Dowling hard Indeed this caution of the boy was needless for Jones notwithstanding his hurry and impatience would have ordered this of himself for he by no means agreed with the opinion of those who consider animals as mere machines and when they bury their spurs in the belly of their horse imagine the spur and the horse to have an equal capacity of feeling pain

While the beasts were eating their corn or rather were supposed to eat it (for as the boy was taking care of himself in the kitchen the ostler took great care that his corn should not be consumed in the stable) Mr Jones at the earnest desire of Mr Dowling accompanied that gentleman into his room where they sat down together over a bottle of wine

Chapter 10

In which Mr Jones and Mr Dowling drink a bottle together

Mr Dowling pouring out a glass of wine named the health of the good Squire Allworthy adding If you please sir we will likewise remember his nephew and heir, the young squire Come sir here s Mr Blifil to you a very pretty young gentleman and who I dare

don t intend to affront me so I shall not resent it but I promise you you have joined two persons very improperly together for one is the glory of the human species and the other is a rascal who dishonours the name of man

Dowling stared at this He said He thought both the gentlemen had a very unexceptionable character As for Squire Allworthy himself says he I never had the happiness to *see him but all the world talks of his good*ness And indeed as to the young gentleman I never saw him but once when I carried to him the news of the loss of his mother and then I was so hurried and drove and tore with the multiplicity of business that I had hardly time to converse with him but he looked so like a very honest gentleman and behaved himself so prettily that I protest I never was more delighted with any gentleman that he

ort an acquaintance for he hath the cunning of the long ago

at last found out, that he hath taken an advantage of the openness of my own temper, and hath concerted the deepest project, by a long train of wicked artifice to work my ruin which at is

est

Alas sir' cries Jones ' you do me an hon*our to which I have no title* It is true indeed his goodness once allowed me the liberty of calling him by a much nearer name but as this was only a voluntary act of goodness I can complain of no injustice when he thinks proper to deprive me of this honour since the loss cannot be more unmerited than the gift originally was I assure you sir I am no relation of Mr Allworthy and if the world who are incapable of setting a true value on his virtue relating to myself only as you seemed to think me a relation of Mr Allworthy I thought proper to set you right in a matter that might draw some censures upon him which I promise you I would rather lose my life than give occasion to

I protest sir cried Dowling ' you talk very much like a man of honour but instead of giving me any trouble I protest it would give me great pleasure to know how you came to be thought a relation of Mr Allworthy s, if you are not Your horses won t be ready this half hour and as you have sufficient opportunity I wish you would tell me how all that happened for I protest it seems very surprizing that you should pass for a relation of a gentleman without being so

Jones who in the compliance of his disposition (though not in his prudence) a little re

which he did like Othello

——Even from his boyish years To th very moment he was bad to tell the which to hear Dowling like Desdemona did seriously incline

He swore twas strange twas passing strange Twas pitiful twas wonderous pitiful

Mr Dowling was indeed very greatly affected with this relation for he had not divested himself of humanity by being an attorney Indeed nothing is more unjust than to carry our prejudices against a profession into private life and to borrow our idea of a man from our opinion of his calling Habit it is true lessens the horror of those actions which the profession makes necessary and consequently habitual but in all other instances Nature works in men of all professions alike nay perhaps even more strongly with those who give her, as it were a holiday when they are following their ordinary business A butcher I make no doubt would feel compunction at the slaughter of a fine horse and though a surgeon can feel no pain in cutting off a limb I have known him compassionate a man in a fit of the gout The common hangman who hath stretched the necks of hundreds is known to have trembled at his first operation on a head and the very professors of human blood shedding who in their trade of war butcher thousands not only of their fellow professors but often of women and children without remorse even these I say in times of peace when drums and trumpets are laid aside often lay aside all their ferocity and become very gentle members of civil society In the same manner an attorney may feel all the miseries and distresses of his fellow creatures provided he happens not to be concerned against them

Jones as the reader knows was yet unacquainted with the very black colours in which he had been represented to Mr Allworthy and as to other matters he did not shew them in the most disadvantageous light for though he was unwilling to cast any blame on his former friend and patron yet he was not

he the squire would never have disinherited you only for a few faults which any young gentleman might have committed Indeed I cannot properly say disinherited for to be sure by law you cannot claim as heir That s certain that nobody need go to counsel for Yet when a gentleman had in a manner adopted you thus as his own son you might reasonably have expected some very considerable part if not the whole nay if you had expected the whole I should not have blamed you for certainly all men are for getting as much as they can and they are not to be blamed on that account

Indeed you wrong me said Jones I should have been contented with very little I never had any view upon Mr Allworthy s fortune nay I believe I may truly say I never once considered what he could or might give me This I solemnly declare if he had done a prejudice to his nephew in my favour I would have undone it again I had rather enjoy my own mind than the fortune of another man What is the poor pride arising from a magnifi thrilling transports and the exulting triumphs which a good mind enjoys in the contemplation of a generous virtuous noble benevolent action? I envy not Blifil in the prospect of his wealth nor shall I envy him in the possession of it I would not think myself a rascal half an hour to exchange situations I believe indeed Mr Blifil suspected me of the views you mention and I suppose these suspicions as they arose from the baseness of his own heart so they occasioned his baseness to me But I thank Heaven I know I feel—I feel my innocence my friend and I would not part with that feeling for the world For as long as I know I have never done nor even designed an injury to any being whatever

Pone me p gris ubi nulla campis Arbor æstiva recreatur aura Qi od latus m indi nebulæ malusque Jupiter urget

Pone sub ci rru nimiu n propinqui Solis i i terra dominibus negata
D ilce ridei tem Lalagen a iabo Dulce loquentem *

He then filled a bumper of wine and drunk it off to the health of his dear Lalige and filling Dowling s glass likewise up to the brim insisted on his pledging him Why then here s Miss Lalage s health with all my heart" cries Dowling I have heard her toasted often I protest though I never saw her but they say she s extremely handsome

*Place me where never summer l ree e Unb n ls tl e glebe or warms tl e trees Wl ere ever lou ering clo ds appear And ai gry Jove reforms th inclement year

Place me l eneath tl e b irni ig ray*

Though the Latin was not the only part of this speech which Dowling did not perfectly understand yet there was somewhat in it that thinking right as of thinking wrong) it is certain he secretly approved as much of his sentiments as he understood and really felt a very happen to meet Mr Dowling any more in the course of our history At present we are obliged to take our leave of that gentleman a little abruptly in imitation of Mr Jones who was no sooner informed by Partridge that his horses were ready than he deposited his reckoning wished his companion a good night mounted and set forward towards Coventry though the night was dark and it just then began to rain very hard

Chapter 11

The disasters which befel Jones on his departure for Coventry, with the sage remarks of Partridge

No road can be plainer than that from the place where they now were to Coventry and though neither Jones nor Partridge nor the guide had ever travelled it before it would have been almost impossible to have missed their way had it not been for the two reasons mentioned in the conclusion of the last chapter

These two circumstances however happening both unfortunately to intervene our travellers deviated into a much less frequented track and after riding full six miles instead of arriving at the stately spires of Coventry they found themselves still in a very dirty lane where they saw no symptoms of approaching the suburbs of a large city

mon conversation is often used to signify not only improbable but often what is really very likely and sometimes what hath certainly happened and hyperbolical violence like that which is so frequently offered to the words infinite and eternal by the former of which it is usual to express a distance of half a yard and by the latter a duration of five minutes And thus it is as usual to assert the impossibility of losing what is already actually lost This was in fact the case at present for notwithstanding all the confident assertions of the lad to the contrary it is certain they were no more in the right road to Coventry, than the fraudulent griping cruel canting miser is in the right road to heaven

It is not perhaps easy for a reader who hath never been in those circumstances to imagine the horror with which darkness rain and wind fill persons who have lost their way in the night and who consequently have not the pleasant prospect of warm fires dry cloaths and other refreshments to support their minds in struggling with the inclemencies of the weather A very imperfect idea of this horror will however serve sufficiently to account for the conceits which now filled the head of Partridge and which we shall presently be obliged to open

Jones grew more and more positive that they were out of their road and the boy himself at last acknowledged he believed they were not in the right road to Coventry though he affirmed at the same time it was impossible they should have mist the way But Partridge was of a different opinion He said When they first set out he imagined some mischief or other would happen —Did you not observe sir said he to Jones that old woman who stood at the door just as you was taking horse? I wish you had given her a small matter with all my heart for she said then you might repent it and at that very instant it began to rain and the wind hath continued rising ever since Whatever some people may think I am very certain it is in the power of witches to raise the wind whenever they please I have seen it happen very often in my time and if ever I saw a witch in all my life that old woman was certainly one I thought so to myself at that very time and if I had had any halfpence in my pocket I would have given her some for to be sure it is always good to be charitable to those sort of people for fear what may happen and many a person hath lost his cattle by saving a halfpenny

Jones though he was horridly vexed at the delay which this mistake was likely to occasion in his journey could not help smiling at the superstition of his friend whom an accident now greatly confirmed in his opinion This was a tumble from his horse by which however he received no other injury than what the dirt conferred on his cloaths old lady had been angry with me for neglecting her, I don't see why she should tumble you from your horse after all the respect you have expressed for her."

'It is ill jesting," cries Partridge, "with people who have power to do these things; for they are often very malicious I remember a months from that very day one of his best cows was drowned Nor was she satisfied with that, for a little time afterwards he lost a barrel of best-drink: for the old witch pulled out the spigot, and let it run all over the cellar, the very first evening he had tapped it to make merry with some of his neighbours In short, nothing ever thrived with him afterwards for she worried the poor man so, that he took to drinking and in a year or two his stock was seized, and he and his family are now come to the parish."

The guide, and perhaps his horse too, were both so attentive to this discourse, that, either through want of care, or by the malice of the witch, they were now both sprawling in the dirt

Partridge entirely imputed this fall, as he had done his own, to the same cause He told Mr Jones "It would certainly be his turn next; and earnestly entreated him to return back, and find out the old woman and pacify her We shall very soon' added he, 'reach

... inn we set out from

Instead of returning any answer to this sage advice, Jones was entirely attentive to what had happened to the boy, who received no other hurt than what had before befallen Partridge, and which his cloaths very easily bore, no harm was done

Chapter 12

They now discovered a light at some distance, to the great pleasure of Jones and to the no small terror of Partridge, who firmly believed himself to be bewitched, and that this light was a Jack with a lantern, or somewhat more mischievous

But how were these fears increased, when as they approached nearer to this light (or lights as they now appeared), they heard a confused sound of human voices of singing laughing, and hallowing, together with a strange noise that seemed to proceed from some instruments but could hardly be allowed the name of music! indeed, to favour a little the opinion of Partridge, it might very well be called music bewitched things that the other had uttered He now, therefore, joined in petitioning Jones to return saying he firmly believed what Partridge had just before said, that though the horses lows Either we advance," says he 'towards the lights, or the lights have advanced towards us for we are now at a very little distance from them but how can either of you be afraid of a set of people who appear only to be merry making?'

evil spirits or other that's certain

'Let them be what they will' cries Jones "I misfortune to meet with last

O Lord sir cries Partridge, "there is no knowing what humour they will be in, to be

Pray sir be advised pray, sir, do If you had read so many terrible accounts as I have of these matters you would not be so fool hardy —The Lord knows whither we have got already or whither we are going for sure such darkness was never seen upon earth and I question whether it can be darker in the other world

At length they arrived at the place whence the lights and different noises had issued This Jones perceived to be no other than a barn

Jones no sooner appeared before the great doors of the barn which were open than a masculine and very rough voice from within demanded who was there?—To which Jones gently answered a friend and immediately asked the road to Coventry

If you are a friend cries another of the men in the barn you had better alight till the storm is over (for indeed it was now more violent than ever) you are very welcome to put up your horse for there is sufficient room for him at the end of the barn

You are very obliging returned Jones 'and I will accept your offer for a few minutes whilst the rain continues and here are two more who will be glad of the same favour This was accorded with more good will than it was accepted for Partridge would rather have submitted to the utmost inclemency of the weather than have trusted to the clemency of those whom he took for hobgoblins and the poor post boy was now infected with the same apprehensions but they were both obliged to follow the example of Jones the one because he durst not leave his horse and the other be cause he feared nothing so much as being left by himself

Had this history been writ in the days of superstition I should have had too much com passion for the reader to have left him so long in suspense whether Beelzebub or Satan was about actually to appear in person with all his hellish retinue but as these doctrines are at present very unfortunate and have but few if any believers I have not been much aware of conveying any such terrors To say truth the whole furniture of the infernal regions hath long been appropriated by the managers of playhouses who seem lately to have laid them by as rubbish capable only of affecting the upper gallery a place in which few of our readers ever sit

However though we do not suspect raising any great terror on this occasion we have rea son to fear some other apprehensions may here arise in our reader, into which we would not

adventures

To prevent therefore any such suspicions so prejudicial to the credit of an historian who professes to draw his materials from nature only we shall now proceed to acquaint the reader who these people were whose sudden himself

The people then assembled in this barn were

society

It is impossible to conceive a happier set of people than appeared here to be met together The utmost mirth indeed shewed itself in every countenance nor was their ball totally void of all order and decorum Perhaps it had more than a country assembly is sometimes conducted with for these people are subject to a formal government and laws of their own and all pay obedience to one great magistrate himself than the best and dearest French cook can prepare

Æneas is not described under more consternation in the temple of Juno

Dum stupet obtutuque hæret defixus in uno *

than was our heroe at what he saw in this barn While he was looking everywhere round him with astonishment a venerable person approached him with many friendly saluta

* While amazed he stands in one fixed gaze im movable

tions, rather of too hearty a kind to be called courtly This was no other than the king of

ity and inspired the beholders with an idea of awe and respect though all this was perhaps imaginary in Jones and the truth may be that such ideas are incident to power and almost inseparable from it

There was somewhat in the open countenance and courteous behaviour of Jones which being accompanied with much comeliness of person greatly recommended him at first to every beholder These were perhaps a little heightened to the present instance by that profound respect which he paid to the king of the gypsies the moment he was acquainted with his dignity and which was the sweeter to his gypseian majesty as he was not used to receive such homage from any but his own subjects.

The king ordered a table to be spread with the choicest of their provisions for his accommodation and having placed himself at his right hand his majesty began to discourse with our heroe in the following manner —

Me doubt not sir but you have often seen some of my people who are what you call de parties detache for dey go about everywhere but me fancy you imagine not we be so considrable body as we be and may be you will be surprize more when you hear de gypsy be as orderly and well govern people as any upon face of de earth

Me have honour as me say to be deir king and no monarch can do boast of more dutiful subject ne no more affectionate How far me deserve deir good will me no say but dis me can say dat me never design anyting but to do dem good Me sall no do boast of dat neider for what can me do oderwise dan consider of de good of dose poor people who go about all day to give me always de best of what dey get Dey love and honour me darefore because me do love and take care of dem dat is all me know no oder reason

About a tousand or two tousand year ago me cannot tell to a year or two as can neider write nor read dere was a great what you call —a volution among de gypsy for dere was de lord gypsy in dose days and dese lord did quarrel vid one anoder about de place but de king of de gypsy did demolish dem all and made all his subject equal vid each oder and since dat time dey have agree very well for dey no tink of being king and may be it be better for dem as dey be for me assure you it be ver troublesome ting to be king and always to do justice me have often wish to be de private gypsy when me have been forced to punish my dear friend and relation for dough we never put to death our punishments be ver severe Dey make de gypsy ashamed of demselves and dat be ver terrible punishment me ave scarce ever known de gypsy so punish do harm any more

The king then proceeded to express some wonder that there was no such punishment as shame in other governments Upon which Jones assured him to the contrary for that there were many crimes for which shame was inflicted by the English laws and that it was indeed one consequence of all punishment Dat be ver strange said the king for me know and hears good deal of your people dough me no live among dem and me have often hear dat sham is de consequence and de cause too of many of your rewards Are your rewards and punishments den de same ting?

While his majesty was thus discoursing with Jones a sudden uproar arose in the barn and as it seems upon this occasion —the courtesy of these people had by degrees removed all the apprehensions of Partridge and he was prevailed upon not only to stuff himself with their food but to taste some of their liquors which by degress entirely expelled all fear from his composition and in its stead introduced much more agreeable sensations.

A young female gypsy more remarkable for her wit than her beauty had decoyed the honest fellow aside pretending to tell his fortune Now when they were alone together in a remote part of the barn whether it proceeded from the strong liquor which is never so apt itations but they were discovered in a very her gallant

on of Jones Partr

poor fellow was confounded by the plain evi dence which appeared against him and had very little to say for himself His majesty then turning towards Jones said Sir you have hear what dey say what punishment do you tink your man deserve?

Jones answered He was sorry for what had happened and that Partridge should make the husband all the amends in his power he said he had very little money about him at that time and putting his hand into his pocket offered the fellow a guinea To which he immediately answered He hoped his honour would not think of giving him less than five

This sum after some altercation was reduced to two and Jones having stipulated for the full forgiveness of both Partridge and the wife was going to pay the money when his majesty restraining his hand turned to the witness and asked him At what time he had discovered the criminals? To which he answered That he had been desired by the crime had been committed The king then asked if the husband was with him all that time in his lurking place? To which he an

[illegible]

[illegible]

wife for money If you had de love for your wife you would have prevented dis matter and not endeavour to make her de whore dat you might discover her Me do order dat you have no money given you for you deserve punishment not reward me do order dere fore dat you be de infamous gypsy and do wear pair of horns upon your forehead for one month and dat your wife be called de whore and pointed at all dat time for you be de in famous gypsy but she be no less de infamous whore

The gypsies immediately proceeded to execute the sentence and left Jones and Partridge alone with his majesty

Jones greatly applauded the justice of the sentence upon which the king turning to him said Me believe you be surprize for me suppose you have ver bad opinion of my people me suppose you tink us all de tieves

I must confess sir said Jones I have not heard so favourable an account of them as they seem to deserve"

Me vil tell you said the king how the difference is between you and us My people rob your people and your people rob one anoder

Jones afterwards proceeded very gravely to sing forth the happiness of those subjects who live under such a magistrate

Indeed their happiness appears to have been so compleat that we are aware lest some ad vocate for arbitrary power should hereafter quote the case of those people as an instance of the great advantages which attend that gov ernment above all others

And here we will make a concession which would not perhaps have been expected from us that no limited form of government is capable of rising to the same degree of perfection or of producing the same benefits to society with this Mankind have never been so happy as when the greatest part of the then known world was under the dominion of a single master and this state of their felicity con tinued during the reigns of five successive princes * This was the true æra of the golden age and the only golden age which ever had any existence unless in the warm imagina tions of the poets from the expulsion from Eden down to this day

In reality I know but of one solid objection to absolute monarchy The only defect in which excellent constitution seems to be the difficulty of finding any man adequate to the office of an absolute monarch for this indispensably require three qualities very difficult as it appears from history to be found in princely natures first a sufficient quantity of moderation in the prince to be contented with all the power which is possible for him to have 2ndly Enough of wisdom to know his own happiness And 3rdly Goodness sufficient to support the happiness of others when not only compatible with but instrumental to his own

Now if an absolute monarch with all these great and rare qualifications should be al lowed capable of conferring the greatest good on society it must be surely granted on the contrary that absolute power vested in the hands of one who is deficient in them all is likely to be attended with no less a degree of evil

[illegible]

lively image of both before our eyes for

* Nerva Trajan Adrian and the two Antonini

though the prince of the latter can have no power, but what he originally derives from the omnipotent Sovereign in the former, yet it plainly appears from Scripture, that absolute power in his infernal dominions is granted to their diabolical ruler This is indeed the only absolute power which can by Scripture be de rived from heaven If therefore the several tyrannies upon earth can prove any title to a Divine authority, it must be derived from this original grant to the prince of darkness and these subordinate deputations must conse quently come immediately from him whose stamp they so expressly bear

To conclude as the examples of all ages show us that mankind in general desire power only to do harm and when they obtain it use it for no other purpose it is not consonant with even the least degree of prudence to haz ard an alteration where our hopes are poorly kept in countenance by only two or three ex ceptions out of a thousand instances to alarm our fears In this case it will be much wiser to submit to a few inconveniences arising from the dispassionate deafness of laws than to remedy them by applying to the passionate open ears of a tyrant

Nor can the example of the gypsies though possibly they may have long been happy under this form of government be here urged since we must remember the very material respect in which they differ from all other people and to which perhaps this their happiness is en tirely owing namely that they have no false honours among them and that they look on shame as the most grievous punishment in the world

Chapter 13

A dialogue between Jones and Partridge

The honest lovers of liberty will we doubt not pardon that long digression into which we were led at the close of the last chapter to prevent our history from being applied to the use of the most pernicious doctrine which priestcraft had ever the wickedness or the im pudence to preach

We will now proceed with Mr Jones who when the storm was over took leave of his Egyptian majesty after many thanks for his courteous behaviour and kind entertainment and set out for Coventry to which place (for it was still dark) a gypsy was ordered to con duct him.

Jones having by reason of his deviation travelled eleven miles instead of six and most of those through very execrable roads where no expedition could have been made in quest of a midwife did not arrive at Coventry till near twelve Nor could he possibly get again into the saddle till past two for post horses were now not easy to get nor were the hostler or post boy in half so great a hurry as himself but chose rather to imitate the tranquil dis than when he arrived at an inn nor ever more dissatisfied than when he was again forced to leave it

Jones now travelled post we will follow him therefore according to our custom and to the rules of Longinus in the same manner From Coventry he arrived at Daventry from Daventry at Stratford and from Stratford at Dunstable whither he came the next day a little after noon and within a few hours after Sophia had left it and though he was obliged to stay here longer than he wished while a smith with great deliberation shoed the post horse he was to ride he doubted not but to overtake his Sophia before she should set out from St Albans at which place he concluded and very reasonably that his lordship would stop and dine order to enable him to reach that place in proper time he had ordered a relay of horses to meet him at St Albans When Jones there fore arrived there he was informed that the coach and six had set out two hours before

If fresh post horses had been now ready as they were not it seemed so apparently im possible to overtake the coach before it reached London that Partridge thought he had now a proper opportunity to remind his friend of a matter which he seemed entirely to have for gotten what this was the reader will guess, when we inform him that Jones had eat noth ing more than one poached egg since he had left the alehouse where he had first met the guide returning from Sophia for with the dine than he very readily put in his word and retracting his promise before given of furnish ing the horses immediately he assured Mr Jones he would lose no time in bespeaking a dinner which he said could be got ready sooner than it was possible to get the horses up from grass and to prepare them for their journey by a feed of corn

Jones was at length prevailed on chiefly by the latter argument of the landlord and now a joint of mutton was put down to the fire While this was preparing Partridge being admitted into the same apartment with his friend or master began to harangue in the fol lowing manner food as you do? I am positive I have eat thirty times as much within these last twenty four hours as your honour and yet I am almost famished for nothing makes a man so hungry as travelling especially in this cold raw weather And yet I can t tell how it is but your honour is seemingly in perfect good health and you never looked better nor fresher in your life It must be certainly love that you live upon

And a very rich diet too Partridge an swered Jones But did not fortune send me an excellent dainty yesterday? Dost thou imag ine I cannot live more than twenty four hours on this dear pocket book?

Undoubtedly cries Partridge there is enough in that pocket book to purchase many a good meal Fortune sent it to your honour very opportunely for present use as your hon our's money must be almost out by this time

What do you mean? answered Jones I hope you don t imagine that I should be dis honest enough even if it belonged to any other person besides Miss Western——

Dishonest! replied Partridge heaven for bid I should wrong your honour so much! but where s the dishonesty in borrowing a little for present spending since you will be so well able to pay the lady hereafter? No indeed I would have your honour pay it again as soon as it is convenient by all means but where can be the harm in making use of it now it? Indeed if it belonged to a poor l ld be another thing but so gre sure can never want it especi is along with a lord who it ca will let her have whatever she Besides if she should want a l want the whole, therefore I would give her a little but I would be hanged before I men tioned the having found it at first and before I got some money of my own for London I have heard is the very worst of places to be in without money Indeed if I had not known to whom it belonged I might have thought it was the devil s money and have been afraid to use it but as you know otherwise and came honestly by it it would be an affront to for tune to part with it all again at the very time when you want it most you can hardly expect she should ever do you such another good turn for fortuna nunquam perpetuo est bona * You will do as you please notwithstanding all I say but for my part I would be hanged be fore I mentioned a word of the matter"

By what I can see Partridge cries Jones, hanging is a matter non longe alienum à Scævolæ studiis You should say alienus" says Partridge — I remember the passage it is an example under communis alienus immunis, variis casibus serviunt It you do remember it cries Jones I find you don t understand it but I tell thee friend in plain English that he who finds another s property and wilfully detains it from the known owner deserves in foro conscientiæ to be hanged no less than if he had stolen it And as for this very identical bill which is the property of my angel and was once in her dear possession I will not de liver it into any hands but her own upon any consideration whatever no though I was as hungry as thou art and had no other means to satisfy my craving appetite this I hope to do before I sleep but if it should happen otherwise I charge thee if thou would st not incur my displeasure for ever not to shock me any more by the bare mention of such de testable baseness

I should not have mentioned it now" cries Partridge if it had appeared so to me for I m sure I scorn any wickedness as much as an other but perhaps you know better and yet I might have imagined that I should not have lived so many years and have taught school so long wit ng able to distinguish be tween fas it seems we are all to live and er my old school odigious great scholar, matete cry town is my he told us was his fine to a grammar at this time of day Perhaps young gentleman you may change your opinion if you live to my years for I remember I thought myself as wise when I was a stripling of one or two and twenty as I am now I am sure I always taught alienus, and my master read it so before me

*Fort

There were not many instances in which Partridge could provoke Jones nor were there many in which Partridge himself could have been hurried out of his respect Unluckily, however they had both hit on one of these We have already seen Partridge could not bear to have his learning attacked nor could Jones bear some passage or other in the foregoing speech And now, looking upon his companion with a contemptuous and disdainful air (a thing not usual with him) he cried 'Partridge I see thou art a conceited old fool and I wish thou are not likewise an old rogue Indeed if I was as well convinced of the latter as I am of the former thou should st travel no farther in my company

[illegible]

he had uttered anything which might give offence for that he had never intended it but Nemo omnibus horis sapit *

[illegible]

enemies must at the same time have confest that it as soon subsided nor did it at all resemble the sea whose swelling is more violent and dangerous after a storm is over than while

[illegible]

same time very severely condemned himself though not half so severely as he will most probably be condemned by many of our good readers

Partridge was now highly comforted as his fears of having offended were at once abolished and his pride completely satisfied by Jones having owned himself in the wrong which submission he instantly applied to what had principally nettled him and repeated in a muttering voice To be sure sir your knowledge may be superior to mine in some things but as to the grammar I think I may challenge any man living I think at least I have that at my finger s end'

If anything could add to the satisfaction which the poor man now enjoyed he received this addition by the arrival of an excellent

[illegible]

horses and set forward for London

Chapter 14

What happened to Mr Jones in his journey from St Albans

THEY were got about two miles beyond Barnet and it was now the dusk of the evening when a genteel looking man but upon a very shabby horse rode up to Jones and asked him whether he was going to London to which Jones answered in the affirmative The gentleman replied I should be obliged to you sir if you will accept of my company for it is very late and I am a stranger to the road Jones readily complied with the request and on they travelled together holding that sort of dis-

[illegible]

pressed great apprehensions but Jones declared he had very little to lose and conse-

[illegible]

sure if I had a hundred pound bank note in my pocket as you have I should be very sorry to lose it but for my part I never was less afraid in my life for we are four of us and if

[illegible]

Besides the reliance on superior numbers a kind of valour which hath raised a certain nation among the moderns to a high pitch of glory there was another reason for the extraordinary courage which Partridge now discovered for he had at present as much of that quality as was in the power of liquor to bestow

Our company were now arrived within a mile of Highgate when the stranger turned short upon Jones and pulling out a pistol demanded that little bank note which Partridge had mentioned

Jones was at first somewhat shocked a unexpected demand however, he p

* No one is wise all the time

recollected himself and told the highwayman all the money he had in his pocket was entirely at his service and so saying he pulled out upwards of three guineas and offered to deliver it but the other answered with an oath That would not do Jones answered coolly he was very sorry for it and returned the money into his pocket

The highwayman then threatened if he did not deliver the bank note that moment he must shoot him holding his pistol at the same time very near to his breast Jones instantly caught hold of the fellow s hand which trembled so that he could scarce hold the pistol in it and turned the muzzle from him A struggle then ensued in which the former wrested the pistol from the hand of his antagonist and both came from their horses on the ground together the highwayman upon his back and the victorious Jones upon him

The poor fellow now began to implore mercy of the conqueror for to say the truth he was in strength by no means a match for Jones Indeed sir says he I could have had no intention to shoot you for you will find the pistol was not loaded This is the first robbery I ever attempted and I have been driven by distress to this

At this instant at about a hundred and fifty yards distance lay another person on the ground roaring for mercy in a much louder voice than the highwayman This was no other than Partridge himself who endeavouring to make his escape from the engagement had been thrown from his horse and lay flat on his face not daring to look up and expecting every minute to be shot

In this posture he lay till the guide who was no otherwise concerned than for his horses having secured the stumbling beast came up to him and told him his master had got the better of the highwayman

Partridge leapt up at this news and ran back to the place where Jones stood with his sword drawn in his hand to guard the poor fellow which Partridge no sooner saw than he cried out Kill the villain sir run him through the body kill him this instant!

Luckily however for the poor wretch he had fallen into more merciful hands for Jones having examined the pistol and found it to be really unloaded began to believe all the man had told him before Partridge came up namely that he was a novice in the trade and that he had been driven to it by the distress he mentioned the greatest indeed imaginable that of five hungry children and a wife lying in of the sixth in the utmost want and misery The truth of all which the highwayman most vehemently asserted and offered to convince Mr Jones of it if he would take the trouble

Jones at first pretended that he would take the fellow at his word and go with him declaring that his fate should depend entirely on the truth of his story Upon this the poor fellow immediately expressed so much alacrity that Jones was perfectly satisfied with his veracity and began now to entertain sentiments of compassion for him He returned the fellow his empty pistol advised him to think of honester means of relieving his distress and gave him a couple of guineas for the immediate support of his wife and his family adding he wished he had more for his sake for the hundred pound that had been mentioned was not his own

Our readers will probably be divided in their opinions concerning this action some may applaud it perhaps as an act of extraordinary humanity while those of a more saturnine temper will consider it as a want of regard to that justice which every man owes his country Partridge certainly saw it in that light for he testified much dissatisfaction on the occasion quoted an old proverb and said he should not wonder if the rogue attacked them again before they reached London

The highwayman was full of expressions of thankfulness and gratitude He actually dropt tears or pretended so to do He vowed he would immediately return home and would never afterwards commit such a transgression whether he kept his word or no perhaps may appear hereafter

Our travellers having remounted their horses arrived in town without encountering any new mishap On the road much pleasant discourse passed between Jones and Partridge on the subject of their last adventure in which Jones exprest a great compassion for those highwaymen who are by unavoidable distress driven as it were to such illegal courses as generally bring them to a shameful death I mean said he those only whose highest guilt extends no farther than to robbery and who are never guilty of cruelty nor insult to any person which is a circumstance that I must say to the honour of our country distinguishes the robbers of England from those of all other n

ter to take away one s money than one s life and yet it is very hard upon honest men that they can t travel about their business without being in danger of these villains And to be sure it would be better that all rogues were hanged out of the way than that one honest man should suffer For my own part indeed I should not care to have the blood of any of them on my hands but it is very proper for the law to hang them all What right hath any man to take sixpence from me unless I give it him? Is there any honesty in such a man?

No surely cries Jones no more than there is in him who takes the horses out of another man s stable or who applies to his own use the money which he finds when he knows the right owner

These hints stopt the mouth of Partridge nor did he open it again till Jones having thrown some sarcastical jokes on his cowardice he offered to excuse himself on the inequality of firearms saying A thousand naked men are nothing to one pistol for though it is true it will kill but one at a single discharge yet who can tell but that one may be himself?

BOOK XIII

CONTAINING THE SPACE OF TWELVE DAYS

Chapter 1

An invocation

COME bright love of fame inspire my glowing breast not thee I call who over swelling tides of blood and tears dost bear the heroe on to glory while sighs of millions waft his spreading sails but thee fair gentle maid whom Mnesis happy nymph first on the banks of Hebrus did produce Thee whom Mæonia educated whom Mantua charmed and who on that fair hill which overlooks the proud metropolis of Britain sat st with thy Milton sweetly tuning the heroic lyre fill my ravished fancy with the hopes of charming ages yet to come Foretel me that some tender maid whose grandmother is yet unborn hereafter when under the fictitious name of Sophia she reads the real worth which once existed in my Charlotte shall from her sympathetic breast send forth the heaving sigh Do thou teach me not only to foresee but to enjoy nay even to feed on future praise Comfort me by a solemn assurance that when the little parlour in which I sit at this instant shall be reduced to a worse furnished box I shall be read with honour by those who never knew nor saw me and whom I shall neither know nor see

And thou much plumper dame whom no airy forms nor phantoms of imagination cloathe whom the well seasoned beef and pudding richly stained with plums delight thee I call of whom in a treckschuyte in some Dutch canal the fat Jufvrouw Gelt impregnated by a jolly merchant of Amsterdam was delivered in Grub street school didst thou suck in the elements of thy erudition Here hast thou in thy maturer age taught poetry to tickle not the fancy but the pride of the patron Comedy from thee learns a grave and solemn air while tragedy storms aloud and rends th affrighted theatres with its thunders To soothe thy wearied limbs in slumber Alder advice the heavy unread folio lump which ible bank bill ... often varying stock the warm the comfortable house and lastly a fair portion of that bounteous mother whose flowing breasts yield redundant sustenance for all her numerous offspring did not some too greedily and wantonly drive their brethren from the teat Come thou and if I am too tasteless of thy valuable treasures warm my heart with the transporting thought of conveying them to others Tell me that through thy bounty the prattling babes whose innocent play hath often been interrupted by my labours may one time be amply rewarded for them

And now this ill yoked pair this lean shadow and this fat substance have prompted me to write whose assistance shall I invoke to direct my pen?

First Genius thou gift of Heaven without whose aid in vain we struggle against the stream of nature Thou who dost sow the generous seeds which art nourishes and brings to perfection Do thou kindly take me by the hand and lead me through all the mazes the winding labyrinths of nature Initiate me into all those mysteries which profane eyes never beheld Teach me which to thee is no difficult task to know mankind better than they know themselves Remove that mist which dims the intellects of mortals and causes them to adore men for their art or to detest them for their cunning in deceiving others when they are in reality the objects only of ridicule for deceiving themselves Strip off the thin disguise of wisdom from self-conceit of plenty from avarice and of glory from ambition Come thou that hast inspired thy Aristo- [illegible] mankind learn the good nature to laugh only at the follies of others and the humility to grieve at their own

And thou almost the constant attendant on true genius Humanity bring all thy tender sensations If thou hast already disposed of them all between thy Allen and thy Lyttleton steal them a little while from their bosoms Not without these the tender scene is painted From these alone proceed the noble disinterested friendship the melting love the generous sentiment the ardent gratitude the soft compassion the candid opinion and all those grief joy and benevolence

And thou O Learning! (for without thy assistance nothing pure nothing correct can genius produce) do thou guide my pen Thee in thy favourite fields where the limpid gently rolling Thames washes thy Etonian banks in early youth I have worshipped To thee at thy birchen altar with true Spartan devotion, I have sacrificed my blood Come then and from thy vast luxuriant stores in long antiquity piled up pour forth the rich profusion Open thy Mæonian and thy Mantuan coffers with whatever else includes thy philosophic thy poetic and thy historical treasures whether with Greek or Roman characters thou hast chosen to inscribe the ponderous chests give me a while that key to all thy treasures which to thy Warburton thou hast entrusted

Lastly come Experience long conversant with the wise the good the learned and the polite Nor with them only but with every kind of character from the minister at his levee to the bailiff in his spunging house from the dutchess at her drum to the landlady behind her bar From thee only can the manners of mankind be known to which the recluse pedant however great his parts or extensive his learning may be hath ever been a stranger

Come all these and more if possible for arduous is the task I have undertaken and without all your assistance will I find be too heavy for me to support But if you all smile on my labours I hope still to bring them to a happy conclusion

Chapter 2

What befel Mr Jones on his arrival in London

The learned Dr Misaubin used to say that the proper direction to him was To Dr Misaubin in the World intimating that there were few people in it to whom his great reputation was not known And perhaps upon a very nice examination into the matter we shall find that this circumstance bears no inconsiderable part among the many blessings of grandeur

The great happiness of being known to posterity with the hopes of which we so delighted ourselves in the preceding chapter is the portion of few To have the several elements which compose our names as Sydenham expresses it repeated a thousand years hence is a gift beyond the power of title and wealth and is scarce to be purchased unless by the sword and the pen But to avoid the scandalous imputation while we yet live of being one whom nobody knows (a scandal by the bye as old as the days of Homer *) will always be the envied portion of those who have a legal title either to honour or estate

* See Odyssey II 175

From that figure, therefore, which the Irish peer, who brought Sophia to town, hath already made in this history, the reader will conclude, doubtless, it must have been an easy matter to have discovered his house in London without knowing the particular street or square which he inhabited, since he must have been one whom everybody knows To say the truth, so it would have been to any of those tradesmen who are accustomed to attend the regions of the great, for the doors of the great are generally no less easy to find than it is difficult to get entrance into them But Jones, as well at Partridge, was an entire stranger in London, and as he happened to arrive first in a quarter of the town the inhabitants of which have very little intercourse with the householders of Hanover or Grosvenor square (for he entered through Gray's inn lane) so he rambled about some time, before he could even find his way to those happy mansions where fortune segregates from the vulgar those magnanimous heroes, the descendants of antient Britons, Saxons, or Danes, whose ancestors, being born in better days by sundry kinds of merit, have entailed riches and honour on their posterity

Jones, being at length arrived at those terrestrial Elysian fields, would now soon have discovered his lordship's mansion but the peer unluckily quitted his former house when he went for Ireland and as he was just entered into a new one, the fame of his equipage had not yet sufficiently blazed in the neighbourhood, so that, after a successless inquiry till the clock had struck eleven, Jones at last yielded to the advice of Partridge, and retreated to the Bull and Gate in Holborn that being the inn where he had first alighted, and where he retired to enjoy that kind of repose which usually attends persons in his circumstances

Early in the morning he again set forth in pursuit of Sophia and many a weary step he took to no better purpose than before At last whether it was that Fortune relented, or whether it was no longer in her power to disappoint him, he came into the very street which was honoured by his lordship s residence, and, being directed to the house he gave one gentle rap at the door

The porter, who, from the modesty of the knock, had conceived no high idea of the person approaching conceived but little better from the appearance of Mr. Jones who was drest in a suit of fustian, and had by his side the weapon formerly purchased of the serjeant, of which, though the blade might be composed of well tempered steel, the handle was composed only of brass and that none of the brightest When Jones, therefore, enquired after the young lady who had come to town with his lordship, this fellow answered surlily, "That there were no ladies there " Jones then desired to see the master of the house but was informed that his lordship would see nobody that morning And upon growing more pressing the porter said 'he had positive orders to let no person in, but if you think proper, said he to leave your name, I will acquaint his lordship and if you call another time you shall know when he will see you '

Jones now declared, that he had very particular business with the young lady and could not depart without seeing her Upon which the porter with no very agreeable voice or aspect, affirmed, that there was no young lady in that house and consequently none could he see ' adding sure you are the strangest man I ever met with, for you will not take an answer

I have often thought that by the particular description of Cerberus the porter of hell in the 6th Æneid Virgil might possibly intend to satirize the porters of the great men in his time, the picture at least resembles those who have the honour to attend at the doors of our great men The porter in his lodge answers exactly to Cerberus in his den and like him must be appeased by a sop before access can be gained to his master Perhaps Jones might have seen him in that light, and have recollected the passage where the Sibyl in order to procure an entrance for Æneas presents the keeper of the Stygian avenue with such a sop Jones, in like manner now began to offer a bribe to the human Cerberus which a footman overhearing instantly advanced, and declared if Mr Jones would give him the sum proposed he would conduct him to the lady Jones instantly agreed and was forthwith conducted to the lodging of Mrs Fitzpatrick, by the very fellow who had attended the ladies thither the day before

Nothing more aggravates ill success than the near approach to good The gamester, who loses his party at piquet by a single point, laments his bad luck ten times as much as he who never came within a prospect of the game So in a lottery the proprietors of the next numbers to that which wins the great prize are apt to account themselves much more unfor tunate than their fellow sufferers In short these kind of hairbreadth missings of happiness look like the insults of Fortune who may be considered as thus playing tricks with us and wantonly diverting herself at our expense

Jones who more than once already had experienced this frolicsome disposition of the heathen goddess was now again doomed to be tantalized in the like manner for he arrived at the door of Mrs Fitzpatrick about ten minutes after the departure of Sophia He now ad

swer he afterwards received from Mrs Fitzpatrick herself For as that lady made no doubt but that Mr Jones was a person detached from her uncle Western in pursuit of his daughter so she was too generous to betray her

Though Jones had never seen Mrs Fitzpatrick yet he had heard that a cousin of Sophia was married to a gentleman of that name This however in the present tumult of his mind never once recurred to his memory but when the footman who had conducted him from his lordship s acquainted him with the great intimacy between the ladies and with their calling each other cousin he then recollected the story of the marriage which he had formerly heard and as he was presently convinced that this was the same woman he became more surprized at the answer which he had received and very earnestly desired leave to wait on the lady herself but she as positively refused him that honour

Jones who though he had never seen a court was better bred than most who frequent it was incapable of any rude or abrupt behaviour to a lady When he had received therefore a peremptory denial he retired for the present saying to the waiting woman That if this was an improper hour to wait on her lady he would return in the afternoon and that he then hoped to have the honour of seeing her The civility with which he uttered this added to the great comeliness of his person made an impression on the waiting woman and she could not help answering Perhaps sir you may and indeed she afterwards said everything to her mistress which she thought most likely to prevail on her to admit a visit from the handsome young gentleman for so she called him

Jones very shrewdly suspected that Sophia herself was now with her cousin and was denied to him which he imputed to her resentment of what had happened at Upton Having therefore dispatched Partridge to procure him lodgings he remained all day in the street watching the door where he thought his angel lay concealed but no person did he see issue forth except a servant of the house and in the evening he returned to pay his visit to Mrs Fitzpatrick which that good lady at last condescended to admit

There is a certain air of natural gentility which it is neither in the power of dress to give nor to conceal Mr Jones as hath been before hinted was possessed of this in a very eminent degree He met therefore with a reception from the lady somewhat different from what his apparel seemed to demand and after he had paid her his proper respects was desired to sit down

The reader will not I believe be desirous of knowing all the particulars of this conversation which ended very little to the satisfaction of poor Jones For though Mrs Fitzpatrick soon discovered the lover (as all women have the eyes of hawks in those matters) yet she still thought it was such a lover as a generous friend of the lady should not betray her to In short she suspected this was the very Mr Blifil from whom Sophia had flown and all the answers which she artfully drew from Jones concerning Mr Allworthy s family confirmed her in this opinion She therefore strictly denied any knowledge concerning the place whither Sophia was gone nor could Jones obtain more than a permission to wait on her again the next evening

When Jones was departed Mrs Fitzpatrick communicated her suspicion concerning Mr Blifil to her maid who answered Sure madam he is too pretty a man in my opinion for any woman in the world to run away from I had rather fancy it is Mr Jones — Mr Jones! said the lady what Jones? For Sophia

quainted her sister Abigail with the whole history of Jones which this now again related to her mistress

Mrs Fitzpatrick no sooner received this information than she immediately agreed with the opinion of her maid and what is very unaccountable saw charms in the gallant happy lover which she had overlooked in the slighted squire Betty says she you are certainly in the right he is a very pretty fellow and I don t wonder that my cousin s maid should tell you so many women are fond of him I am sorry now I did not inform him where my cousin was and yet if he be so terrible a rake as you tell me it is a pity she should ever see him any more for what but her ruin can happen from marrying a rake and a beggar against her father s consent? I protest if he be such a man as the wench described him to you it is but an office of charity to keep her from him and I am sure it would be unpardonable in me to do otherwise who have tasted so bitterly of the misfortunes attending such marriages

He e she was interrupted by the arrival of a visitor which was no other than his lordship and as nothing passed at this visit either new or extraordinary or any ways material to this history we shall here put an end to this chapter

Chapter 3

A project of Mrs Fitzpatrick, and her visit to Lady Bellaston

WHEN Mrs Fitzpatrick retired to rest, her

t on she had not long exercised her imagina tion before the following conceit suggested itself that could she possibly become the means of preserving Sophia from this man and of restoring her to her father she should in all human probability by so great a service to the family reconcile to herself both her uncle and her aunt Western

As this was one of her most favourite wishes so the hope of success seemed so reasonable that nothing remained but to consider of proper methods to accomplish her scheme To attempt to reason the case with Sophia did not appear to her one of those methods for as Betty had reported from Mrs Honour that Sophia had a violent inclination to Jones she conceived that to dissuade her from the match was an endeavour of the same kind, as it would be very heartily and earnestly to entreat a moth not to fly into a candle

If the reader will please to remember that the acquaintance which Sophia had with Lady Bellaston was contracted at the house of Mrs Western and must have grown at the very time when Mrs Fitzpatrick lived with this latter lady he will want no information that Mrs. Fitzpatrick must have been acquainted with her likewise They were besides both equally her distant relations

After much consideration therefore she resolved to go early in the morning to that lady and endeavour to see her unknown to Sophia and to acquaint her with the whole affair For she did not in the least doubt but that the prudent lady who had often ridiculed romantic love and indiscreet marriages in her conversation would very readily concur in her sentiments concerning this match and would lend her utmost assistance to prevent it

This resolution she accordingly executed and the next morning before the sun she huddled on her cloaths and at a very unfashionable unseasonable unvisitable hour went to L dy Bellaston to whom she got access with out the least knowledge or suspicion of Sophia who though not asleep lay at that time awake in her bed with Honour snoring by her side

Mrs Fitzpatrick made many apologies for an early abrupt visit at an hour when she said she should not have thought of disturb

Lady Bellaston answered with a smile Then you have seen this terrible man madam pray is he so very fine a figure as he is represented? for Etoff entertained me last night almost two hours with him The wench I be-

while she was undressing on which accounts she had been detained in her office above the space of an hour and a half

The lady indeed though generally well enough pleased with the narratives of Mrs Etoff at those seasons gave an extraordinary

Lady Bellaston began to conceive him to be a kind of miracle in nature

The curiosity which her woman had inspired was now greatly increased by Mrs. Fitzpatrick who spoke as much in favour of the person of Jones as she had before spoken in disp his birth character and fortune.

When Lady Bellaston had heard the whole, she answered gravely 'Indeed, madam this is [illegible] share in the preservation of a young lady of so much merit, and for whom I have so much esteem"

'Doth not your ladyship think," says Mrs. Fitzpatrick eagerly, 'that it would be the best way to write immediately to my uncle, and acquaint him where my cousin is?"

The lady pondered a little upon this, and thus answered—"Why no madam, I think not Di Western hath described her brother to me to be such a brute, that I cannot consent to put any woman under his power who hath escaped from it I have heard he behaved like a monster to his own wife, for he is one of those wretches who think they have a right to tyrannise over us, and from such I shall ever esteem it the cause of my sex to rescue any woman who is so unfortunate to be under their power —The business dear cousin, will be only to keep Miss Western from seeing this young fellow, till the good company, which she will have an opportunity of meeting here, give her a properer turn"

'If he should find out her, madam," answered the other, "your ladyship may be assured he will leave nothing unattempted to come at her"

"But, madam" replied the lady, 'it is impossible he should come here—though indeed it is possible he may get some intelligence where she is, and then may lurk about the house —I wish therefore I knew his person Is there no way, madam, by which I could have a sight of him? for, otherwise, you know, cousin, she may contrive to see him here without my knowledge"

Mrs Fitzpatrick answered, "That he had threatened her with another visit that after [illegible] and seven and if he came earlier she would, by some means or other detain him till her ladyship's arrival '—Lady Bellaston replied, She would come the moment she could get from dinner, which she supposed would be by seven at farthest, for that it was absolutely necessary she should be acquainted with his person Upon my word madam says she 'it was very good to take this care of Miss Western, but common humanity, as well as regard to our family, requires it of us both; for it would be a dreadful match indeed"

Mrs Fitzpatrick failed not to make a proper return to the compliment which Lady Bellaston had bestowed on her cousin, and, after some little immaterial conversation, withdrew, and, getting as fast as she could into her chair, unseen by Sophia or Honour, returned home.

Chapter 4

Which consists of visiting

Mr Jones had walked within sight of a certain door during the whole day, which, though one of the shortest, appeared to him to be one of the longest in the whole year At length the clock having struck five, he returned to Mrs Fitzpatrick, who though it was a full hour earlier than the decent time of visiting received him very civilly, but still persisted in her ignorance concerning Sophia

Jones in asking for his angel, had dropped the word cousin upon which Mrs Fitzpatrick said, "Then sir, you know we are related and as we are you will permit me the right of inquiring into the particulars of your business with my cousin" Here Jones hesitated a good while, and at last answered, 'He had a considerable sum of money of hers in his hands, which he desired to deliver to her.' He then produced the pocket book, and acquainted Mrs Fitzpatrick with the contents, and with the method in which they came into his hands. He had scarce finished his story, when a most violent noise shook the whole house To attempt to describe this noise to those who have heard it would be in vain and to aim at giving any idea of it to those who have never heard the like would be still more vain for it may be truly said—

————Non acuta
Sic geminant Corybantes æra

The priests of Cybele do not so rattle their sounding brass

In short a footman knocked, or rather thundered at the door Jones was a little surprized at the sound having never heard it before but Mrs Fitzpatrick very calmly said that as some company were coming she could not make him any answer now, but if he pleased to stay till they were gone, she intimated she had something to say to him

The door of the room now flew open, and, after pushing in her hoop sideways before her; entered Lady Bellaston who having first made a very low courtesy to Mrs Fitzpatrick, and as low a one to Mr Jones, was ushered to the upper end of the room

We mention these minute matters for the sake of some country ladies of our acquaintance who think it contrary to the rules of modesty to bend their knees to a man

The company were hardly well settled before the arrival of the peer lately mentioned, caused a fresh disturbance, and a repetition of ceremonials

These being over, the conversation began to be (as the phrase is) extremely brilliant However, as nothing past in it which can be thought material to this history, or, indeed, very material in itself, I shall omit the relation, the rather, as I have known some very fine polite conversation grow extremely dull, when transcribed into books, or repeated on the stage Indeed, this mental repast is a dainty, of which those who are excluded from polite assemblies must be contented to remain as ignorant as they must of the several dainties of French cookery, which are served only at the tables of the great To say the truth, as neither of these are adapted to every taste, they might both be often thrown away on the vulgar

Poor Jones was rather a spectator of this elegant scene, than an actor in it, for though, in the short interval before the peer s arrival, Lady Bellaston first, and afterwards Mrs Fitzpatrick, had addressed some of their discourse to him yet no sooner was the noble lord entered, than he engrossed the whole attention of the two ladies to himself, and as he took no more notice of Jones than if no such person had been present, unless by now and then staring at him, the ladies followed his example

The company had now staid so long that Mrs Fitzpatrick plainly perceived they all designed to stay out each other She therefore resolved to rid herself of Jones, he being the visitant to whom she thought the least ceremony was due. Taking therefore an opportunity of a cessation of chat, she addressed her self word where I may send to you to-morrow——"

Jones had natural, but not artificial good breeding Instead, therefore, of communicating the secret of his lodgings to a servant, he acquainted the lady herself with it particularly, and soon after very ceremoniously withdrew

He was no sooner gone, than the great personages, who had taken no notice of him present, began to take much notice of him in his absence, but if the reader hath already excused us from relating the more brilliant part of this conversation he will surely be ready to excuse the repetition of what may be called vulgar abuse, though, perhaps, it may be material to our history to mention an observation of Lady Bellaston, who took her leave in a few minutes after him, and then said to Mrs Fitzpatrick, at her departure, "I am satisfied on the account of my cousin, she can be in no danger from this fellow "

Our history shall follow the example of Lady Bellaston, and take leave of the present company, which was now reduced to two persons, between whom as nothing passed, which in the least concerns us or our reader, we shall not suffer ourselves to be diverted by it from matters which must seem of more consequence to all those who are at all interested in the affairs of our heroe

Chapter 5

An adventure which happened to Mr Jones at his lodgings, with some account of a young gentleman who lodged there, and of the mistress of the house, and her two daughters

THE NEXT morning as early as it was decent, Jones attended at Mrs Fitzpatrick's door where he was answered that the lady was not at home, an answer which surprized him the more, as he had walked backwards and forwards in the street from break of day, and if she had gone out, he must have seen her This answer, however, he was obliged to receive, and not only now, but to five several visits which he made her that day

To be plain with the reader the noble peer had from some reason or other, perhaps from a regard for the lady s honour insisted that she should not see Mr Jones, whom he looked on as a scrub any more and the lady had complied in making that promise to which we now see her so strictly adhere

But as our gentle reader may possibly have a better opinion of the young gentleman than her ladyship and may even have some concern should it be apprehended that, during this unhappy separation from Sophia, he took up his residence either at an inn, or in the street, we shall now give an account of his lodging which was indeed in a very reputable house and in a very good part of the town

Mr Jones, then had often heard Mr Allworthy mention the gentlewoman at whose possession of two daughters, and of a compleat set of manuscript sermons

Of these two daughters Nancy, the elder, was now arrived at the age of seventeen, and himself in the second floor, and with one for Partridge in the fourth

The first floor was inhabited by one of those young gentlemen, who, in the last age, were called men of wit and pleasure about town, and properly enough for as men are usually denominated from their business or profession so pleasure may be said to have been the only business or profession of those gentlemen to whom fortune had made all useful occupations unnecessary Play houses, coffee houses, and taverns were the scenes of their rendezvous Wit and humour were the entertainment of their looser hours and love was the business of their more serious moments Wine and the muses conspired to kindle the brighest flames in their breasts nor did they only admire, but some were able to celebrate the beauty they admired and all to judge of the merit of such compositions

Such therefore were properly called the men of wit and pleasure, but I question whether the same appellation may, with the same propriety, be given to those young gentlemen of our times who have the same ambition to be distinguished for parts Wit certainly they have nothing to do with To give them their due they soar a step higher than their predecessors, and may be called men of wisdom and vertù (take heed you do not read virtue) Thus at an age when the gentlemen above mentioned employ their time in toasting the charms of a woman or in making sonnets in her praise in giving their opinion of a play at the theatre or of a poem at Will s or Button s these gentlemen are considering the

is that which above all others employs their thoughts These are the studies of their graver hours, while for their amusements they have the vast circle of connoisseurship painting music, statuary and natural philosophy, or rather unnatural, which deals in the wonderful, and knows nothing of Nature, except her monsters and imperfections

When Jones had spent the whole day in vain inquiries after Mrs Fitzpatrick, he returned at last disconsolate to his apartment. Here, while he was venting his grief in private he heard a violent uproar below-stairs, and soon after a female voice begged him for heaven's sake to come and prevent murder Jones, who was never backward on any occasion to help the distressed, immediately ran down stairs when stepping into the dining room, whence all the noise issued, he beheld the young gentleman of wisdom and vertu just before mentioned, pinned close to the wall by his footman, and a young woman standing by, wringing her hands and crying out, "He will be murdered! he will be murdered!" and indeed, the poor gentleman seemed in some danger of being choaked, when Jones flew hastily to his assistance, and rescued him, just as he was breathing his last, from the unmerciful clutches of the enemy.

Though the fellow had received several kicks and cuffs from the little gentleman, who had more spirit than strength, he had made it a kind of scruple of conscience to strike his master, and would have contented himself with only choaking him, but towards Jones he bore no such respect, he no sooner therefore tors at Broughton's amphitheatre have such exquisite delight in seeing them, convey but very little pleasure in the feeling

The lusty youth had no sooner received this blow, than he meditated a most grateful return and now ensued a combat between Jones and the footman which was very fierce, but short, for this fellow was no more able to contend with Jones than his master had before been to contend with him

And now, Fortune, according to her usual custom, reversed the face of affairs The former victor lay breathless on the ground, and the vanquished gentleman had recovered breath enough to thank Mr. Jones for his seasonable assistance, he received likewise the hearty thanks of the young woman present, who was indeed no other than Miss Nancy, the eldest to do with you, you have been upon the stage, or I m d—nably mistaken " And indeed we may forgive this his suspicion, for such was the agility and strength of our heroe, that he was, perhaps, a match for one of the first rate boxers, and could, with great ease, have beaten all the

hool

dered

h the

And now the young gentleman, whose name was Nightingale, very strenuously insisted that his deliverer should take part of a bottle of wine with him, to which Jones after much entreaty consented, though more out of complacence than inclination, for the uneasiness of his mind fitted him very little for conversation at this time Miss Nancy likewise, who was the only female then in the house, her mamma and sister being both gone to the play, condescended to favour them with her company

When the bottle and glasses were on the table, the gentleman began to relate the occasion of the preceding disturbance

'I hope, sir," said he to Jones you will not from this accident conclude, that I make a custom of striking my servants for I assure you this is the first time I have been guilty of it in my remembrance, and I have passed by many provoking faults in this very fellow, before he could provoke me to it, but when you hear what hath happened this evening you will, I believe, think me excusable I happened to come home several hours before my usual time, when I found four gentlemen of the cloth at whist by my fire —and my Hoyle, sir—my best Hoyle, which cost me a guinea, lying open on the table, with a quantity of porter spilt on one of the most material leaves of the whole book.

ectually secure them from the ... lency of black eyes broken jaws, and bloody noses.

This you will allow, was provoking but I said nothing till the rest of the honest company had happened to the book, but that several of his acquaintance had bought the same for a the insolence to—In short he imputed my early coming home to—In short, he cast a reflection—He mentioned the name of a young lady in a manner—in such a manner that incensed me beyond all patience, and, in my passion, I struck him "

Jones answered, 'That he believed no per were joined by the mother and daughter, at their return from the play And now they all spent a very chearful evening together, for all but Jones were heartily merry, and even he constrained mirth as possible new lodger, invited ... morning to breakfast

As

e, ad

ar

fifty As she was one of the most innocent creatures in the world so she was one of the most chearful She never thought, nor spoke nor tation In short though her power was small she was in her heart one of the warmest friends She had been a most affectionate wife, and was a most fond and tender mother As our history doth not like a newspaper, give great characters to people who never were heard of before, nor will ever be heard of again, the reader may hence conclude, that this excellent woman will hereafter appear to be of some importance in our history

Nor was Jones a little pleased with the young gentleman himself whose wine he had been drinking He thought he discerned in him much good sense, though a little too much tainted with town foppery, but what recommended him most to Jones were some sentiments of great generosity and humanity which occasionally dropt from him, and particularly many expressions of the highest disinterestedness in the affair of love On which subject the lips of a modern fine gentleman but he was only one by imitation, and meant by nature for a much better character

Chapter 6

What arrived while the company were at breakfast, with some hints concerning the government of daughters

Our company brought together in the morning the same good inclinations towards each other, with which they had separated the evening before, but poor Jones was extremely disconsolate, for he had just received information from Partridge, that Mrs Fitzpatrick had left her lodging, and that he could not learn whither she was gone This news highly afflicted him, and his countenance as well as his behaviour, in defiance of all his endeavours to the contrary, betrayed manifest indications of a disordered mind

The discourse turned at present, as before, on love and Mr Nightingale again expressed many of those warm genero ight Mrs Miller (for so the mistress of the house was called) greatly approved these sentiments but when the young gentleman ap-to Jones, that we should have been sorry had he passed it by unregarded He made her indeed a very polite answer and concluded with an oblique hint, that her own silence subjected her to a suspicion of the same kind for indeed she had scarce opened her lips either now or the last evening

'I am glad Nanny," says Mrs Miller, "the gentleman hath made the observation, I protest I am almost of his opinion What can be the matter with you, child? I never saw such an alteration What is become of all your gaiety? Would you think, sir, I used to call her my little pratler? She hath not spoke twenty words this week"

Here their conversation was interrupted by the entrance of a maid servant, who brought a bundle in her hand, which, she said, "was delivered by a porter for Mr Jones" She added, "That the man immediately went away, saying it required no answer"

Jones expressed some surprize on this occasion and declared it must be some mistake, but the maid persisting that she was certain of the name, all the women were desirous of having the bundle immediately opened which operation was at length performed by little Betsy, with the consent of Mr Jones and the contents were found to be a domino, a mask, and a masquerade ticket

Jones was now more positive than ever in asserting that these things must have been delivered by mistake, and Mrs Miller herself expressed some doubt, and said, "She knew not what to think" But when Mr Nightingale was asked he delivered a very different opinion "All I can conclude from it, sir," said he, "is that you are a very happy man, for I make no doubt but these were sent you by some lady whom you will have the happiness of meeting at the masquerade"

Jones had not a sufficient degree of vanity

Nancy having lifted up the domino, a ca- dropt from the sleeve, in which was written as follows —

To Mr Jones

The queen of the fairies sends you this,
Use her favours not amiss

Mrs Miller and Miss Nancy now both agreed with Mr Nightingale, nay, Jones himself was almost persuaded to be of the same opinion And as no other lady but Mrs Fitz foundation, but as the conduct of Mrs Fitz patrick, in not seeing him according to her promise and in quitting her lodgings had been very odd and unaccountable he conceived some faint hopes that she (of whom he had formerly heard a very whimsical character) might possibly intend to do him that service in a strange manner which she declined doing by more ordinary methods To say the truth as nothing certain could be concluded from so odd and uncommon an incident he had the greater latitude to draw what imaginary conclusions from it he pleased As his temper therefore was naturally sanguine he indulged it on this occasion and his imagination worked up a thousand conceits, to favour and support his expectations of meeting his dear Sophia in the evening

Reader if thou hast any good wishes towards me I will fully repay them by wishing thee to be no

out of the reach of Fortune and makes us should be so taken up by them as to be stopt from further pursuits. I make no manner of doubt but that in this light we may see the imaginary future chancellor just called to the bar the archbishop in crape and the prime minister at the tail of an opposition more truly happy than those who are invested with all the power and profit of those respective offices.

Mr Jones having now determined to go to the masquerade that evening Mr Nightingale offered to conduct him thither The young gentleman at the same time offered tickets to Miss Nancy and her mother but the good woman would not accept them She said she did not conceive the harm which some people imagined in a masquerade but that such extravagant diversions were proper only for persons of quality and fortune and not for young women who were to get their living and could at best man

you not a

O fie! Mr Nightingale answered Mrs Mil

of your generous way of thinking I hope she would make a better return to his generosity than to give her mind up to extravagant pleasures Indeed where young ladies bring great fortunes themselves they have some right to insist on spending what is their own and on that account I have heard the gentlemen say a man has sometimes a better bargain with a poor wife than with a rich one —But let my daughters marry whom they will I shall endeavour to make them blessings to their husbands —I beg therefore I may hear of no more masquerades Nancy is I am certain too good a girl to desire to go for she must remember when you carried her thither last year it almost turned her head and she did not return to herself or to her needle in a month afterwards

Though a gentle sigh which stole from the bosom of Nancy seemed to argue some secret disapprobation of these sentiments she did not dare openly to oppose them For as this good woman had all the tenderness so she had preserved all the authority of a parent and as her indulgence to the desires of her children was restrained only by her fears for their safety and future welfare so she never suffered those commands which proceeded from such fears to be either disobeyed or disputed And this the young gentleman who had lodged two years in the house knew *so well that he pres*ently acquiesced in the refusal

Mr Nightingale who grew every minute fonder of Jones was very desirous of his company that day to dinner at the tavern where he offered to introduce him to some of his acquaintance but Jones begged to be excused as his cloaths he said were not yet come to town

To confess the truth Mr Jones was now in a situation which sometimes happens to be the case of young gentlemen of much better figure than himself In short he had not one penny in his pocket a situation in much greater credit among the antient philosophers than among the modern wise men who *live in Lom*bard street or those who frequent White's chocolate house And perhaps, the great honours which those philosophers have ascribed to an empty pocket may be one of the reasons of that high contempt in which they are held in the aforesaid street and chocolate house

Now if the antient opinion that men might live very comfortably on virtue only be as the modern wise men just above mentioned pretend to have discovered a notorious error no less fal e is I apprehend that position of some writers of romance that a man can live altogether on love for however delicious repasts this may afford to some of our senses or appetites it is most certain it can afford none to others Those therefore who have placed too great a confidence in such writers have experienced their error when it was too late and have found that love was no more capable of allaying hunger than a rose is capable of delighting the ear or a violin of gratifying the smell

Notwithstanding therefore all the delicacies which love had set before him namely the hopes of seeing Sophia at the masquerade on which however ill founded his imagination might be he had voluptuously feasted during the whole day the evening no sooner came than Mr Jones began to languish for some food of a grosser kind Partridge discovered this by intuition and took the occasion to give some oblique hints concerning the bank bill and when these were rejected with disdain he collected courage enough once more to mention a return to Mr Allworthy

Partridge cries Jones you cannot see my fortune in a more desperate light than I see it myself and I begin heartily to repent that I suffered you to leave a place where you was settled and to follow me However I insist now on your returning home and for the expense and trouble which you have so kindly put yourself to on my account all the cloaths I left behind in your care I desire you would take as your own I am sorry I can make you no other acknowledgment

He spoke these words with so pathetic an accent that Partridge among whose vices ill nature or hardness of heart were not numbered burst into tears and after swearing he would not quit him in his distress he began with the most earnest entreaties to urge his return home For heaven s sake sir says he do but consider what can your honour do?—how is it possible you can live in this town without money? Do what you will sir or go wherever you please I am resolved not to desert you But pray sir consider—do pray sir for your own sake take it into your consideration and I m sure says he that your own good sense will bid you return home

How often shall I tell thee answered Jones that I have no home to return to? Had I any hopes that Mr Allworthy s doors would be open to receive me I want no distress to urge me—nay there is no other cause upon earth which could detain me a moment from flying to his presence but alas! that I am for ever banished from His last words were—O Partridge they still ring in my ears—his last words were when he gave me a sum of money —what it was I know not but considerable I m sure it was—his last words were— I am resolved from this day forward on no account to converse with you any more

Here passion stopt the mouth of Jones as surprize for a moment did that of Partridge but he soon recovered the use of speech and after a short preface in which he declared he had no inquisitiveness in his temper inquired what Jones meant by a considerable sum—he knew not how much—and what was become of the money

In both these points he now received full satisfaction on which he was proceeding to comment when he was interrupted by a message from Mr Nightingale who desired his master s company in his apartment

When the two gentlemen were both attired for the masquerade and Mr Nightingale had given orders for chairs to be sent for a circumstance of distress occurred to Jones which will appear very ridiculous to many of my readers This was how to procure a shilling but if such readers will reflect a little on what they have themselves felt from the want of a thousand pounds or perhaps of ten or twenty to execute a favourite scheme they will have a perfect idea of what Mr Jones felt on this occasion For this sum therefore he applied to Partridge which was the first he had permitted him to advance and was the last he intended that poor fellow should advance in his service To say the truth Partridge had lately made no offer of this kind Whether it was that he desired to see the bank bill broke in upon or that distress should prevail on Jones to return home or from what other motive it proceeded I will not determine

Chapter 7

Containing the whole humours of a masquerade

Our cavaliers now arrived at that temple where Heydegger the great Arbiter Deliciarum the great high priest of pleasure presides and like other heathen priests imposes on his votaries by the pretended presence of the deity when in reality no such deity is there

Mr Nightingale having taken a turn or two with his companion soon left him and walked off with a female saying Now you are here sir you must beat about for your own game

Jones began to entertain strong hopes that his Sophia was present and these hopes gave him more spirits than the lights the music and the company though these are pretty strong antidotes against the spleen He now accosted every woman he saw whose stature shape or air bore any resemblance to his angel To all of whom he endeavoured to say something smart in order to engage an answer by which he might discover that voice which he thought it impossible he should mistake Some of these answered by a question in a squeaking voice Do you know me? Much the greater number said I don t know you sir and nothing more Some called him an impertinent fellow some made him no answer at all some said Indeed I don t know your voice and I shall have nothing to say to you and many gave him as kind answers as he could wish but not in the voice he desired to hear

Whilst he was talking with one of these last (who was in the habit of a shepherdess) a lady in a domino came up to him and slapping him on the shoulder whispered him at the same time in the ear " If you talk any longer with that trollop I will acquaint Miss Western

Jones no sooner heard that name than immediately quitting his former companion he applied to the domino begging and entreating her to show him the lady she had mentioned if she was then in the room

The mask walked hastily to the upper end of the innermost apartment before she spoke and then instead of answering him sat down and declared she was tired Jones sat down by her and still persisted in his entreaties at last the lady coldly answered I imagined Mr Jones had been a more discerning lover than to suffer any disguise to conceal his mistress from him " Is she here then madam? replied Jones with some vehemence Upon which the lady cries— Hush sir you will be observed I promise you upon my honour Miss Western is not here

Jones now taking the mask by the hand fell to entreating her in the most earnest manner, to acquaint him where he might find Sophia and when he could obtain no direct answer he began to upbraid her gently for having disappointed him the day before and concluded saying Indeed my good fairy queen I know your majesty very well notwithstanding the affected disguise of your voice Indeed Mrs Fitzpatrick, it is a little cruel to divert yourself at the expense of my torments.

The mask answered Though you have so ingeniously discovered me I must still speak in the same voice lest I should be known by others And do you think good sir that I have no greater regard for my cousin than to assist in carrying on an affair between you two which must end in her ruin as well as your own? Besides I promise you my cousin is not mad enough to consent to her own destruction if you are so much her enemy as to tempt her to it

Alas madam! said Jones you little know my heart when you call me an enemy of Sophia

And yet to ruin any one cries the other you will allow is the act of an enemy and when by the same act you must knowingly and certainly bring ruin on yourself is it not folly or madness as well as guilt? Now sir my cousin hath very little more than her father will please to give her very little for one of her fashion—you know him and you know your own situation

Jones vowed he had no such design on Sophia That he would rather suffer the most violent of deaths than sacrifice her interest to his desires He said he knew how unworthy he was of her every way that he had long ago resolved to quit all such aspiring thoughts but that some strange accidents had made him desirous to see her once more when he promised he would take leave of her for ever No madam concluded he my love is not of that base kind which seeks its own satisfaction at the expense of what is most dear to its object I would sacrifice everything to the possession of my Sophia but Sophia herself

Though the reader may have already conceived no very sublime idea of the virtue of the lady in the mask and though possibly she may hereafter appear not to deserve one of the first characters of her sex yet it is certain these generous sentiments made a strong impress on upon her and greatly added to the affection she had before conceived for our young heroe

The lady now after a silence of a few moments, said She did not see his pretensions to Sophia so much in the light of presumption as of imprudence Young Fellows," says she,

which the lady answered "You cannot con

you may succeed with those who are infinitely superior in fortune nay I am convinced there are women——but don t you think me a strange creature Mr Jones to be thus giving advice to a man with whom I am so little acquainted and one with whose behaviour to me I have so little reason to be pleased?

Here Jones began to apologize and to hope he had not offended in anything he had said of her cousin —To which the mask answered And are you so little versed in the sex to imagine you can well affront a lady more than by entertaining her with your passion for another woman? If the fairy queen had conceived no better opinion of your gallantry she would scarce have appointed you to meet her at the masquerade

Jones had never less inclination to an amour than at present but gallantry to the ladies was among his principles of honour and he held it as much incumbent on him to accept a challenge to love as if it had been a challenge to fight Nay his very love to Sophia made it necessary for him to keep well with the lady as he made no doubt but she was capable of bringing him into the presence of the other

He began therefore to make a very warm answer to her last speech when a mask in the character of an old woman joined them This mask was one of those ladies who go to a masquerade only to vent ill nature by telling people rude truths and by endeavouring as the phrase is to spoil as much sport as they are able This good lady therefore having observed Jones and his friend whom she well knew in close consultation together in a corner of the room concluded she could now here satisfy her spleen better than by interrupting them She attacked them therefore and soon d o e l em from he

an in another pursuit

While Jones and his mask were walking together about the room to rid themselves of the teazer he observed his lady speak to several masks with the same freedom of acquaintance as if they had been barefaced He could not help expressing his surprize at this saying Sure madam you must have infinite discernment to know people in all disguises To nor will any woman of condition converse with a person with whom she is not acquainted In short the generality of persons whom you see here may more properly be said to kill time in this place than in any other and generally retire from hence more tired than from the longest sermon To say the truth I begin to be in that situation myself and if I have any faculty at guessing you are not much better pleased I protest it would be almost charity in me to go home for your sake I know but one charity equal to it cries Jones and that is to suffer me to wait on you home"

Sure answered the lady you have a strange opinion of me to imagine that upon such an acquaintance I would let you into my doors at this time of night I fancy you impute the friendship I have shown my cousin to some other motive Confess honestly don t you consider this contrived interview as little better than a downright assignation? Are you used Mr Jones to make these sudden conquests?

I am not used madam said Jones to submit to such sudden conquests but as you have taken my heart by surprize the rest of my body hath a right to follow so you must pardon me if I resolve to attend you wherever you go" He accompanied these words with some proper actions upon which the lady after a gentle rebuke and saying their familiarity would be observed told him She was going to sup with an acquaintance whither she hoped he would not follow her for if you should said she I shall be thought an unaccountable creature though my friend indeed is not censorious yet I hope you won t follow me I protest I shall not know what to say if you do

The lady presently after quitted the masquerade and Jones notwithstanding the severe prohibition he had received presumed to attend her He was now reduced to the same dilemma we have mentioned before namely the want of a shilling and could not relieve it by borrowing as before He therefore walked boldly on after the chair in which his lady rode pursued by a grand huzza from all the chairmen present who wisely take the best care they can to discountenance all walking afoot by their betters Luckily however the gentry who attend at the Opera house were too busy to quit their stations and as the lateness of the hour prevented him from meeting many of their brethren in the street, he proceeded without molestation, in a dress which, at another season, would have certainly raised a mob at his heels

The lady was set down in a street not far from Hanover square, where the door being presently opened, she was carried in, and the gentleman, without any ceremony, walked in after her

Jones and his companion were now together in a very well furnished and well warmed room, when the female, still speaking in her masquerade voice, said she was surprized at her friend, think of their having been alone together in a house at that time of night? But instead of a direct answer to so important a question, Jones began to be very importunate with the lady to unmask, and at length having prevailed, there appeared, not Mrs Fitzpatrick, but the Lady Bellaston herself

It would be tedious to give the particular conversation, which consisted of very common and ordinary occurrences, and which lasted from two till six o'clock in the morning It is sufficient to mention all of it that is anywise material to this history And this was a promise that the lady would endeavour to find out Sophia and in a few days bring him to an interview with her, on condition that he would then take his leave of her When this was thoroughly settled and a second meeting in the evening appointed at the same place they separated, the lady returned to her house, and Jones to his lodgings.

Chapter 8

Containing a scene of distress, which will appear very extraordinary to most of our readers

Jones having refreshed himself with a few hours' sleep, summoned Partridge to his presence, and delivering him a bank note of fifty pounds, ordered him to go and change it Partridge received this with sparkling eyes, though, when he came to reflect farther, it raised in him some suspicions not very advantageous to the honour of his master to all night, contributed In plain language, the only way he could possibly find to account for the possession of this note was by robbery and to confess the truth, the reader, unless he should suspect it was owing to the generosity of Lady Bellaston, can hardly imagine any other.

who though she did not give much into the hackney charities of the age, such as building hospitals, &c, was not, however, entirely void appointed hour, therefore, the two young gentlemen with the two girls, attended in the parlour, where they waited from three till almost five before the good woman appeared She had been out of town to visit a relation of whom, at her return, she gave the following account

"I hope, gentlemen you will pardon my making you wait, I am sure if you knew the poor cousin? she hath scarce lain in a week, and there was she, this dreadful weather, in a cold room, without any curtains to her bed, and not a bushel of coals in her house to supply for he is really very ill The rest of the children are in pretty good health but Molly, I am afraid, will do herself an injury she is but

and yet I saw her—I saw the poor child Mr Nightingale, turn about, and privately wipe the tears from her eyes.' Here Mrs. Miller was prevented, by her own tears from going on, and there was not I believe a person present who did not accompany her in them at length she a little recovered herself and proceeded thus In all this distress the mother supports her spirits in a surprizing manner The danger of her son sits heaviest upon her and yet she endeavours as much as possible to conceal even this concern on her husband s account Her grief however sometimes gets the better of all her endeavours for she was always extravagantly fond of this boy and a most sensible sweet tempered creature it is I protest I was never more affected in my life than when I heard the little wretch who is hardly yet seven years old while his mother was wetting him with her tears beg her to be comforted Indeed mamma cried the child I shan t die God Almighty I m sure won t take Tommy away let heaven be ever so fine a place I had rather stay here and starve with you and my papa than go to it Pardon me gentlemen I can t help it (says she wiping her eyes) such sensibility and affection in a child —And yet perhaps he is least the object of pity for a day or two will most probably place him beyond the reach of all human evils The father is indeed most worthy of compassion Poor man his countenance is the very picture of horror and he looks like one rather dead than alive Oh heavens! what a scene did I behold at my first coming into the room! The good creature was lying behind the bolster supporting at once both his child and his wife He had nothing on but a thin waistcoat for his coat was spread over the bed to supply the want of blankets —When he rose up at my entrance I scarce knew him As comely a man Mr Jones within this fortnight as you ever beheld Mr Nightingale hath seen him His eyes sunk his face pale with a long beard His body shivering with cold and worn with hunger too for my cousin says she can hardly prevail upon him to eat —He told me himself in a whisper—he told me—I can t repeat it—he said he could not bear to eat the bread his children wanted And yet can you believe it gentle better —The means of procuring her this he said he believed was sent by an angel from heaven I know not what he meant for I had not spirits enough to ask a single question

This was a love match as they call it on both sides that is a match between two beggars I must indeed say I never saw a fonder couple but what is their fondness good for but to torment each other " Indeed mamma" cries Nancy I have always looked on my cousin Anderson" (for that was her name) "as one of the happiest of women "I am sure" says Mrs Miller "the case at present is much otherwise for any one might have discerned that the tender consideration of each others sufferings makes the most intolerable part of not two years old excepted feel in the same manner for they are a most loving family and if they had but a bare competency would be the happiest people in the world I never saw the least sign of misery at her house " replied Nancy I am sure my heart bleeds for what you now tell me — O child answered the mother she hath always endeavoured to make the best of everything They have always been in great distress but indeed this absolute ruin hath been brought upon them by others The poor man was bail for the villain his brother and about a week ago the very day before her lying in their goods were all carried away and sold by an execution He sent a letter to me of it by one of the bailiffs, which the villain never delivered —What must he think of my suffering a week to pass before he heard of me?

It was not with dry eyes that Jones heard this narrative when it was ended he took Mrs Miller apart with him into another room and is not easy to be described [illegible] but a kind of agony of transport and cryed out— Good heavens! is there such a man in the world? —But recollecting herself she said Indeed I know one such but can there be another? I hope madam cries Jones there are many who have common humanity for to relieve such distress in our fellow-creatures can hardly be called more Mrs Miller then took ten guineas which were the utmost he could prevail with her to accept and said She would find some means of conveying them early the next morning adding that she had herself done some little matter for the poor people and had not left them in quite so much misery as she found them

They then returned to the parlour where Nightingale expressed much concern at the dreadful situation of these wretches whom in deed he knew for he had seen them more than once at Mrs Miller s He inveighed against the folly of making oneself liable for the debts of others vented many bitter execra tions against the brother and concluded with wishing something could be done for the un fortunate family Suppose madam said he "you should recommend them to Mr All worthy? Or what think you of a collection? I will give them a guinea with all my heart

Mrs Miller made no answer and Nancy to whom her mother had whispered the generos ity of Jones turned pale upon the occasion though if either of them was angry with Nightingale it was surely without reason For the liberality of Jones if he had known it was not an example which he had any obligation to follow and there are thousands who would not have contributed a single halfpenny as indeed he did not in effect for he made no tender of anything and therefore as the others thought proper to make no demand he kept his money in his pocket

I have in truth observed and shall never have a better opportunity than at present to communicate my observation that the world are in general divided into two opinions con cerning charity which are the very reverse of each other One party seems to hold that all acts of this kind are to be esteemed as volun tary gifts and however little you give (if in deed no more than your good wishes) you ac quire a great degree of merit in so doing Others on the contrary appear to be as firmly persuaded that beneficence is a positive duty and that whenever the rich fall greatly short of their ability in relieving the distresses of the poor their pitiful largesses are so far from being meritorious that they have only per formed their duty by halves and are in some sense more contemptible than those who have entirely neglected it

To reconcile these different opinions is not in my power I shall only add that the givers are generally of the former sentiment and the receivers are almost universally inclined to the latter

Chapter 9

Which treats of matters of a very different kind from those in the preceding chapter

In the evening Jones met his lady again and a long conversation again ensued between them but as it consisted only of the same ordinary occurrences as before we shall avoid mentioning particulars which we despair of rendering agreeable to the reader unless he is one whose devotion to the fair sex like that of the papists to their saints, wants to be raised by the help of pictures But I am so far from desiring to exhibit such pictures to the public that I would wish to draw a curtain over those that have been lately set forth in certain French novels very bungling copies of which have been presented us here under the name of translations

Jones grew still more and more impatient to see Sophia and finding after repeated in terviews with Lady Bellaston no likelihood of obtaining this by her means (for on the con trary the lady began to treat even the mention of the name of Sophia with resentment) he re solved to try some other method He made no doubt but that Lady Bellaston knew where his angel was so he thought it most likely that some of her servants should be acquainted with the same secret Partridge therefore was employed to get acquainted with those serv ants in order to fish this secret out of them

Few situations can be imagined more uneasy than that to which his poor master was at present reduced for besides the difficulties he met with in discovering Sophia besides the fears he had of having disobliged her and the assurances he had received from Lady Bellas ton of the resolution which Sophia had taken against him and of her having purposely con cealed herself from him which he had sufficient reason to believe might be true he had still a difficulty to combat which it was not in the power of his mistress to remove however kind her inclination might have been This was the exposing of her to be disinherited of all her father s estate the almost inevitable con sequence of their coming together without a consent which he had no hopes of ever ob taining

Add to all these the many obligations which Lady Bellaston whose violent fondness we can no longer conceal had heaped upon him so that by her means he was now become one of the best-dressed men about town and was not only relieved from those ridiculous distresses we have before mentioned, but was actually raised to a state of affluence beyond what he had ever known

Now though there are many gentlemen who very well reconcile it to their consciences possess themselves of the whole fortune

woman without making her any kind of return yet to a mind the proprietor of which doth not deserve to be hanged nothing is I believe more irksome than to support love with gratitude only especially where inclination pulls the heart a contrary way Such was the unhappy case of Jones for though the virtuous love he bore to Sophia and which left very little affection for any other woman had been entirely out of the question he could never have been able to have made any adequate return to the generous passion of this lady who had indeed been once an object of desire but was now entered at least into the autumn of life though she wore all the gaiety of youth both in her dress and manner nay she contrived still to maintain the roses in her cheeks but these like flowers forced out of season by art had none of that lively blooming freshness with which Nature at the proper time bedecks her own productions She had besides a certain imperfection which renders some flowers though very beautiful to the eye very improper to be placed in a wilderness of sweets and what above all others is most disagreeable to the breath of love

Though Jones saw all these discouragements on the one side he felt his obligations full as strongly on the other nor did he less plainly discern the ardent passion whence those obligations proceeded the extreme violence of the hat

so

He knew the tacit consideration upon which all her favours were conferred and as his necessity obliged him to accept them so his honour he concluded forced him to pay the price This therefore he resolved to do whatever misery it cost him and to devote himself to her from that great principle of justice by which the laws of some countries oblige a debtor who is no otherwise capable of discharging his debt to become the slave of his creditor

While he was meditating on these matters he received the following note from the lady —

A very fool sh but a very perverse accident some other place by to morrow In the mean time adieu

This disappointment perhaps the reader may conclude was not very great but if it was he was quickly relieved for in less than an hour afterwards another note was brought him from the same hand which contained as follows —

I have altered my mind since I wrote a change which if you are no stranger to the tenderest of all passions you will not wonder at I am now resolved to see you this evening at my own house, whatever may be the consequence Come to me exactly at seven I dine abroad, but will be at home by that time A day I find to those that sincerely love, seems longer than I imagined

If you should accidentally be a few moments before me bid them show you into the drawing room

To confess the truth Jones was less pleased with this last epistle than he had been with the former as he was prevented by it from complying with the earnest entreaties of Mr Nightingale with whom he had now contracted much intimacy and friendship These entreaties were to go with that young gentleman and his company to a new play which was to be acted that evening and which a very large party had agreed to damn from some dislike they had taken to the author who was a friend to one of Mr Nightingale s acquaintance And this sort of fun our heroe we are ashamed to confess would willingly have preferred to the above kind appointment but his honour got the better of his inclination

Before we attend him to this intended interview with the lady we think proper to account for both the preceding notes as the reader may possibly be not a little surprized at the imprudence of Lady Bellaston in bringing her lover to the very house where her rival was lodged

First then the mistress of the house where these lovers had hitherto met and who had been for some years a pensioner to that lady was now become a methodist and had that very morning waited upon her ladyship and after rebuking her very severely for her past life had positively declared that she would on no account be instrumental in carrying on any of her affairs for the future

The hurry of spirits into which this accident threw the lady made her despair of possibly finding any other convenience to meet Jones that evening but as she began a little to recover from her uneasiness at the disappointment she set her thoughts to work when luckily it came into her head to propose to Sophia to go to the play which was immed

ately consented to and a proper lady provided for her companion Mrs Honour was likewise despatched with Mrs Etoff on the same errand of pleasure and thus her own house was left free for the safe reception of Mr Jones with whom she promised herself two or three hours of uninterrupted conversation, after her return from the place where she dined which was at a friend s house in a pretty distant part of the town near her old place of assignation where she had engaged herself before she was well apprized of the revolution that had happened in the mind and morals of her late confidante

Chapter 10

A chapter which though short, may draw tears from some eyes

Mr Jones was just dressed to wait on Lady Bellaston when Mrs Miller rapped at his door and being admitted very earnestly desired his company below stairs to drink tea in the parlour

Upon his entrance into the room she presently introduced a person to him saying This sir is my cousin who hath been so greatly beholden to your goodness for which he begs to return you his sincerest thanks

The man had scarce entered upon that speech which Mrs. Miller had so kindly prefaced when both Jones and he looking stedfastly at each other showed at once the utmost tokens of surprize The voice of the latter began instantly to faulter and instead of finishing his speech he sunk down into a chair crying It is so I am convinced it is so!

"Bless me! what s the meaning of this? cries Mrs Miller you are not ill I hope cousin? Some water a dram this instant Be not frighted madam cries Jones I have almost as much need of a dram as your cousin We are equally surprized at this unexpected meeting Your cousin is an acquaintance of mine Mrs Miller "

An acquaintance!" cries the man —— Oh heaven!"

Ay an acquaintance repeated Jones, and an honoured acquaintance too When I do not love and honour the man who dares venture everything to preserve his wife and children from instant destruction may I have a friend capable of disowning me in adversity!

Oh you are an excellent young man cries Mrs Miller — Yes indeed poor creature! he hath ventured everything —If he had not had one of the best of constitutions, it must have killed him

Cousin cries the man who had now pretty well recovered himself this is the angel from heaven whom I meant This is he to whom before I saw you I owed the preservation of my Peggy He it was to whose generosity every comfort every support which I have procured for her was owing He is indeed the worthiest bravest noblest of all human beings O cousin I have obligations to this gentleman of such a nature!

Mention nothing of obligations cries Jones eagerly not a word I insist upon it not a word (meaning I suppose that he would not have him betray the affair of the robbery to any person) If by the trifle you have received from me I have preserved a whole family sure pleasure was never bought so cheap

Oh sir! cries the man I wish you could this instant see my house If any person had ever a right to the pleasure you mention I am convinced it is yourself My cousin tells me she acquainted you with the distress in which she found us That sir is all greatly removed and chiefly by your goodness ——My children have now a bed to lie on——and they have——they have——eternal blessings reward you for it!—— they have bread to eat My little boy is recovered my wife is out of danger and I am happy All all owing to you sir and to my cousin here one of the best of women Indeed sir I must see you at my house —Indeed my wife must see you and thank you —My children too must express their gratitude ——Indeed sir they are not without a sense of their obligation but what is my feeling when I reflect to whom I owe that they are now capable of expressing their gratitude ——Oh sir the little hearts which you have warmed had now been cold as ice without your assistance

Here Jones attempted to prevent the poor man from proceeding but indeed the overflowing of his own heart would of itself have stopped his words And now Mrs Miller likewise began to pour forth thanksgivings as well in her own name as in that of her cousin and concluded with saying She doubted not but such goodness would meet a glorious reward

Jones answered He had been sufficiently rewarded already Your cousin s account madam said he hath given me a sensation more pleasing than I have ever known He must be a wretch who is unmoved at hearing such a story how transporting then must the thought of having happily acted a part in this scene! If there are men who cannot feel the delight of giving happiness to others I sincerely pity them as they are incapable of luptuous man can ever obtain'

The hour of appointment being now come Jones was forced to take a hasty leave but not before he had heartily shaken his friend by the hand and desired to see him again as soon as possible promising that he would himself take the first opportunity of visiting him at his own house He then stept into his chair, and proceeded to Lady Bellaston's greatly

he listened rather to the voice of strict justice than to that of mercy when he was attacked on the high road

Mrs Miller sung forth the praise of Jones during the whole evening, in which Mr Anderson while he stayed so passionately accompanied her that he was often on the very point of mentioning the circumstance of the robbery However he luckily recollected himself and avoided an indiscretion which would have been so much the greater as he knew Mrs Miller to be extremely strict and nice in her principles He was likewise well apprized of the loquacity of this lady and yet such was

own character rather than omit any circumstances which might do the fullest honour to his benefactor

Chapter 11

In which the reader will be surprized

MR JONES was rather earlier than the time appointed and earlier than the lady whose arrival was hindered not only by the distance of the place where she dined but by some other cross accidents very vexatious to one in her situation of mind He was accordingly shown into the drawing room where he had not been many minutes before the door opened and in came——no other than Sophia herself who had left the play before the end of the first act for this as we have already said being a new play at which two large parties met the one to damn and the other to applaud a violent uproar and an engagement between the two parties had so terrified our heroine that she was glad to put herself under the protection of a young gentleman who safely conveyed her to her chair

As Lady Bellaston had acquainted her that she should not be at home till late Sophia expecting to find no one in the room came hastily in and went directly to a glass which almost fronted her without once looking towards the upper end of the room where the statue of Jones now stood motionless—In this glass it was after contemplating her own lovely face that she first discovered the said statue when instantly turning about she perceived the reality of the vision upon which she gave a violent scream and scarce preserved herself from fainting till Jones was able to move to her and support her in his arms

To paint the looks or thoughts of either of these lovers is beyond my power As their sensations from their mutual silence may be judged to have been too big for their own utterance it cannot be supposed that I should be able to express them and the misfortune is that few of my readers have been enough in love to feel by their own hearts what past at this time in theirs

After a short pause Jones with faultering accents said— I see madam you are surprized — Surprized! answered she Oh heavens! Indeed I am surprized I almost doubt whether you are the person you seem "— Indeed cries he my Sophia pardon me madam for this once calling you so I am that very wretched Jones whom fortune after so many disappointments hath at last kindly conducted to you Oh! my Sophia did you know the thousand torments I have suffered in this long, fruitless pursuit — Pursuit of whom? said Sophia a little recollecting herself and assuming a reserve air— Can you be so cruel to ask that question? cries Jones Need I say of you? Of me! answered Sophia Hath Mr Jones then any such important business with me? — To some madam cries Jones this might seem an important business (giving her the pocket book) I hope madam you will find it of the same value as when it was lost Sophia took the pocket book and was going to speak when he interrupted her thus — Let us not I beseech you lose one of these precious moments which fortune hath so kindly sent us O my Sophia! I have business of a much superior kind Thus on my knees let me ask your pardon — My pardon! cries she "Sure sir after what is past you cannot expect after what I have heard — I scarce know what I say answered Jones By heavens! I scarce wish you should pardon me O my Sophia! henceforth never cast away a thought on such a wretch as I am If any remembrance of me should ever intrude to give a moment s uneasiness to that tender bosom think of my unworthiness and let the remembrance of what passed at Upton blot me for ever from your mind

Sophia stood trembling all this while Her face was whiter than snow and her heart was throbbing through her stays But at the mention of Upton a blush arose in her cheeks and her eyes which before she had scarce lifted up were turned upon Jones with a glance of disdain He understood this silent reproach and replied to it thus O my Sophia! my only love! you cannot hate or despise me more for what happened there than I do myself but yet do me the justice to think that my heart was never unfaithful to you That had no share in the folly I was guilty of it was even then unalterably yours Though I despaired of possessing you nay almost of ever seeing you more I doated still on your charming idea and could seriously love no other woman But if my heart had not been engaged she into company I accidently fell at that cursed place was not an object of serious love Believe me my angel I never have seen her from that day to this and never intend or desire to see her again Sophia in her heart was very glad to hear this but forcing into her face an air of more coldness than she had yet assumed Why said she Mr Jones do you take the trouble to make a defence where you are not accused? If I thought it worth while to accuse you I have a charge of an unpardonable nature indeed — What is it for heaven s sake? answered Jones trembling and pale expecting to hear of his amour with Lady Bellaston Oh said she how is it possible! can everything noble and everything base be lodged together in the same bosom? Lady Bellaston and the ignominious circumstance of having been kept rose again in his mind and stopt his mouth from any reply Could I have expected proceeded Sophia "such treatment from you? Nay from any gentleman from any man of honour? To have my name traduced in public in inns among the meanest vulgar! to have any little favours that my unguarded heart may have too lightly betrayed me to grant boasted of there! nay even to hear that you had been forced to fly from my love!

Nothing could equal Jones s surprize at these words of Sophia but yet not being guilty he was much less embarrassed how to defend himself than if she had touched that tender string at which his conscience had been alarmed By some examination he presently found that her fore landlords and servants for Sophia confessed to him it was from them that she received her intelligence He had no very great difficulty to make her believe that he was en

Partridge to death which he more than once swore he would do This point being cleared up they soon found themselves so well pleased with each other that Jones quite forgot he had begun the conversation with conjuring her to give up all thoughts of him and she was in a temper to have given ear to a petition of a very different nature for before they were aware they had both gone so far that he let fall some words that sounded like a proposal of marriage To which she replied "That did not her duty to her father forbid her to follow her own inclinations ruin with him would be more welcome to her than the most affluent fortune with another man At the mention of the word ruin he started let drop her hand which he had held for some time and striking his breast with his own cried out Oh Sophia! can I then ruin thee? No by heavens no! I never will act so base a part Dearest Sophia whatever it costs me I will renounce you I will give you up I will tear all such hopes from my heart as are inconsistent with your real good My love I will ever retain but it shall be in silence it shall be at a distance from you it shall be in some foreign land from whence no voice no sigh of my despair shall ever reach and disturb your ears And when I am dead —He would have gone on but was stopt by a flood of tears which Sophia let fall in his bosom upon which she leaned without being able to speak one word He kissed them off which for some moments she allowed him to do without any resistance but then recollecting herself gently withdrew out of his arms and to turn the discourse from a subjec tender and which she found she cou port bethought herself to ask

she never had time to put to him before ' How he came into that room? He began to stammer and would in all probability have raised her suspicions by the answer he was going to give when at once the door opened and in came Lady Bellaston

Having advanced a few steps and seeing Jones and Sophia together she suddenly stopt when after a pause of a few moments recollecting herself with admirable presence of mind she said—though with sufficient indications of surprize both in voice and countenance— I thought Miss Western you had been at the play?

Though Sophia had no opportunity of learning of Jones by what means he had discovered her yet as she had not the least suspicion of the real truth or that Jones and Lady Bellaston were acquainted so she was very little confounded and the less as the lady had in all their conversations on the subject entirely taken her side against her father With very little hesitation therefore she went through the whole story of what had happened at the play house and the cause of her hasty return

The length of this narrative gave Lady Bellaston an opportunity of rallying her spirits and of considering in what manner to act And if I had known you had company

Lady Bellaston fixed her eyes on Sophia whilst she spoke these words To which that poor young lady having her face overspread with blushes and confusion answered in a stammering voice I am sure madam I shall always think the honour of your ladyship s company—— I hope at least cries Lady Bellaston I interrupt no business — No madam answered Sophia our business was at an end Your ladyship may be pleased to remember I have often mentioned the loss of my pocket book which this gentleman having very luckily found was so kind to return it to me with the bill in it

Jones ever since the arrival of Lady Bellaston had been ready to sink with fear He sat kicking his heels playing with his fingers and looking more like a fool if it be possible than saw did not intend to claim any acquaintance with him he resolved as entirely to affect the stranger on his part He said Ever since he had the pocket book in his possession he had used great diligence in inquiring out the lady whose name was writ in it but never till that day could be so fortunate to discover her

Sophia had indeed mentioned the loss of her pocket book to Lady Bellaston but as Jones for some reason or other had never once hinted to her that it was in his possession she believed not one syllable of what Sophia now said and wonderfully admired the extreme quickness of the young lady in inventing such an excuse The reason of Sophia s leaving the playhouse met with no better credit and though she could not account for the meeting between these two lovers she was firmly persuaded it was not accidental

With an affected smile therefore she said, Indeed Miss Western you have had very money Not only have it advertised —It was great good fortune sir that you found out to whom the note belonged

Oh madam cries Jones it was enclosed in a pocket book in which the young lady s name was written

That was very fortunate indeed cries the lady — And it was no less so that you heard Miss Western was at my house for she is very little known

Jones had at length perfectly recovered his spirits and as he conceived he had now an opportunity of satisfying Sophia as to the question she had asked him just before Lady Bellaston came in he proceeded thus Why madam answered he it was by the luckiest chance imaginable I made this discovery I was mentioning what I had found and the name of the owner the other night to a lady at the masquerade who told me she believed she knew where I might see Miss Western and if I would come to her house the next morning she would inform me I went according to her appointment but she was not at home nor could I ever meet with her till this morning when she directed me to your ladyship s house I came accordingly and did myself the honour to ask for your ladyship and upon my saying that I had very particular business a servant showed me into this room where I had not been long before the young lady returned from the play

Upon his mentioning the masquerade he looked very slily at Lady Bellaston without any fear of being remarked by Sophia for she was visibly too much confounded to make any observations This hint a little alarmed the lady and her

by returning but before he did this he said I believe madam it is customary to give some reward on these occasions —I must insist on a very high one for my honesty —it is madam no less than the honour of being permitted to pay another visit here

Sir replied the lady I make no doubt that you are a gentleman and my doors are never shut to people of fashion

Jones then after proper ceremonials departed highly to his own satisfaction and no less to that of Sophia who was terribly alarmed lest Lady Bellaston should discover what she knew already but too well

Upon the stairs Jones met his old acquaintance Mrs Hon proved indeed a lucky circumstance as he communicated to her the house where he lodged with which Sophia was unacquainted

Chapter 12

In which the thirteenth book is concluded

THE elegant Lord Shaftesbury somewhere objects to telling too much truth by which it may be fairly inferred that, in some cases to lie is not only excusable but commendable

And surely there are no persons who may so properly challenge a right to this commendable deviation from truth as young women in the affair of love for which they may plead precept education and above all the sanction nay I may say the necessity of custom by which they are restrained, not from submitting to the honest impulses of nature (for that would be a foolish prohibition) but from owning them

We are not therefore ashamed to say that our heroine now pursued the dictates of the above mentioned right honourable philosopher As she was perfectly satisfied then that Lady Bellaston was ignorant of the person of Jones, so she determined to keep her in that ignorance though at the expense of a little fibbing

Jones had not been long gone before Lady Bellaston cryed Upon my word a good pretty young fellow I wonder who he is for I don t remember ever to have seen his face before

Nor I neither madam cries Sophia I must say he behaved very handsomely in relation to my note

Yes and he is a very handsome fellow said the lady 'don t you think so?"

I did not take much notice of him answered Sophia but I thought he seemed rather awkward and ungenteel than otherwise'

You are extremely right cries Lady Bellaston you may see by his manner that he hath not kept good company Nay notwithstanding his returning your note and refusing the reward I almost question whether he is a gentleman —I have always observed there is a something in persons well born which others can never acquire —I think I will give orders not to be at home to him

Nay sure madam answered Sophia one can t suspect after what he hath done —besides if your ladyship observed him there was an elegance in his discourse a delicacy a prettiness of expression that that—

I confess said Lady Bellaston the fellow hath words— And indeed Sophia you must forgive me indeed you must

I forgive your ladyship! said Sophia

Yes indeed you must answered she laughing for I had a horrible suspicion when I first came into the room—I vow you must forgive it but I suspected it was Mr Jones him*self*

Did your ladyship indeed?" cries Sophia blushing and affecting a laugh

Yes I vow I did answered she I can t imagine what put it into my head for give the fellow his due he was genteely drest which I think dear Sophy is not commonly the case with your friend

This raillery cries Sophia is a little cruel Lady Bellaston after my promise to your ladyship

Not at all child" said the lady — It would have been cruel before but after you have promised me never to marry without your father s consent in which you know is implied your giving up Jones sure you can bear a little raillery on a passion which was pardonable enough in a young girl in the country and of which you tell me you have so entirely got the better What must I think, my dear Sophy if you cannot bear a little ridicule even on his dress? I shall begin to fear you are very far gone indeed and almost question whether you have dealt ingenuously with me

Indeed madam cries Sophia your ladyship mistakes me if you imagine I had any concern on his account

On his account! answered the lady You must have mistaken me I went no farther than his dress —for I would not injure your taste by any other comparison—I don t imagine my dear Sophy if your Mr Jones had been such a fellow as this—

I thought says Sophia your ladyship had allowed him to be handsome —

Whom pray? cried the lady hastily

Mr Jones answered Sophia —and immediately recollecting herself Mr Jones!—no no I ask your pardon —I mean the gentleman who was just now here

O Sophy! Sophy! cries the lady this Mr Jones I am afraid still runs in your head

Then upon my honour madam said Sophia Mr Jones is as entirely indifferent to me as the gentleman who just now left us

Upon my honour said Lady Bellaston I believe it Forgive me therefore a little innocent raillery but I promise you I will never mention his name any more

And now the two ladies separated infinitely tired to her chamber she reflected with the highest uneasiness and conscious shame Nor could the peculiar hardship of her situation and the necessity of the case at all reconcile her mind to her conduct for the frame of her mind was too delicate to bear the thought of having been guilty of a falsehood however qualified by circumstances Nor did this thought once suffer her to close her eyes during the whole succeeding night

BOOK XIV

CONTAINING TWO DAYS

Chapter 1

An essay to prove that an author will write the better for having some knowledge of the subject on which he writes

As SEVERAL gentlemen in these times by the wonderful force of genius only without the least assistance of learning perhaps without being well able to read have made a considerable figure in the republic of letters the modern critics I am told have lately begun to assert that all kind of learning is entirely useless to a writer and indeed no other than a kind of fetters on the natural sprightliness and activity of the imagination which is thus weighed down and prevented from soaring to those high flights which otherwise it would be able to reach

This doctrine I am afraid is at present carried much too far for why should writing differ so much from all other arts? The nimbleness of a dancing master is not at all prejudiced by being taught to move nor doth any mechanic I believe exercise his tools the worse by having learnt to use them For my own part I cannot conceive that Homer or Virgil would have writ with more fire if instead of being masters of

tion fire and judgment of

produced those orations that have made the senate of England in these our times a rival in eloquence to Greece and Rome if he had not been so well read in the writings of Demosthenes and Cicero as to have transferred their whole spirit into his speeches and with their spirit their knowledge too

I would not here be understood to insist on the same fund of learning in any of my brethren as Cicero persuades us is necessary to the composition of an orator On the contrary very little reading is I conceive necessary to the poet less to the critic and the least of all to the politician For the first perhaps Bysshe s Art of Poetry and a few of our modern poets may suffice for the second a moderate heap of plays and for the last an indifferent collection of political journals

To say the truth I require no more than that a man should have some little knowledge of the subject on which he treats according to

the old maxim of law Quam quisque nôrit artem in ea se exerceat With this alone a writer may sometimes do tolerably well and indeed without this all the other learning in the world will stand him in little stead

For instance let us suppose that Homer and Virgil Aristotle and Cicero Thucydides and Livy could have met all together and have clubbed their several talents to have composed a treatise on the art of dancing I believe it will be readily agreed they could not have equalled the excellent treatise which Mr Essex hath given us on that subject entitled The Rudiments of Genteel Education And indeed should the excellent Mr Broughton be prevailed on to set fist to paper and to complete the above said rudiments by delivering down the true principles of athletics I question whether the world will have any cause to lament that none of the great writers either antient or modern have ever treated about that noble and useful art

To avoid a multiplicity of examples in so plain a case and to come at once to my point I am apt to conceive that one reason why many English writers have totally failed in describing the manners of upper life may pos s bl ho pe

give us a very imperfect idea of it nor will the stage a much better the fine gentleman formed upon reading the former will almost always turn out a pedant and he who forms himself upon the latter a coxcomb

Nor are the characters drawn from these models better supported Vanbrugh and Congreve copied nature but they who copy them draw as unlike the present age as Hogarth would do if he was to paint a rout or a drum in the dresses of Titian and of Vandyke In short imitation here will not do the business The picture must be after Nature herself A true knowledge of the world is gained only by conversation and the manners of every rank must be seen in order to be known

Now it happens that this higher order of mortals is not to be seen like all the rest of the human species for nothing in the streets shops and coffee house nor are they shown like the upper rank of animals for so much a piece In th is equivalent to both the honourable profession of a gamester And very unluckily for the world persons so qualified very seldom care to take upon themselves the bad trade of writing which is generally entered upon by the lower and poorer sort as it is a trade which many think requires no kind of stock to set up with

Hence those strange monsters in lace and embroidery in silks and brocades with vast wigs and hoops which under the name of lords and ladies strut the stage to the great delight of attorneys and their clerks in the pit and of the citizens and their apprentices in the galleries and which are no more to be found in real life than the centaur the chimera or any other creature of mere fiction But to let my reader into a secret this knowledge of upper life though very necessary for preventing mistakes is no very great resource to a writer whose province is comedy or that kind of novels which like this I am writing is of the comic class

What Mr Pope says of women is very applicable to most in this station who are indeed so entirely made up of form and affectation that they have no character at all at least none which appears I will venture to say the highest life is much the dullest and affords very little humour or entertainment The vari servile imitation Dressing and cards eating and drinking bowing and courtesying make up the business of their lives

Some there are however of this rank upon whom passion exercises its tyranny and hurries them far beyond the bounds which decorum prescribes of these the ladies are as much distinguished by their noble intrepidity and a certain superior contempt of reputation from the frail ones of meaner degree as a virtuous woman of quality is by the elegance and delicacy of her sentiments from the honest wife of a yeoman or shopkeeper Lady Bellaston that we mean to represent them as such They might as well suppose that every clergyman was represented by Thwackum or every soldier by ensign Northerton

There is not indeed a greater error than that which universally prevails among the vulgar who borrowing their opinion from some

Indeed madam " cries Sophia your ladyship mistakes me if you imagine I had any concern on his account

On his account! answered the lady You must have mistaken me I went no farther than his dress —for I would not injure your taste by any other comparison—I don t imagine my dear Sophy if your Mr Jones had been such a fellow as this—

I thought says Sophia your ladyship had allowed him to be handsome"—

Whom pray cried the lady hastily

"Mr Jones, answered Sophia —and immediately recollecting herself Mr Jones —no no I ask your pardon —I mean the gentleman who was just now here

O Sophy! Sophy! cries the lady this Mr Jones I am afraid still runs in your head "

Then upon my honour madam said Sophia Mr Jones is as entirely indifferent to me as the gentleman who just now left us

Upon my honour said Lady Bellaston "I believe it Forgive me therefore a little innocent raillery but I promise you I will never mention his name any more

And now the two ladies separated infinitely more to the delight of Sophia than of Lady Bellaston who would willingly have tormented her rival a little longer had not business of more importance called her away As for Sophia her mind was not perfectly easy under this first practice of deceit upon which when she retired to her chamber she reflected with the highest uneasiness and conscious shame Nor could the peculiar hardship of her situation, and the necessity of the case at all reconcile her mind to her conduct for the frame of her mind was too delicate to bear the thought of having been guilty of a falsehood however qualified by circumstances Nor did this thought once suffer her to close her eyes during the whole succeeding night

BOOK XIV

Containing two days

Chapter 1

An essay to prove that an author will write the better for having some knowledge of the subject on which he writes

As SEVERAL gentlemen in these times by the wonderful force of genius only without the least assistance of learning perhaps with less to a writer and indeed no other than a kind of fetters on the natural sprightliness and activity of the imagination which is thus weighed down and prevented from soaring to those high flights which otherwise it would be able to reach

This doctrine I am afraid is at present carried much too far for why should writing differ so much from all other arts? The nimbleness of a dancing master is not at all prejudiced by being taught to move nor doth any mechanic I believe exercise his tools the worse by having learnt to use them For my own part I cannot conceive that Homer or Virgil would have writ with more fire if instead of being masters of

produced those orations that have made the senate of England in these our times a rival in eloquence to Greece and Rome if he had not been so well read in the writings of Demosthenes and Cicero as to have transferred their whole spirit into his speeches and with their spirit their knowledge too

I would not here be understood to insist on the same fund of learning in any of my brethren as Cicero persuades us is necessary to the composition of an orator On the contrary very little reading is I conceive necessary to the poet less to the critic and the least of all to the politician For the first perhaps Bysshe s Art of Poetry and a few of our modern poets may suffice for the second a moderate heap of plays and for the last an indifferent collection of political journals

To say the truth I require no more than that a man should have some little knowledge of the subject on which he treats according to

shall be easy Have you not betrayed my honour to her?'—Jones fell upon his knees, and began to utter the most violent protestations, when Partridge came dancing and capering into the room, like one drunk with joy, crying out, She's found! she's found!—Here, sir, here, she s here—Mrs Honour is upon the stairs" Stop her a moment," cries Jones—"Here, madam, step behind the bed I have no other room nor closet, nor place on earth to hide you in, sure never was so damned an accident " — D—n'd indeed!" said the lady as she went to her place of concealment; and presently afterwards in came Mrs Honour "Hey day! says she "Mr Jones, what's the matter?—That impudent rascal your servant would scarce let me come upstairs I hope he hath not the same reason to keep me from you as he had at Upton —I suppose you hardly expected to see me, but you have certainly bewitched my lady Poor dear young lady! To be sure, I loves her as tenderly as if she was my own sister Lord have mercy upon you, if you don't make her a good husband! and to be sure, if you do not nothing can be bad enough for you ' Jones begged her only to whisper, for that there was a lady dying in the next room "A lady! cries she, "ay I suppose one of your ladies —O Mr Jones, there are too many of them in the world I believe we are got into the house of one for my Lady Bellaston, I darst to say, is no better than she should be "— Hush! hush!" cries Jones, 'every word is overheard in the next room ' — "I don t care a farthing," cries Honour. 'I speaks no scandal of any one but to be sure the servants make no scruple of saying as how her ladyship meets men at another place—where the house goes under the name of a poor gentlewoman, but her ladyship pays the rent, and many's the good thing besides they say, she hath of her "—Here Jones after expressing the utmost uneasiness, offered to stop her mouth —"Hey-day! why sure Mr Jones you will let me speak, I speaks no scandal for I such a wicked manner To be sure it is better to be poor and honest" "The servants are villains," cries Jones, "and abuse their lady unjustly "—"Ay, to be sure, servants are always villains, and so my lady says, and won t hear a word of it "—' No, I am convinced says Jones, "my Sophia is above listening to such base scandal "—' Nay, I believe it is no scandal, neither," cries Honour, "for why should she meet men at another house?—It can never be for any good for if she had a lawful design of being courted, as to be sure any lady may lawfully give her company to men upon that account why, where can be the sense?"—"I protest,' cries Jones 'I can t hear all this of a lady of such honour, and a relation of Sophia, besides you will distract the poor lady in the next room —Let me entreat you to walk with me down stairs '— Nay sir, if you won't let me speak, I have done —Here, sir, is a letter from my young lady—what would some men give to have this? But, Mr Jones, I think you are not over and above generous and yet I have heard some servants say——but I am sure you will do me the justice to own I never saw the colour of your money ' Here Jones hastily she presently departed not without expressing much grateful sense of his generosity

Lady Bellaston now came from behind the curtain How shall I describe her rage? Her tongue was at first incapable of utterance, but streams of fire darted from her eyes and well indeed they might, for her heart was all in a flame And now as soon as her voice found way, instead of expressing any indignation against Honour or her own servants she began to attack poor Jones You see said she, what I have sacrificed to you my reputation my honour—gone for ever! And what return have semble if you will make me easy you must entirely give her up and as a proof of your intention show me the letter —'What letter, madam? said Jones. Nay surely said she, you cannot have the confidence to deny your having received a letter by the hands of that trollop — And can your ladyship " cries he. ask of me what I must part with my honour before I grant? Have I acted in such a manner by your ladyship? Could I be guilty of betraying this poor innocent girl to you what security could you have that I should not act the same part by yourself? A moment's reflection will I am sure, convince you, that a man with whom the secrets of a lady are not safe must be the most contemptible of wretches."—"Very well said she—"I need not insist on your coming this contemptible wretch in your opinion, for the inside of the letter could inform me of nothing more than I know already. I see the footing you are upon "—Here ensued more pacified, and at length believed, or affected to believe, his protestations that his meeting with Sophia that evening was merely accidental and every other matter which the reader already knows and which as Jones set before her in the strongest light, it is plain that she had in reality no reason to be angry with him

She was not, however, in her heart perfectly satisfied with his refusal to show her the letter, so deaf are we to the clearest reason when it argues against our prevailing passions She was indeed well convinced that Sophia possessed the first place in Jones's affections, and yet, haughty and amorous as this lady was, she submitted at last to bear the second place or, to express it more properly in a legal phrase, her maid, and all the servants would place these visits to the account of Sophia, and that she herself would be considered as the person imposed upon

This scheme was contrived by the lady and highly relished by Jones who was indeed glad to have a prospect of seeing his Sophia at any rate and the lady herself was not a little pleased with the imposition on Sophia, which Jones she thought could not possibly discover to her

Chapter 3

Containing various matters

JONES was no sooner alone than he eagerly broke open his letter and read as follows —

... you I charge you, by all the regard you have for me not to think of visiting here, for it will certainly be discovered; nay, I almost doubt, from some things which have dropt from her ladyship, that she is not already without some suspicion Something favourable, perhaps, may happen, we must wait with patience, but I once more entreat you, if you have any concern for my ease, do not think of returning hither.

This letter administered the same kind of consolation to poor Jones, which Job formerly received from his friends Besides disappoint of any excuse for the failure and to go, after the strict prohibition from Sophia he was not to be forced by any human power. At length, after much deliberation, which during that night supplied the place of sleep he deter

he had more than one reason of desiring to avoid

The first thing however, which he did in the morning was, to write an answer to Sophia, which he inclosed in one to Honour He then despatched another to Lady Bellaston containing the above mentioned excuse, and to this he soon received the following answer —

I am vexed that I cannot see you here this afternoon, but more concerned for the occasion, take great care of yourself, and have the best advice, and I hope there will be no danger —I am so tormented all this morning with fools, that I have scarce a moment's time to write to you Adieu

P S —I will endeavour to call on you this evening at nine —Be sure to be alone

Mr Jones now received a visit from Mrs Miller, who after some formal introduction began the following speech —"I am very sorry sir to wait upon you on such an occasion but I hope you will consider the ill consequence not to bring any more ladies in at that time of night The clock had struck two before one of them went away"—"I do assure you, madam said Jones, "the lady who was here last night, and who staid the latest (for the other only brought me a letter) is a woman of very great fashion and my near relation — I don't know what fashion she is of answered Mrs Miller "but I am sure no woman of virtue unless a very near relation indeed would visit a young gentleman at ten at night and stay four hours in his room with him alone besides sir the behaviour of her chairmen shows what she was for they did nothing but make jests all the evening in the entry and asked Mr Partridge in the hearing of my own maid if madam intended to stay with his master all night with a great deal of stuff not proper to be repeated I have really a great respect for you Mr Jones upon your own account nay I have a very high obligation to you for your generosity to my cousin Indeed I did not know how very good you had been till lately Little did I imagine to what dreadful courses the poor man s distress had driven him Little did I think when

Mr Allworthy hath formerly given me of you was, I find strictly true —And indeed if I had no obligation to you my obligations to him are such that on his account I should show you the utmost respect in my power —Nay believe me dear Mr Jones if my daughters and my own reputation were out of the case I should for your own sake be sorry that so pretty a young gentleman should converse with these women but if you are resolved to do it I must beg you to take another lodging for I do not myself like to have such things carried on under my roof but more especially upon the account of my girls who have little heaven knows besides their characters to recommend them Jones started and changed colour at the name of Allworthy Indeed Mrs Miller answered he a little warmly I do not take this at all kind I will never bring any slander on your house but I must insist on seeing what company I please in my own room and if that gives you any offence I shall as soon as I am able look for another lodging — I am sorry we must part then sir said she but I am con

— would offend any of Mr Allwor ... ily I have not slept a wink all night about this matter — I am sorry I have disturbed your rest madam said Jones but I beg you will send Partridge up to me immediately which she promised to do and then with a very low courtesy retired

As soon as Partridge arrived Jones fell upon him in the most outrageous manner How often said he am I to suffer for your folly or rather for my own in keeping you? is that tongue of yours resolved upon my destruction?' What have I done sir? answered affrighted Partridge Who was it gave you authority to mention the story of the robbery or that the man you saw here was the person? I sir?

I gave you mention the name of Mr Allworthy in this house? Partridge denied that he ever had with many oaths How else said Jones should Mrs Miller be acquainted that there was any connexion between him and me? And it is but this moment she told me she respected me on his account O Lord sir said Partridge I desire only to be heard out and to be sure never was anything so unfortunate hear me but out and you will own how wrongfully you have accused me When Mrs Honour came downstairs last night she met me in the entry and asked me when my master had heard from Mr Allworthy and to be sure Mrs Miller heard the very words and the moment Madam Honour was gone she called me into the parlour to her Mr Partridge says she what Mr Allworthy is it that the gentlewoman mentioned? is it the great Mr Allworthy of Somersetshire? Upon my word madam says I I know nothing of the matter Sure says she your master is not the Mr Jones I have heard Mr Allworthy talk of Upon my word madam says I I know nothing of the matter Then says she turning to her daughter Nancy says she as sure as ten upon two legs if ever it came out of I promise you sir I can keep a am desired Nay sir so far was her anything about Mr Allworthy, that I told her the very direct contrary, for, though I did not contradict it at that moment, yet, as second thoughts they say, are best, so when I came to consider that somebody must have informed her, thinks I to myself, I will put an end to the story, and so I went back again into the parlour some time afterwards, and says I, upon my word says I, whoever, says I, told you that this gentleman was Mr Jones, that is, says I, that this Mr Jones was that Mr Jones, told you a confounded lie and I beg says I, you will never mention any such matter, says I, for my master, says I, will think I must have told you so, and I defy anybody in the house ever to say I mentioned any such word To be certain, sir, it is a wonderful thing and I have been thinking with myself ever since, how it was she came to know it, not but I saw an old woman here t'other day a begging at the door, who looked as like her we saw in Warwickshire, that caused all that mischief to us To be sure it is never good to pass by an old woman without giving her something, especially if she looks at you, for all the world shall never persuade me but that they have a great power to do mischief, and to be sure I shall never see an old woman [illegible]

and instead of commenting on his defence, he told him he intended presently to leave those lodgings and ordered him to go and endeavour to get him others

Chapter 4

Which we hope will be very attentively perused by young people of both sexes

Partridge had no sooner left Mr Jones, than Mr Nightingale with whom he had now contracted a great intimacy came to him and, after a short salutation said So Tom I hear you had company very late last night Upon my soul you are a happy fellow who have not been in town above a fortnight and can keep chairs waiting at your door till two in the morning " He then ran on with much commonplace raillery of the same kind till Jones at last interrupted him, saying 'I suppose you have received all this information from Mrs Miller, who hath been up here a little while ago to give me warning The good woman is afraid, it seems, of the reputation of her daughters " ' Oh! she is wonderfully nice," says Nightingale, "upon that account: if you remember, she would not let Nancy go with us to the mas- [illegible] to look for another lodging, [illegible] says Nightingale, "we may, I believe, be again together, for, to tell you a secret, which I desire [illegible] to q[illegible] Mill[illegible] cries Jones "No," answered the other, "but the rooms are not convenient enough Besides, I am grown weary of this part of the town I want to be nearer the places of diversion; so I am going to Pall mall " "And do you intend to make a secret of your going away? ' said Jones "I promise you," answered Nightingale, 'I don't intend to bilk my lodgings, but I have a private reason for not taking a formal leave." ' Not so private," answered Jones, "I promise you, I have seen it ever since the second day of my coming to the house Here will be some wet eyes on your departure Poor Nancy, I pity her, faith! Indeed, Jack, you have played the fool [illegible]

would you have me do? would you have me marry her to cure her?" "No," answered Jones, "I would not have had you make love to her, as you have often done in my presence I have been astonished at the blindness of her mother in never seeing it " ' Pugh see it! ' cries Nightingale "What the devil should she see? ' "Why, see ' said Jones, "that you have made her daughter distractedly in love with you The poor girl cannot conceal it a moment, her eyes are never off from you and she always colours every time you come into the room Indeed I pity her heartily for she seems to be one of the best natured and honestest of human creatures ' ' And so,' answered Nightingale, "according to your doctrine, one must not amuse oneself by any common gallantries with women for fear they should fall in love with us " ' Indeed Jack,' said Jones ' you wilfully misunderstand me I do not fancy women are so apt to fall in love, but you have gone far [illegible]

imagine you have laid a regular premed[illegible]

scheme for the destruction of the quiet of a poor little creature, or have even foreseen the consequence for I am sure thou are a very good natured fellow, and such a one can never be guilty of a cruelty of that kind, but at the same time you have pleased your own vanity, without considering that this poor girl was made a sacrifice to it, and while you have had no design but of amusing an idle hour, you have actually given her reason to flatter herself that you had the most serious designs in her favour Prithee, Jack, answer me honestly to what have tended all those elegant and luscious descriptions of happiness arising from violent and mutual fondness? all those warm professions of tenderness, and generous disinterested love? Did you imagine she would not apply them? or, speak ingenuously, did not you intend she should?" 'Upon my soul, Tom,' cries Nightingale, 'I did not think this was in thee Thou wilt make an admirable parson So I suppose you would not go to bed to Nancy now, if she would let you?" "No' cries Jones, "may I be d—n'd if I would" 'Tom, Tom answered Nightingale, "last night, remember last night—

When every eye was closed, and the pale moon,
And silent stars, shone conscious of the theft"

'Lookee, Mr Nightingale," said Jones I am no canting hypocrite nor do I pretend to the gift of chastity, more than my neighbours I have been guilty with women I own it but am not conscious that I have ever injured any —Nor would I, to procure pleasure to myself, be knowingly the cause of misery to any human being"

"Well, well," said Nightingale 'I believe you and I am convinced you acquit me of any such thing"

'I do from my heart," answered Jones "of having debauched the girl but not from having gained her affections"

'If I have,' said Nightingale "I am sorry for it, but time and absence will soon wear off such impressions It is a receipt I must take myself, for to confess the truth to you—I never liked any girl half so much in my whole life but I must let you into the whole secret Tom My father hath provided a match for me with a woman I never saw and she is now coming to town, in order for me to make my addresses to her"

At these words Jones burst into a loud fit of laughter, when Nightingale cried—Nay, prithee, don't turn me into ridicule. The devil take me if I am not half mad about this matter! my poor Nancy! Oh! Jones, Jones, I wish I had a fortune in my own possession"

"I heartily wish you had," cries Jones, 'for, if this be the case, I sincerely pity you both, but surely you don't intend to go away without taking your leave of her?'

'I would not, answered Nightingale, "undergo the pain of taking leave for ten thousand pounds besides, I am convinced, instead of answering any good purpose, it would only serve to inflame my poor Nancy the more I beg therefore you would not mention a word of it to-day, and in the evening or to-morrow morning, I intend to depart

Jones promised he would not and said, upon reflection he thought, as he had determined and was obliged to leave her he took the most prudent method He then told Nightingale he should be very glad to lodge in the same house with him and it was accordingly agreed between them that Nightingale should procure him either the ground floor, or the two pair of stairs for the young gentleman himself was to occupy that which was between them

This Nightingale of whom we shall be presently obliged to say a little more, was in the ordinary transactions of life a man of strict honour and, what is more rare among young gentlemen of the town one of strict honesty too, yet in affairs of love he was somewhat loose in his morals not that he was even here as void of principle as gentlemen sometimes are and oftener affect to be but it is certain he had been guilty of some indefensible treachery to women and had in a certain mystery, called making love practised many deceits, which if he had used in trade, he would have been counted the greatest villain upon earth

But as the world I know not well for what reason agree to see this treachery in a better light he was so far from being ashamed of his iniquities of this kind that he gloried in them, and would often boast of his skill in gaining of women and his triumphs over their hearts for which he had before this time received some rebukes from Jones who always exprest great bitterness against any misbehaviour to the fair part of the species who if considered, he said as they ought to be, in the light of the dearest friends were to be cultivated, honoured and caressed with the utmost love and tenderness but, if regarded as enemies, were a conquest of which a man ought rather to be ashamed than to value himself upon it.

Chapter 5

A short account of the history of Mrs Miller

JONES this day eat a pretty good dinner for a sick man that is to say, the larger half of a shoulder of mutton In the afternoon, he received an invitation from Mrs Miller to drink tea for that good woman having learnt, either by means of Partridge, or by some other means natural or supernatural, that he had a connexion with Mr Allworthy could not endure the thoughts of parting with him in an angry manner

Jones accepted the invitation and no sooner was the teakettle removed, and the girls sent out of the room, than the widow, without much preface began as follows 'Well, there are very surprizing things happen in this world, but certainly it is a wonderful business that I should have a relation of Mr Allworthy in my house, and never know anything of the matter Alas! sir, you little imagine what a friend that best of gentlemen hath been to me and mine Yes, sir I am not ashamed to own it, it is owing to his goodness that I did not long since perish for want, and leave my poor little wretches two destitute helpless, friendless orphans, to the care, or rather to the cruelty, of the world

'You must know sir though I am now reduced to get my living by letting lodgings, I was born and bred a gentlewoman My father was an officer of the army and died in a con of the small pox, a lady was so kind as to take the second out of charity as she said to wait upon her The mother of this lady had been a servant to my grandmother and having inherited a vast fortune from her father which he had got by pawnbroking, was married to a gentleman of great estate and fashion She used my sister so barbarously often upbraiding her with her birth and poverty calling her in derision a gentlewoman that I believe she had been

delicately, considered us, and would have had us consider ourselves as highly as if we had been the richest heiresses But my dear husband forgot all this usage, and the moment we were become fatherless, he immediately renewed his addresses to me so warmly, that I, who always liked, and now more than ever esteemed him soon complied Five years did I live in a state of perfect happiness with that best of men, till at last—Oh! cruel! cruel fortune, that ever separated us, that deprived me

ness but I shall never mention him without tears" "I ought rather, madam," said Jones, "to be ashamed that I do not accompany you" "Well sir' continued she, 'I was now left a second time in a much worse condition than before besides the terrible affliction I was to encounter I had now two children to provide for, and was if possible, more pennyless than ever when that great, that good, that glorious man, Mr Allworthy, who had some little acquaintance with my husband, accidentally heard of my distress, and immediately writ this letter to me Here, sir, here it is I put it into my pocket to shew it you This is the letter, sir, I must and will read it to you

"MADAM,

'I heartily condole with you on your late grievous loss, which your own good sense, and the excellent lessons you must have learnt from the worthiest of men, will better enable you to bear than any advice which I am capable of giving Nor have I any doubt that you, whom I have heard to be the tenderest of mothers, will suffer any immoderate indulgence of grief to prevent you from discharging your duty to those poor infants, who now alone stand in need of your tenderness

'However, as you must be supposed at present to be incapable of much worldly consideration you will pardon my having ordered be, madam, &c.

This letter, sir, I received within a fortnight after the irreparable loss I have mentioned and within a fortnight afterwards, Mr Allworthy—the blessed Mr Allworthy—came to pay me a visit, when he placed me in the house where you now see me, gave me a large sum of money to furnish it and settled an annuity of £50 a year upon me which I have constantly received ever since Judge then Mr Jones in what regard I must hold a bene factor to whom I owe the preservation of my life and of those dear children for whose sake alone my life is valuable Do not therefore think me impertinent Mr Jones (since I must esteem one for whom I know Mr All worthy hath so much value) if I beg you not to converse with these wicked women You are a young gentleman and do not know half their artful wiles Do not be angry with me sir for what I said upon account of my house you must be sensible it would be the ruin of my poor dear girls Besides sir you cannot but be acquainted that Mr Allworthy himself would never forgive my conniving at such mat ters, and particularly with you

Upon my word madam " said Jones you need make no farther apology nor do I in the least take anything ill you have said but give me leave as no one can have more value than myself for Mr Allworthy to deliver you from one mistake which perhaps would not be altogether for his honour I do assure you I am no relation of his

Alas! sir answered she I know you are not I know very well who you are for Mr Allworthy hath told me all but I do assure you had you been twenty times his son he could not have expressed more regard for you than he hath often expressed in my presence You need not be ashamed sir of what you a..

as my dear dear husband used to say unless the word dishonourable be applied to the parents for the children can derive no real dishonour from an act of which they are in tirely innocent

Here Jones heaved a deep sigh and then said Since I perceive madam you really do know me and Mr Allworthy hath thought proper to mention my name to you and since you have been so explicit with me as to your curiosity to hear he began and related to her his whole history without once mentioning the name of Sophia

There is a kind of sympathy in honest minds by means of which they give an easy credit to each other Mrs Miller believed all which Jones told her to be true and exprest much pity and concern for him She was beginning to comment on the story but Jones interrupted her for as the hour of assignation now drew nigh he began to stipulate for a second inter view with the lady that evening which he promised should be the last at her house swearing at the same time that she was one of great distinction and that nothing but what was intirely innocent was to pass between them and I do firmly believe he intended to keep his word

Mrs Miller was at length prevailed on and Jones departed to his chamber where he sat alone till twelve o clock but no Lady Bellas ton appeared

As we have said that this lady had a great affection for Jones and as it must have ap peared that she really had so the reader may perhaps wonder at the first failure of her ap...

fault for our business is only to record truth

Chapter 6

Containing a scene which we doubt not will affect all our readers justly to be charged to her account the present cause of dispelling his slumbers In fact poor mind which ...

himself and like a polished bowl enables him to run through the world without being once stopped by the calamities which happen to others He could not help therefore com passionating the situation of poor Nancy whose love for Mr Nightingale seemed to him so apparent that he was astonished at the blind ness of her mother who had more than once the preceding evening, remarked to him the great change in the temper of her daughter who from being she said one of the livli est merriest girls in the world was on a sud den become all gloom and melancholy"

Sleep, however, at length got the better of all resistance, and now, as if he had already been a deity, as the antients imagined, and an offended one too, he seemed to enjoy his dear-bought conquest —To speak simply, and without any metaphor, Mr Jones slept till eleven the next morning, and would, perhaps, have continued in the same quiet situation much longer, had not a violent uproar awakened him

Partridge was now summoned who, being asked what was the matter, answered, "That there was a dreadful hurricane below stairs, that Miss Nancy was in fits and that the other sister, and the mother, were both crying and lamenting over her Jones expressed much concern at this news, which Partridge endeavoured to relieve, by saying, with a smile, "He fancied the young lady was in no danger of death, for that Susan' (which was the name of the maid) had given him to understand, it was nothing more than a common affair In short," said he, Miss Nancy hath had a mind to be as wise as her mother, that's all she was a little hungry it seems, and so sat down to dinner before grace was said, and so there is a child coming for the Foundling Hospital" —— Prithee leave thy stupid jesting, cries Jones Is the misery of these poor wretches a subject of mirth? Go immediately to Mrs Miller and tell her I beg leave—Stay you will make some blunder I will go myself for she desired me to breakfast with her He then rose and dressed himself as fast as he could and while he was dressing, Partridge notwithstanding many severe rebukes, could not avoid throwing forth certain pieces of brutality, commonly called jests on this occasion Jones was no sooner dressed than he walked downstairs, and knocking at the door was presently admitted by the maid into the outward parlour, which was as empty of company as it was of any apparatus for eating Mrs Miller was in the inner room with her daughter, whence the maid presently brought a message to Mr Jones, 'That her mistress hoped he would excuse the disappointment but an accident had happened which made it impossible for her to have the pleasure of his company at breakfast that day and begged his pardon for not sending him up notice sooner Jones desired, She would give herself no trouble about anything so trifling as his disappointment, that he was heartily sorry for the occasion, and that if he could be of any service to her, she might command him."

He had scarce spoke these words, when Mrs. Miller, who heard them all, suddenly threw open the door, and coming out to him, in a [illegible] your service, but, alas! sir, it is out of your power to preserve my poor girl —O my child' my child' she is undone, she is ruined forever! 'I hope, madam," said Jones, "no villain — 'O Mr. Jones'' said she, 'that villain who yesterday left my lodgings hath betrayed my poor girl hath destroyed her—I know you are a man of honour You have a good—a noble heart, Mr Jones The actions to which I have been myself a witness, could proceed from no other. I will tell you all nay, indeed, it is impossible, after what hath happened, to keep it a secret That Nightingale, that barbarous villain, hath undone my daughter She is—she is is—oh' Mr Jones my girl is with child by him and in that condition he hath deserted her Here! here, sir, is his cruel letter read it Mr Jones, and tell me if such another monster lives"

The letter was as follows'

Dear Nancy,

As I found it impossible to mention to you what, I am afraid, will be no less shocking to you, than it is to me, I have taken this method to inform you, that my father insists upon my immediately paying my addresses to a young lady of fortune, whom he hath provided for my—I need not write the detested word Your own good understanding will make you sensible, how intirely I am obliged to an obedience, by which I shall be for ever excluded from your dear arms The fondness of your mother may encourage you to trust her with the unhappy consequence of our love, which may be easily kept a secret from the world, and for which I will take care to provide, as I will for you I wish you may feel less on this account than I have suffered, but summon all your fortitude to your assistance, and forgive and forget the man, whom nothing but the prospect of certain ruin could have forced to write this letter I bid you forget me, I mean only as a lover, but the best of friends you shall ever find in your faithful, though unhappy,

J N

When Jones had read this letter, they both stood silent during a minute looking at each other, at last he began thus "I cannot express, madam, how much I am shocked at what I have read yet let me beg you in one particular to take the writer's advice Consider the reputation of your daughter —— It is gone it is lost Mr Jones cryed she as well as her innocence She received the letter in a room full of company and immediately swooning away upon opening it the contents were known to every one present But the loss of her reputation bad as it is is not the worst I shall lose my child she hath attempted twice to destroy herself already and though she hath been hitherto prevented vows she will not outlive it nor could I myself outlive any accident of that nature—What then will become of my little Betsy a helpless infant orphan? and the poor little wretch will I believe break her heart at the miseries with which she sees her sister and myself distracted while she is ignorant of the cause O tis the most sensible and best natured little thing! The barbarous cruel —hath destroyed us all O my poor children! Is this the reward of all my cares? Is this the fruit of all my prospects? Have I so chearfully undergone all the labours and duties of a mother? Have I been so tender of their infancy so careful of their education? Have I been toiling so many years denying myself even the conveniences of life to provide some little sustenance for them to lose one or both in such a manner? Indeed madam said Jones with tears in his eyes I pity you from my soul — O! Mr Jones answered she even you though I know the goodness of your heart can have no idea of what I feel The best the kindest the most dutiful of children! O my poor Nancy the darling of my soul! the delight of my eyes! the pride of my heart! too much indeed my pride for to those foolish ambitious hopes arising from her beauty I owe her ruin Alas! I saw with pleasure the liking which this young man had for her I thought it an honourable affection and flattered my foolish vanity with the thoughts of seeing her married to one so much her superior And a thousand times in my presence nay often in yours he hath endeavoured to soothe and encourage these hopes by the most generous expressions of disinterested love which he hath always directed to my poor girl and which I as well as she believed to be real Could I have believed that these were only snares laid to betray the innocence of my child and for the ruin of us all? —At these words little Betsy came running into the room crying Dear mamma for heaven s sake come to my sister for she is in another fit and my cousin can t hold her Mrs Miller immediately obeyed the summons but first ordered Betsy to stay with Mr Jones and begged him to entertain her a few minutes saying in the most pathetic voice Good heaven! let me preserve one of my children at least

sister would be soon very well again that by taking on in that manner she would not only make her sister worse but make her mother ill too Indeed sir says she I would not do anything to hurt them for the world I would burst my heart rather than they should see me cry —But my poor sister can t see me cry —I am afraid she will never be able to see me cry any more Indeed I can t part with her indeed I can t —And then poor mamma too what will become of her?—She says she will die too and leave me but I am resolved I won t be left behind And are you not afraid to die my little Betsy? said Jones Yes answered she I was always afraid to die because I must have left my mamma and my sister but I am not afraid of going anywhere with those I love

Jones was so pleased with this answer that he eagerly kissed the child and soon after Mrs Miller returned saying She thanked heaven Nancy was now come to herself And now Betsy says she you may go in for your sister is better and longs to see you She then turned to Jones and began to renew her apologies for having disappointed him of his breakfast

I hope madam said Jones I shall have a more exquisite repast than any you could have provided for me This I assure you will be the case if I can do any service to this little family of love But whatever success may attend my endeavours I am resolved to attempt it I am very much deceived in Mr Nightingale if notwithstanding what hath happened he hath not much goodness of heart at the bottom as well as a very violent affection for your daughter If this be the case I think the picture which I shall lay before him will affect which she afterwards added the most passionate expressions of gratitude He then departed to find Mr Nightingale and the good woman returned to comfort her daughter who was somewhat cheared at what her mother told her and both joined in resounding the praises of Mr Jones

Chapter 7

The interview between Mr Jones and Mr Nightingale

THE good or evil we confer on others very often I believe recoils on ourselves For as men of a benign disposition enjoy their own acts of beneficence equally with those to whom they are done so there are scarce any natures creatures

Mr Nightingale at least was not such a person On the contrary Jones found him in his new lodgings sitting melancholy by the fire and silently lamenting the unhappy situation in which he had placed poor Nancy He no sooner saw his friend appear than he arose hastily to meet him and after much congratulation said Nothing could be more opportune than this kind visit for I was never more in the spleen in my life

I am sorry answered Jones that I bring news very unlikely to relieve you nay what I am convinced must of all other shock you the most However it is necessary you should know it Without further preface then I come to you Mr Nightingale from a worthy family which you have involved in misery and ruin Mr Nightingale changed colour at these words but Jones without regarding it proceeded in the liveliest manner to paint the tragical story with which the reader was acquainted in the last chapter manner Sure there never was so cursed an accident as the poor girl s betraying my letter Her reputation m ght otherwise have been safe and the affair might have remained a profound secret and then the girl m ght have

Nightingale never once interrupted the narration though he discovered violent emotions

Indeed my friend answered Jones this could not have been the case with your poor Nancy You have so intirely gained her affections that it is the loss of you and not of her gale she hath my affections so absolutely that my wife whoever she is to be will have very little share in them And is it possible then" said Jones you can think of deserting her?"

Why what can I do? answered the other

Ask Miss Nancy replied Jones warmly In the condition to which you have reduced her I sincerely think she ought to determine what reparation you shall make her Her interest alone and not yours ought to be your sole consideration But if you ask me what you shall do what can you do less cries Jones than fulfil the expectations of her family and her own? Nay I sincerely tell you they were mine too ever since I first saw you together You will pardon me if I presume on the friendship you have favoured me with moved as I am with compassion for those poor creatures. But your own heart will best suggest to you whether you have never intended by your conduct to persuade the mother as well as the daughter into an opinion that you designed honourably and if so though there may have been no direct promise of marriage in the case I will leave to your own good understanding how far you are bound to proceed

Nay I must not only confess what you have hinted said Nightingale but I am afraid even that very promise you mention I have given And can you after owning that" said Jones hesitate a moment? Consider my friend answered the other I know you are a man of honour and would advise no one to act contrary to its rules if there were no other objection can I after this publication of her disgrace think of such an alliance with honour? Undoubtedly replied Jones and the very best and truest honour which is goodness, requires it of you As you mention a scruple of this kind you will give me leave to examine it Can you with honour be guilty of having under false pretences deceived a young woman and her family and of having by these means treacherously robbed her of her innocence? Can you with honour be the knowing the wilful occasion nay the artful contriver of the ruin of a human being? Can you with honour destroy the fame the peace nay probably both the life and soul too of this creature? Can honour bear the thought that this creature is a tender helpless defenceless young woman? A young woman who loves who doats on you who dies for you who hath placed the utmost confidence in your promises and to that confidence hath sacrificed every thing which is dear to her? Can honour support such contemplations as these a moment?

Common sense indeed said Nightingale warrants all you say but yet you well know the opinion of the world is so contrary to it that was I to marry a whore though my own I should be ashamed of ever showing my face again "

Fie upon it Mr Nightingale! said Jones "do not call her by so ungenerous a name when you promised to marry her she became your wife and she hath sinned more against prudence than virtue And what is this world which you would be ashamed to face but the vile the foolish and the profligate? Forgive me if I say such a shame must proceed from false modesty which always attends false honour as its shadow —But I am well assured there is not a man of real sense and goodness in the world who would not honour and applaud the action But admit no other would would not your own heart my friend applaud it? And do not the warm rapturous sensations which we feel from the consciousness of an honest noble generous benevolent action convey more delight to the mind than the undeserved praise of millions? Set the alternative fairly before your eyes On the one side see this poor unhappy tender believing girl in the arms of her wretched mother breathing her last Hear her breaking heart in agonies sighing out your name and lamenting rather than accusing the cruelty which weighs her down to destruction Paint to your imagination the circumstance of her fond bespairing parent driven to madness or perhaps to death by the loss of her lovely daughter View the poor helpless orphan infant and when your mind hath dwelt a moment only on such ideas consider yourself as the cause of all the ruin of this poor little worthy defenceless family On the other side consider yourself as relieving them from their temporary sufferings. Think with what joy with what transports that lovely creature will fly to your arms See her blood returning to her pale checks her

pletely happy Think of this alternative and sure I am mistaken in my friend if it requires any long deliberation whether he will sink these wretches down for ever or by one generous noble resolution raise them all from the brink of misery and despair to the highest pitch of human happiness Add to this but one consideration more the consideration that it is your duty so to do—That the misery from which you will relieve these poor people is the misery which you yourself have wilfully brought upon them

O my dear friend! cries Nightingale I wanted not your eloquence to rouse me I pity poor Nancy from my soul and would willingly give anything in my power that no familiarities had ever passed between us Nay believe me I had many struggles with my passion before I could prevail with myself to write that cruel letter which hath caused all the misery in that unhappy family If I had no inclinations to consult but my own I would marry her to-morrow morning I would by heaven! but you will easily imagine how impossible it would be to prevail on my father to consent to such a match besides he hath provided another for me and to morrow by his express command I am to wait on the lady

I have not the honour to know your father said Jones but suppose he could be persuaded would you yourself consent to the only means of preserving these poor people?

As eagerly as I would pursue my happiness answered Nightingale for I never shall find it in any other woman —O my dear friend! could you imagine what I have felt within these twelve hours for my poor girl I am convinced she would not engross all your pity to compleat my own happiness, or that of my Nancy affair which you may depend on it could not otherwise be long hid from him for things of this nature make a quick progress when once they get abroad as this unhappily hath already Besides should any fatal accident follow as upon my soul I am afraid will unless immediately prevented the public would ring of your name in a manner which if your father hath common humanity must offend him. If you will therefore tell me where I may find the old gentleman I will not lose a moment in the business which while I pursue you cannot do

Nightingale immediately consented to the proposal and now having acquainted Jones with his father s lodging and the coffee house where he would most probably find him he hesitated a moment and then said My dear Tom you are going to undertake an impossibility If you knew my father you would never think of obtaining his consent —Stay there is one way—suppose you told him I was already married it might be easier to reconcile him to the fact after it was done and upon my honour I am so affected with what you have said and I love my Nancy so passionately I almost wish it was done whatever might be the consequence

Chapter 8

What passed between Jones and old Mr Nightingale with the arrival of a person not yet mentioned in this history

NOTWITHSTANDING the sentiment of the Roman satirist which denies the divinity of fortune and the opinion of Seneca to the same purpose Cicero who was I believe a wiser man than either of them expressly holds the contrary and certain it is there are some incidents in life so very strange and unaccountable that it seems to require more than human skill and foresight in producing them

Of this kind was what now happened to Jones who found Mr Nightingale the elder in so critical a minute that Fortune if she was really worthy all the worship she received at Rome could not have contrived such another In short the old gentleman and the father of the young lady whom he intended for his son had been hard at it for many hours and the latter was just now gone and had left the former delighted with the thoughts that he had succeeded in a long contention which had been between the two fathers of the future bride and bridegroom in which both endeavoured to overreach the other and as it not rarely happens in such cases both had retreated fully satisfied of having obtained the victory

This gentleman whom Mr Jones now visited was what they call a man of the world that is to say a man who directs his conduct in this world as one who being fully persuaded there is no other is resolved to make the most of this In his early years he had been bred to trade but having acquired a very good fortune he had lately declined his business or to speak more properly had changed it from dealing in goods, to dealing only in money of which he had always a plentiful fund at command and of which he knew very well how to make a very plentiful advantage sometimes of the necessities of private men and sometimes of those of the public He had indeed conversed so intirely with money that it may be almost doubted whether he imagined there was any other thing really existing in the world this at least may be certainly averred that he firmly believed nothing else to have any real value

The reader will I fancy allow that Fortune could not have culled out a more improper person for Mr Jones to attack with any probability of success nor could the whimsical lady have directed this attack at a more unseasonable time

As money then was always uppermost in this gentleman s thoughts so the moment he saw a stranger within his doors, it immediately occurred to his imagination that such stranger was either come to bring him money or to fetch it from him And according as one or other of these thoughts prevailed he conceived a favourable or unfavourable idea of the person who approached him

Unluckily for Jones the latter of these was the ascendant at present for as a young gentleman had visited him the day before with a bill from his son for a play debt he apprehended at the first sight of Jones that he was come on such another errand Jones therefore had no sooner told him that he was come on his son s account than the old gentleman being confirmed in his suspicion burst forth into an exclamation That he would lose his labour Is it then possible sir answered Jones that you can guess my business? If I do guess it replied the other I repeat again to you you will lose your labour What I suppose you are one of those sparks who lead my son into all those scenes of riot and debauchery which will be his destruction? but I shall pay no more of his bills I promise you

I expect he will quit all such company for the future If I had imagined otherwise I should not have provided a wife for him for I would be instrumental in the ruin of nobody How sir said Jones and was this lady of your providing? Pray sir answered the old gentleman how comes it to be any concern of yours? — Nay dear sir replied Jones be not offended that I interest myself in what regards your son s happiness for whom I have so great an honour and value It was upon that very account I came to wait upon you I can t express the satisfaction you have given me by what you say for I do assure you your son is a person for whom I have the highest honour — Nay sir it is not easy to express the esteem I have for you who could be so generous so good so kind so indulgent to provide such a match for your son a woman who I dare swear will make him one of the happiest men upon earth

There is scarce anything which so happily introduces men to our good liking as having conceived some alarm at their first appearance when once those apprehensions begin to vanish we soon forget the fears which they occasioned and look on ourselves as indebted for our present ease to those very persons who at first raised our fears

Thus it happened to Nightingale who no sooner found that Jones had no demand on him as he suspected than he began to be pleased with his presence Pray good sir said he be pleased to sit down I do not remember to have ever had the pleasure of seeing you before but if you are a friend of my son and have anything to say concerning this young lady I shall be glad to hear you As to her making him happy it will be his own fault if she doth not I have discharged my duty in taking care of the main article She will bring him a fortune capable of making any reasonable prudent sober man happy Undoubtedly cries Jones for she is in herself a fortune so beautiful so genteel so sweet tempered and so well-educated she is indeed a most accomplished young lady sings admirably well and hath a most delicate hand at the harpsichord I did not know any of these matters " answered the old gentleman for I never saw the lady but I do not like her the worse for what you tell me and I am the better pleased with her father for not laying any stress on these qualifications in our bargain I shall always think it a proof of his understanding A silly fellow would have brought in these articles as an addition to her fortune but to [illegible]

eminent degree for my part I own I was afraid you might have been a little backward a little less inclined to the match for your son told me you had never seen the lady therefore I came sir in that case to entreat you to conjure you as you value the happiness of your son not to be averse to his match with a woman who hath not only all the good qual[illegible] may be perfectly easy for I give you my wor[d] I was very well satisfied with her fortune Sir answered Jones I honour you every moment more and more To be so easily satisfied so very moderate on that account is a proof of the soundness of your understanding as well as the nobleness of your mind — Not so very moderate young gentleman not so very moderate answered the father — Still more and more noble replied Jones and give me leave to add sensible for sure it is little [illegible] for money as the [illegible] omin[illegible] a for[illegible] you have a pretty just opinion of money my friend or else you are better acquainted with the person of the lady than with her circumstances Why pray what fortune do you imagine this lady to have? What fortune? cries Jones why too contemptible a one to be named for your son — Well well well said the other perhaps he might have done better — That I deny said Jones for she is one of the best of women — Ay ay but in point of fortune I mean answered the other

[illegible]

now if she had not fifty farthings your son is married — My son married!' answered the old gentleman with surprize Nay said Jones I thought you was unacquainted with it My son married to Miss Harris! answered he again To Miss Harris said Jones no sir to Miss Nancy Miller the daughter of Mrs Miller at whose house he lodged a young lady who though her mother is reduced to let lodgings— — Are you bantering or are you in earnest? cries the father with a most solemn voice Indeed sir answered Jones I scorn the character of a banterer I came to you in most serious earnest imagining as I find true that your son had never dared to acquaint you with a match so much inferior to him in point of fortune though the reputation of the lady will suffer it no longer to remain a secret

While the father stood like one struck suddenly dumb at this news a gentleman came into the room and saluted him by the name of brother

But though these two were in consanguinity so nearly related they were in their dispositions almost the opposites to each other The brother who now arrived had likewise been bred to trade in which he no sooner saw himself worth £6000 than he purchased a small estate with the greatest part of it and retired into the country where he married the daughter of an unbeneficed clergyman a young lady who though she had neither beauty nor fortune had recommended herself to his choice entirely by her good humour of which

which certain poets ascribe to the golden age than any of those patterns which are furnished by the present times By her he had four children but none of them arrived at maturity except only one daughter whom in vulgar language he and his wife had spoiled that is had educated with the utmost tenderness and fondness which she returned to such a degree that she had actually refused a very extraordinary match with a gentleman a little turned of forty because she could not bring herself to part with her parents projected match that he was now come to town not indeed to forward but to dissuade his brother from a purpose which he conceived would inevitably ruin his nephew for he foresaw no other event from a union with Miss Harris notwithstanding the largeness of her fortune as neither her person nor mind seemed to promise any kind of matrimonial felicity for she was very tall very thin very ugly very affected very silly and very ill natured when the father had very bitterly reviled his or for your own You would answer I suppose and so I suppose you think for his sake and doubtless it is his happiness which you intended in the marriage you proposed for him

Now brother to prescribe rules of happiness to others hath always appeared to me very absurd and to insist on doing this, very tyrannical It is a vulgar error I know but it is nevertheless an error And if this be absurd in other things it is mostly so in the affair of marriage the happiness of which depends intirely on the affection which subsists between the parties

I have therefore always thought it unreasonable in parents to desire to chuse for their children on this occasion since to force affection is an impossible attempt nay so much doth love abhor force that I know not whether through an unfortunate but uncurable perverseness in our natures it may not be even impatient of persuasion

It is however true that though a parent will not I think wisely prescribe he ought to be consulted on this occasion and in strictness perhaps should at least have a negative voice My nephew therefore I own in marrying without asking your advice hath been guilty of a fault But honestly speaking brother have you not a little promoted this fault? Have not your frequent declarations on this subject given him a moral certainty of your refusal where there was any deficiency in point of fortune? Nay doth not your present anger arise solely from that deficiency? And if he hath failed in his duty here did you not as much exceed that authority when you absolutely bargained with him for a woman without his knowledge whom you yourself never saw and whom if you had seen and known as well as I it must have been madness in you to have ever thought of bringing her into your family?

Still I own my nephew in a fault but surely it is not an unpardonable fault He hath acted indeed without your consent in a matter in edge that you consulted his interest only and if he unfortunately differed from you and hath been mistaken in his notion of happiness will you brother if you love your son carry him still wider from the point? Will you increase the ill consequences of his simple choice? Will you endeavour to make an event certain misery to him which may accidentally prove so? In a word brother because he hath put it out of your power to make his circumstances as affluent as you would will you distress them as much as you can?

By the force of the true Catholic faith St Anthony won upon the fishes Orpheus and Amphion went a little farther and by the charms of music enchanted things merely inanimate Wonderful both! but neither history nor fable have ever yet ventured to record an instance of any one who by force of argument and reason hath triumphed over habitual avarice

Mr Nightingale the father instead of attempting to answer his brother contented himself with only observing that they had always differed in their sentiments concerning the education of their children I wish said he brother you would have confined your care to your own daughter and never have troubled yourself with my son who hath I believe as little profited by your precepts as by your example For young Nightingale was his uncle s godson and had lived more with him than with his father So that the uncle had often declared he loved his nephew almost equally with his own child

Jones fell into raptures with this good gentleman and when after much persuasion they

Chapter 9

Containing strange matters

At his return to his lodgings Jones found the situation of affairs greatly altered from what they had been in at his departure The mother the two daughters and young Mr Nightingale were now sat down to supper together when the uncle was at his own desire introduced without any ceremony into the company to all of whom he was well known for he had several times visited his nephew at that house

The old gentleman immediately walked up to Miss Nancy saluted and wished her joy as he did afterwards the mother and the other sister and lastly he paid the proper compliments to his nephew with the same good humour and courtesy as if his nephew had married his equal or superior in fortune with all the previous requisites first performed

she threw herself at his feet and in a most ment which the highest benefit can extract from the most grateful heart

After the first gust of her passion was a little over which she declared if she had not vented, would have burst her she proceeded to inform Mr Jones that all matters were settled between Mr Nightingale and her daughter and that they were to be married the next to return with him back to the company whom they found in the same good humour in which they had left them so well plyed ... though not drunk began to be somewhat flustered and now Mr Nightingale taking the old gentleman with him upstairs into the apartment he had lately occupied unbosomed himself as follows —

As you have been always the best and kindest of uncles to me and as you have shown such unparalleled goodness in forgiving this match

then confessed the truth and opened the whole affair

"How Jack?" said the old gentleman and are you really then not married to this young woman?" 'No upon my honour answered Nightingale I have told you the simple truth"

My dear boy cries the uncle kissing him I am heartily glad to hear it I never was better pleased in my life If you had been married I should have assisted you as much as was in my power to have made the best of a bad matter but there is a great difference between considering a thing which is already done and irrecoverable and that which is yet to do Let your reason have fair play Jack and you will see this match in so foolish and preposterous a light that there will be no need of any dissuasive arguments How sir? replies young Nightingale is there this difference between and the world hath the power of a creator over it and may govern and direct it as they please Now you well know how trivial these breaches of contract are thought even the grossest make but the wonder and conversation of a day Is there a man who afterwards will be more backward in giving you his sister or daughter? or is there any sister or daughter who would be more backward to receive you? Honour is not concerned in these engagements Pardon me dear sir cries Nightingale I can never think so and not only honour but conscience and humanity are concerned I am well satisfied that was I now to disappoint the young creature her death would be the consequence and I should look upon myself as her murderer nay as her murderer by the cruellest of all methods by breaking her heart. Break her heart indeed! no no Jack cries the uncle the hearts of women are not so soon broke they are tough boy they are tough But sir answered Nightingale my own affections are engaged and I never could be happy with any other woman How often have I heard you say that children have them chuse wisely—Indeed Jack you must and shall leave the girl — Indeed uncle cries the other I must and will have her You will young gentleman! said the uncle I did not expect such a word from you I should not wonder if you had used such language to your father who hath always treated you like a dog and kept you at the distance which a tyrant preserves over his subjects but I who have lived with you upon an equal footing might surely expect better usage but I know how to account for it all it is all owing to your preposterous education, in which I have had too little share There is my daughter now whom I have brought up as my friend never doth anything without my advice nor ever refuses to take it when I give it her You have never yet given her advice in an affair of this kind said Nightingale 'for I am greatly mistaken in my cousin if she would be very ready to obey even your most positive commands in abandoning her inclinations Don t abuse my girl answered the old gentleman with some emotion "don t abuse my Harriet I have brought her up to have no inclinations contrary to my own By suffering her to do whatever she pleases, I have enured her to a habit of being pleased to do whatever I like Pardon me sir said Nightingale I have not the least design to reflect on my cousin for whom I have the greatest esteem and indeed I am convinced you will never put her to so severe a tryal or lay such hard commands on her as you would do on me —But dear sir let us return to the company' for they will begin to be uneasy at our long absence I must beg one favour of my dear uncle which is that he would not say anything to shock the poor girl or her mother" Oh! you need not fear me answered he I understand myself too well to affront women so I will readily grant you that favour and in return I must expect another of you There are but few of your commands sir said Nightingale which I shall not very chearfully obey

Nay sir, I ask nothing said the uncle but the honour of your company home to my lodging that I may reason the case a little more fully with you for I would if possible have the satisfaction of preserving my family notwithstanding the headstrong folly of my brother who in his opinion is the wisest man in the world

Nightingale who well knew his uncle to be as headstrong as his father submitted to attend him home and then they both returned back into the room where the old gentleman promised to carry himself with the same decorum which he had before maintained

Chapter 10

A short chapter which concludes the book

The long absence of the uncle and nephew had occasioned some disquiet in the minds of all whom they had left behind them and the more, as, during the preceding dialogue, the uncle had more than once elevated his voice, so as to be heard downstairs which, though

When the good company, therefore, again assembled, there was a visible alteration in all their faces and the good humour which at their last meeting, universally shone forth in every countenance, was now changed into a much less agreeable aspect It was a change, indeed, common enough to the weather in this climate from sunshine to clouds, from June to December

This alteration was not, however, greatly remarked by any present, for as they were all now endeavouring to conceal their own thoughts, and to act a part, they became all too busily engaged in the scene to be spectators of it Thus neither the uncle nor nephew saw any

the features of the young one

Something like this, I believe, frequently happens, where the whole attention of two friends being engaged in the part which each is to act, in order to impose on the other, neither sees nor suspects the arts practised against himself, and thus the thrust of both (to borrow no improper metaphor on the occasion) alike takes place

From the same reason it is no unusual thing for both parties to be overreached in a bargain, though the one must be always the greater loser, as was he who sold a blind horse, and received a bad note in payment

Our company in about half an hour broke up, and the uncle carried off his nephew, but not before the latter had assured Miss Nancy, in a whisper, that he would attend her early in the morning and fulfil all his engagements

Jones, who was the least concerned in this scene saw the most He did indeed suspect the very fact, for, besides observing the great alteration in the behaviour of the uncle, the distance he assumed, and his overstrained civility to Miss Nancy the carrying off a bridegroom from his bride at that time of night was so extraordinary a proceeding that it could be accounted for only by imagining that young Nightingale had revealed the whole truth which the apparent openness of his temper, and his being flustered with liquor, made too probable

While he was reasoning with himself whether he should acquaint these poor people with his suspicion, the maid of the house informed him that a gentlewoman desired to speak with him —He went immediately out

mediately lost all consideration for every other will be informed after we have first related the many preceding steps which produced it, and those will be the subject of the following book.

BOOK XV

IN WHICH THE HISTORY ADVANCES ABOUT TWO DAYS

Chapter 1

Too short to need a preface

THERE are a set of religious or rather moral writers who teach that virtue is the certain road to happiness and vice to misery in this world A very wholesome and comfortable doctrine and to which we have but one objection namely that it is not true

Indeed if by virtue these writers mean the exercise of those cardinal virtues which like good housewives stay at home and mind only the business of their own family I shall very readily concede the point for so surely do all these contribute and lead to happiness that I could almost wish in violation of all the antient and modern sages to call them rather by the name of wisdom than by that of virtue for with regard to this life no system I conceive was ever wiser than that of the antient Epicureans who held this wisdom to constitute the chief good nor foolisher than that of their opposites those modern epicures who place all felicity in the abundant gratification of every sensual appetite

But if by virtue is meant (as I almost think it ought) a certain relative quality which is always busying itself without-doors and seems as much interested in pursuing the good of others as its own I cannot so easily agree that this is the surest way to human happiness because I am afraid we must then include poverty and contempt with all the mischiefs

many by the above virtue have brought themselves thither

I have not now leisure to enter upon so large a field of speculation as here seems opening upon me my design was to wipe off a doctrine that lay in my way since while Mr Jones was acting the most virtuous part imaginable in labouring to preserve his fellow creatures from destruction the devil or some other evil spirit one perhaps cloathed in human flesh was hard at work to make him completely miserable in the ruin of his Sophia

This therefore would seem an exception to the above rule if indeed it was a rule but as we have in our voyage through life seen so many other exceptions to it we chuse to dispute the doctrine on which it is founded, which we don t apprehend to be Christian which we are convinced is not true and which is indeed destructive of one of the noblest arguments that reason alone can furnish for the belief of immortality

But as the reader s curiosity (if he hath any) must be now awake and hungry we shall provide to feed it as fast as we can

Chapter 2

In which is opened a very black design against Sophia

I REMEMBER a wise old gentleman who used to say When children are doing nothing they are doing mischief I will not enlarge this quaint saying to the most beautiful part of the creation in general but so far I may be allowed that when the effects of female jealousy do not appear openly in their proper colours of rage and fury we may suspect that mischievous passion to be at work privately and attempting to undermine what it doth not attack above ground

This was exemplified in the conduct of Lady Bellaston who under all the smiles which she wore in her countenance concealed much indignation against Sophia and as she plainly saw that this young lady stood between her and the full indulgence of her desires she resolved to get rid of her by some means or other nor was it long before a very favourable opportunity of accomplishing this presented itself to her

The reader may be pleased to remember that when Sophia was thrown into that consternation at the playhouse by the wit and humour of a set of young gentlemen who call themselves the town we informed him that she had put herself under the protection of a young nobleman who had very safely conducted her to her chair

This nobleman who frequently visited Lady Bellaston had more than once seen Sophia there since her arrival in town and had conceived a very great liking to her which liking

as beauty never looks more amiable than in distress Sophia had in this fright so encreased that he might now without any great impropriety be said to be actually in love with her

It may easily be believed that he would not suffer so handsome an occasion of improving his acquaintance with the beloved object as now offered itself to elapse when even good breeding alone might have prompted him to pay her a visit

The next morning therefore after this accident he waited on Sophia with the usual compliments and hopes that she had received no harm from her last night s adventure

As love like fire when once thoroughly kindled is soon blown into a flame Sophia in a very short time compleated her conquest Time now flew away unperceived and the noble lord had been two hours in company with the lady before it entered into his head that he had made too long a visit Though this circumstance alone would have alarmed Sophia who was somewhat more a mistress of computation at present she had indeed much more pregnant evidence from the eyes of her lover of what past within his bosom nay though he did not make any open declaration of his passion yet many of his expressions were rather too warm and too tender to have been imputed to complacence even in the age when such complacence was in fashion the very reverse of which is well known to be the reigning mode at present

Lady Bellaston had been apprized of his lordship s visit at his first arrival and the length of it very well satisfied her that things went as she wished and as indeed she had suspected the second time she saw this young couple together This business she rightly I think concluded that she should by no means forward by mixing in the company while they were together she therefore ordered her servants that when my lord was going they should tell him she desired to speak with him and employed the intermediate time in meditating how best to accomplish a scheme which she made no doubt but his lordship would very readily embrace the execution of

Lord Fellamar (for that was the title of this young nobleman) was no sooner introduced to her ladyship than she attacked him in the following strain Bless me my lord are you here

der you are astonished at the length of my visit for I have staid above two hours, and I did not think I had staid above half a-one —— What am I to conclude from thence my lord? said she The company must be very agreeable which can make time slide away so very deceitfully —— Upon my honour said affecting a surprize I mean said he the lady I saw here the other day whom I had last night in my arms at the playhouse and to whom I have been making that unreasonable visit —— O my cousin Western! said she why that blazing star my lord is the daughter of a country booby squire and hath been in town about a fortnight for the first time —— Upon my soul said he I should swear she had been bred up in a court for besides her beauty I never saw anything so genteel so sensible so polite —— O brave! cries the lady my cousin hath you I find "—— Upon my honour answered he I wish she had for I am in love with her to distraction —— Nay my lord said she it is not wishing yourself very ill neither for she is a very great fortune I assure you she is an only child and her father s estate is a good £3000 a year Then I can assure you madam answered the lord I think her the best match in England In deed my lord replied she if you like her I heartily wish you had her If you think so kindly of me madam said he as she is a relation of yours will you do me the honour to propose it to her father? And are you to mention and yet it is one you will never be able to conquer You have a rival my lord

my heart which hath almost deprived me of being I'se my lord, said she "I should rather hope I had struck fire into you A and tal

ined you would have asked your rival s name that you might have immediately entered the lists with him I promise you madam answered he there are very few things I would the world He is a beggar a bastard a foundling a fellow in meaner circumstances than one of your lordship s footmen And is it possible cried he that a young creature with such perfections should think of bestowing herself so unworthily? Alas! my lord answered she consider the country—the bane of all young women is the country There they learn a set of romantic notions of love and I know not what folly which this town and good company can scarce eradicate in a whole winter Indeed madam replied my lord your cousin is of too immense a value to be thrown away such ruin as this must be prevented

Alas! cries she my lord how can it be prevented? The family have already done all in their power but the girl is I think intoxicated and nothing less than ruin will content her And to deal more openly with you I expect every day to hear she is run away with him What you tell me Lady Bellaston answered his lordship affects me most tenderly and only raises my compassion instead of lessening my adoration of your cousin Some means must be found to preserve so inestimable a jewel Hath your ladyship endeavoured to reason with her? Here the lady affected a laugh and cried My dear lord sure you know us better than to talk of reasoning a young woman out of her inclinations? These inestimable jewels are as deaf as the jewels they wear time my lord time is the only medicine to cure their folly but this is a medicine which I am certain she will not take nay I live in hourly horrors on her account In short nothing but violent methods will do What is to be done? cries my lord what methods are to be taken?—Is there any method upon earth?—Oh! Lady Bellaston! there is nothing which I would not undertake for such a reward —— I really know not answered the lady after a pause and then pausing again she cried out— Upon my soul I am at my attachment to my cousin (and to do her justice except in this silly inclination of which she will soon see her folly she is every way deserving) I think there may be one way indeed it is a very disagreeable one and what I am almost afraid to think of —It requires a great spirit I promise you I am not conscious, madam said he of any defect there nor am I I hope suspected of any such It must be an egregious defect indeed which could make me backward on this occasion Nay my lord" answered she I am so far from doubting you, I am much more inclined to doubt my own courage for I must run a monstrous risque In short I must place such a confidence in your honour as a wise woman will scarce ever place in a man on any consideration In this point likewise my lord very well satisfied her for his reputation was extremely clear and common fame did him no more than justice in speaking well of him Well then said she my lord —I—I vow I can t bear the apprehension of it —No it must not be ——At least every other method shall be tried Can you get rid of your engagements and dine here to-day? Your lordship will have an opportunity of seeing a little more of Miss Western —I promise you we have no time to lose Here will be nobody

Nay I will contrive some method to convince you of her attachment to this fellow My lord made proper compliments accepted the invitation and then they parted to dress it being now past three in the morning or to reckon by the old style in the afternoon

Chapter 3

A further explanation of the foregoing design

Though the reader may have long since concluded Lady Bellaston to be a member (and no inconsiderable one) of the great world she was in reality a very considerable member of the little world by which appellation was distinguished a very worthy and honourable society which not long since flourished in this kingdom

Among other good principles upon which this society was founded there was one very remarkable for as it was a rule of an honourable club of heroes who assembled at the close of the late war that all the members should every day fight once at least so twas in this that every member should within the twenty-four hours tell at least one merry fib which was to be propagated by all the brethren and sisterhood

Many idle stories were told about this society which from a certain quality may be perhaps not unjustly supposed to have come from the society themselves As that the devil was the president and that he sat in person in an elbow-chair at the upper end of the table but upon very strict inquiry I find there is not the least truth in any of those tales and that the assembly consisted in reality of a set of very good sort of people and the fibs which they propagated were of a harmless kind and tended only to produce mirth and good humour

Edwards was likewise a member of this comical society To him therefore Lady Bellaston applied as a proper instrument for her purpose and furnished him with a fib which he was to vent whenever the lady gave him her cue and this was not to be till the evening when all the company but Lord Fellamar and himself were gone and while they were engaged in a rubbers at whist

To this time then which was between seven and eight in the evening we will convey our reader when Lady Bellaston Lord Fellamar, Miss Western and Tom being engaged at whist, and in the last game of their rubbers Tom received his cue from Lady Bellaston which was I protest Tom you are grown intolerable lately you used to tell us all the news of the town and now you know no more of the world than if you lived out of it

Mr Edwards then began as follows The fault is not mine madam it lies in the dulness of the age that doth nothing worth talking of —O la! though now I think on t there hath a terrible accident befallen poor Colonel Wilcox —Poor Ned —You know him my lord everybody knows him faith I am very much concerned for him

"What is it pray? says Lady Bellaston

Why he hath killed a man this morning in a duel that s all

His lordship who was not in the secret asked gravely whom he had killed? To which Edwards answered A young fellow we none of us know a Somersetshire lad just came to town one Jones his name is, a near relation of one Mr Allworthy of whom your lord hip I believe hath heard I saw the lad lie dead in a coffee-house —Upon my soul he is one of the finest corpses I ever saw in my life

Sophia who had just began to deal as Tom had mentioned that a man was killed stopt her hand and listened with attention (for all stories of that kind affected her) but no sooner had he arrived at the latter part of the story than she began to deal again and having dealt three cards to one and seven to another and ten to a third at last dropt the rest from her hand and fell back in her chair

The company behaved as usually on these occasions The usual disturbance ensued, the usual assistance was summoned and Sophia at last as it is usual returned again to life and was soon after at her earnest desire led to her own apartment where at my lord s request, Lady Bellaston acquainted her with the truth attempted to carry it off as a jest of her own and comforted her with repeated assurances that neither his lordship nor Tom though she had taught him the story were in the true secret of the affair

There was no farther evidence necessary to convince Lord Fellamar how justly the case had been represented to him by Lady Bellaston and now at her return into the room a scheme was laid between these two noble persons which though it appeared in no very heinous light to his lordship (as he faithfully promised and faithfully resolved too to make the lady all the subsequent amends in his power by marriage) yet many of our readers we doubt not will see with just detestation

The next evening at seven was appointed for the fatal purpose when Lady Bellaston undertook that Sophia should be alone and his lordship should be introduced to her The whole family were to be regulated for the purpose most of the servants dispatched out of the house and for Mrs Honour who to prevent suspicion was to be left with her mistress till his lordship s arrival Lady Bellaston herself was to engage her in an apartment as distant as possible from the scene of the intended mischief and out of the hearing of Sophia

Matters being thus agreed on his lordship took his leave and her ladyship retired to rest highly pleased with a project of which she had no reason to doubt the success and which promised so effectually to remove Sophia from being any further obstruction to her amour with Jones by a means of which she should never appear to be guilty even if the fact appeared to the world but this she made no doubt of preventing by huddling up a marriage to which she thought the ravished Sophia would easily be brought to consent and at which all the rest of her family would rejoice

But affairs were not in so quiet a situation in the bosom of the other conspirator: his mind was tost in all the distracting anxiety so nobly described by Shakespear—pillow had placed the action itself in all its natural black colours before his eyes, with all the consequences which must, and those which might probably attend it, his resolution began to abate, or rather indeed to go over to the other side; and after a long conflict, which lasted a whole night, between honour and appetite, the former at length prevailed, and he determined to wait on Lady Bellaston, and to relinquish the design.

Lady Bellaston was in bed, though very late in the morning, and Sophia sitting by her bedside, when the servant acquainted her that Lord Fellamar was below in the parlour; upon which her ladyship desired him to stay, and that she would see him presently; but the servant was no sooner departed than poor Sophia began to intreat her cousin not to encourage the visits of that odious lord (so she called him, though a little unjustly) upon her account. 'I see his design,' said she; 'for he made downright love to me yesterday morning; but as I am resolved never to admit it, I beg your ladyship not to leave us alone together any more, and to order the servants that, if he inquires for me, I may be always denied to him.'

'La! child,' says Lady Bellaston, 'you country girls have nothing but sweethearts in your head; you fancy every man who is civil to you is making love. He is one of the most gallant young fellows about town, and I am convinced means no more than a little gallantry. Make love to you indeed! I wish with all my heart he would, and you must be an arrant mad woman to refuse him.'

'But as I shall certainly be that mad woman,' cries Sophia, 'I hope his visits shall not be intruded upon me.'

'O child!' said Lady Bellaston, 'you need not be so fearful; if you resolve to run away with that Jones, I know no person who can hinder you.'

'Upon my honour, madam,' cries Sophia, 'your ladyship injures me. I will never run away with any man; nor will I ever marry contrary ing, you may retire to your own apartment; for I am not frightened at his lordship, and must send for him up into my dressing room.'

Sophia thanked her ladyship, and withdrew; and presently afterwards Fellamar was admitted upstairs.

Chapter 4

When Lady Bellaston heard the young lord's scruples, she treated them with the same disdain with which one of those sages of the law called Newgate solicitors treats the qualms of conscience in a young witness. 'My dear lord,' said she, 'you certainly want a cordial. I must send to Lady Edgely for one of her best drams. Fie upon it! have more resolution. Are you frightened by the word rape? Or are you apprehensive——? Well! if the story of Helen was modern, I should think it unnatural. I mean the behaviour of Paris, not the fondness of the lady; for all women love a man of spirit. There is another story of the Sabine ladies—and that too, I thank heaven, is very antient. Your lordship, perhaps, will admire my reading; but I think Mr Hook tells us, they made tolerable good wives afterwards. I fancy few of my married acquaintance were ravished by their husbands.' 'Nay, dear Lady Bellaston,' cried he, 'don't ridicule me in this manner.' 'Why, my good lord,' answered she, 'do you think any woman in England would not laugh at you in her heart, whatever prudery she might wear in her countenance?——You force me to use a strange kind of language, and to betray my sex most abominably; but I am contented with knowing my intentions are good, and that I am endeavouring to serve my cousin; for I hereafter with having lost a man of spirit; for that his enemies allow this poor young fellow to be.'

Let those who have had the satisfaction of hearing reflections of this kind from a wife or a mistress declare whether they are at all sweetened by coming from a female tongue Certain it is they sunk deeper into his lordship than anything which Demosthenes or Cicero could have said on the occasion

Lady Bellaston perceiving she had fired the young lord s pride began now like a true orator to rouse other passions to its assistance My Lord says she in a graver voice you will be pleased to remember you mentioned this matter to me first for I would not appear to you in the light of one who is endeavouring to put off my cousin upon you Fourscore thousand pounds do not stand in need of an advocate to recommend them Nor doth Miss Western said he require any recommendation from her fortune for in my opinion no woman ever had half her charms Yes yes, my lord replied the lady looking in the glass "there have been women with more than half her charms I assure you not that I need lessen her on that account she is a most delicious girl that s certain and within these few hours she will be in the arms of one who surely doth not deserve her though I will give him his due I believe he is truly a man of spirit

I hope so, madam said my lord though I must own he doth not deserve her for unless heaven or your ladyship disappoint me she shall within that time be in mine

Well spoken my lord answered the lady I promise you no disappointment shall happen from my side and within this week I am convinced I shall call your lordship my cousin in public

The remainder of this scene consisted entirely of raptures excuses and compliments very pleasant to have heard from the parties but rather dull when related at second hand Here therefore we shall put an end to this dialogue and hasten to the fatal hour when every thing was prepared for the destruction of poor Sophia

But this being the most tragical matter in our whole history we shall treat it in a chapter by itself

Chapter 5

Containing some matters which may affect and others which may surprize the reader

THE CLOCK had now struck seven and poor Sophia alone and melancholy sat reading a tragedy It was the Fatal Marriage and she was now come to that part where the poor distrest Isabella disposes of her wedding ring

Here the book dropt from her hand and a shower of tears ran down into her bosom In this situation she had continued a minute when the door opened and in came Lord Fellamar Sophia started from her chair at his entrance and his lordship advancing forwards and making a low bow said I am afraid Miss Western I break in upon you abruptly Indeed my lord says she I must own myself a little surprized at this unexpected visit" "If this visit be unexpected madam answered Lord Fellamar my eyes must have been very faithless interpreters of my heart when last I had the honour of seeing you for surely you could not otherwise have hoped to detain my heart in your possession without receiving a visit from its owner Sophia confused as she was answered this bombast (and very properly I think) with a look of inconceivable disdain My lord then made another and a longer speech of the same sort Upon which Sophia trembling said Am I really to conceive your lordship to be out of your senses? Sure my lord there is no other excuse for such behaviour

I am indeed madam in the situation you suppose cries his lordship and sure you will pardon the effects of a frenzy which you yourself have occasioned for love hath so totally deprived me of reason that I am scarce accountable for any of my actions Upon my word my lord said Sophia I neither understand your words nor your behaviour Suffer me then madam cries he at your feet to explain both by laying open my soul to you and declaring that I doat on you to the highest degree of distraction O most adorable most divine creature what language can express the sentiments of my heart? I do assure you my lord said Sophia I shall not stay to hear any more of this Do not cries he think of leaving me thus cruelly could you know half the torments which I feel that tender bosom must pity what those eyes have caused Then fetching a deep sigh and laying hold of her hand he ran on for some minutes in a strain which would be little more pleasing to the reader than it was to the lady and at last concluded with a declaration That if he was master of the world he would lay it at her feet Sophia then forcibly pulling away her hand from his answered with much spirit I promise you sir your world and its master I should spurn from me with equal contempt" She then offered to go and Lord Fellamar again laying hold of her hand said Pardon me my beloved angel freedoms which nothing but

spair could have tempted me to take —Be lieve me could I have had any hope that my title and fortune neither of them inconsider able unless when compared with your worth would have been accepted I had in the hum blest manner presented them to your accept ance —But I cannot lose you —By heaven I will sooner part with my soul —You are you must you shall be only mine My lord says she I intreat you to desist from a vain pur suit for upon my honour I will never hear you on this subject Let go my hand my lord for I am resolved to go from you this moment nor will I ever see you more Then madam cries his lordship I must make the best use of this moment for I cannot live nor will I live without you — What do you mean my lord? said Sophia I will raise the family

I have no fear madam answered he but of losing you and that I am resolved to pre vent the only way which despair points to me —He then caught her in his arms upon which she screamed so loud that she must have alarmed some one to her assistance had not Lady Bellaston taken care to remove all ears

But a more lucky circumstance happened for poor Sophia another noise now broke forth which almost drowned her cries for now the whole house rang with Where is she? D—n me I ll unkennel her this instant Show me her chamber I say Where is my daughter? I know she s in the house and I ll see her if she s above ground Show me where she is —At which last words the door flew open and in came Squire Western with his parson and a set of myrmidons at his heels

How miserable must have been the condi tion of poor Sophia when the enraged voice of her father was welcome to her ears! Wel come indeed it was and luckily did he come for it was the only accident upon earth which could have preserved the peace of her mind from being for ever destroyed

Sophia notwithstanding her fright presently knew her father s voice and his lordship not withstanding his passion knew the voice of reason which peremptorily assured him it was not now a time for the perpetration of his vil lany Hearing therefore the voice approach and hearing likewise whose it was (for as the squire more than once roared forth the word daughter so Sophia in the midst of her strug gling cried out upon her father) he thought proper to relinquish his prey having only dis ordered her handkerchief and with his rude lips committed violence on her lovely neck

If the reader s imagination doth not assist me I shall never be able to describe the situa tion of these two persons when Western came into the room Sophia tottered into a chair where she sat disordered pale breathless burst ing with indignation at Lord Fellamar af frighted and yet more rejoiced at the arrival of her father

His lordship sat down near her with the bag of his wig hanging over one of his shoulders

he was amazed affrighted vexed and ashamed

As to Squire Western he happened at this time to be overtaken by an enemy which very frequently pursues and seldom fails to over take most of the country gentlemen in this kingdom He was literally speaking drunk which circumstance together with his natural impetuosity could produce no other effect than his running immediately up to his daugh ter upon whom he fell foul with his tongue in the most inveterate manner nay he had prob ably committed violence with his hands had not the parson interposed saying For heav en s sake sir animadvert that you are in the house of a great lady Let me beg you to miti gate your wrath it should minister a fulness of satisfaction that you have found your daugh ter for as to revenge it belongeth not unto us I discern great contrition in the countenance of the young lady I stand assured if you will forgive her she will repent her of all past of fences and return unto her duty

The strength of the parson s arms had at first been of more service than the strength of his rhetoric However his last words wrought some effect and the squire answered I ll for gee her if she wull ha un If wot ha un Sophy I ll forgee thee all Why dost unt speak? Shat ha un! d—n me shat ha un! Why dost unt an swer? Was ever such a stubborn tuoad?

Let me intreat you sir to be a little more moderate said the parson you frighten the young lady so that you deprive her of all power of utterance

Power of mine a— answered the squire

I humbly crave your pardon said the par son I assure your worship I meant no such matter

My Lady Bellaston now entered the room and came up to the squire who no sooner saw her than resolving to follow the instructions of his sister he made her a very civil bow in the rural manner and paid her some of his best compliments He then immediately proceeded to his complaints and said There my lady cousin there stands the most undutiful child in the worl l d a l ..ke r

I am persuaded you wrong my cousin I am sure she hath a better understanding I am convinced she will not refuse what she must be sensible is so much to her advantage

This was a wilful mistake in Lady Bellaston, for she well knew whom Mr Western meant though perhaps she thought he would easily be reconciled to his lordship s proposals

"Do you hear there quoth the squire what her ladyship says? All your family are for the match Come Sophy be a good girl and be dutiful and make your father happy

If my death will make you happy sir answered Sophia you will shortly be so

It s a lye Sophy it s a d--n d lye and you know it said the squire

Indeed Miss Western said Lady Bellaston you injure your father he hath nothing in view but your interest in this match and I and all your friends must acknowledge the highest honour done to your family in the proposal

Ay all of us quoth the squire nay it was no proposal of mine She knows it was her aunt proposed it to me first --Come Sophy once more let me beg you to be a good girl and gee me your consent before your cousin

"Let me give him your hand cousin said the lady It is the fashion now a-days to dispense with time and long courtships

"Pugh! said the squire what signifies time won t they have time enough to court afterwards? People may court very well after they have been a bed together

As Lord Fellamar was very well assured that he was meant by Lady Bellaston so never having heard nor suspected a word of Blifil he made no doubt of his being meant by the father Coming up therefore to the squire he said 'Though I have not the honour sir of being personally known to you yet as I find I have the happiness to have my proposals accepted let me intercede sir in behalf of the young lady that she may not be more solicited at this time

You intercede sir! said the squire, why who the devil are you?

Sir I am Lord Fellamar answered he and am the happy man whom I hope you have done the honour of accepting for a son in law

You are a son of a b---- replied the squire for all your laced coat You my son in law and be d--n d to you!

I shall take more from you sir than from any man answered the lord but I must inform you that I am not used to hear such language without resentment

Resent my a---- quoth the squire Don t think I am afraid of such a fellow as thee art! because hast got a spit there dangling at thy side Lay by your spit and I ll give thee enough of meddling with what doth not belong to thee I ll teach you to father in law me I ll lick thy jacket.

It s very well sir said my lord "I shall make no disturbance before the ladies I am very well satisfied Your humble servant sir Lady Bellaston your most obedient"

His lordship was no sooner gone than Lady Bellaston coming up to Mr Western said Bless me sir what have you done? You know not whom you have affronted he is a nobleman of the first rank and fortune and yesterday made proposals to your daughter and such as I am sure you must accept with the highest pleasure

Answer for yourself lady cousin said the

the trouble she hath given your ladyship with all my heart Lady Bellaston made a civil speech upon the word trouble to which the squire answered-- Why that s kind--and I would do as much for your ladyship To be sure relations should do for one another So I wish your ladyship a good night --Come madam you must go along with me by fair means or I ll have you carried down to the coach

Sophia said she would attend him without force but begged to go in a chair for she said she should not be able to ride any other way

Prithee cries the squire wout unt persuade me canst not ride in a coach wouldst? That s a pretty thing surely! No no I ll never let thee out of my sight any more till art married that I promise thee Sophia told him she saw he was resolved to break her heart O break thy heart and be d--n d quoth he if a good husband will break it I don t value a brass varden not a halfpenny of any unduti ful b—— upon earth He then took a violent hold of her hand upon which the parson once more interfered begging him to use gentle methods At that the squire thundered out a curse and bid the parson hold his tongue say ing At it in pulpit now? when art a got up there I never mind what dost say but i won t be priest ridden nor taught how to behave myself by thee I wish your ladyship a good night Come along Sophy be a good girl and all shall be well Shat ha un d—n me, shat ha un!

Mrs Honour appeared below stairs and with a low curtesy to the squire offered to at tend her mistress but he pushed her away saying Hold madam hold you come no more near my house And will you take my maid away from me? said Sophia Yes indeed madam will I cries the squire you need not fear being without a servant I will get you another maid and a better maid than this who I d lay five pounds to a crown is no more a maid than my grannum No no Sophy she shall contrive no more escapes I promise you He then packed up his daughter and the par son into the hackney coach after which he mounted himself and ordered it to drive to his lodgings In the way thither he suffered Sophia to be quiet and entertained himself with reading a lecture to the parson on good man ners and a proper behaviour to his betters

•

the confinement into which Sophia was going and as her project with Lord Fellamar had failed of success she was well contented that other violent methods were now going to be used in favour of another man

Chapter 6

By what means the squire came to discover his daughter

Though the reader in many histories is obliged to digest much more unaccountable appearances than this of Mr Western without any satisfaction at all yet as we dearly love to oblige him whenever it is in our power we shall now proceed to show by what method the squire discovered where his daughter was

In the third chapter then of the preceding book we gave a hint (for it is not our custom to unfold at any time more than is necessary for the occasion) that Mrs Fitzpatrick who was very desirous of reconciling her uncle and aunt Western thought she had a probable op-

much deliberation therefore she resolved to inform her aunt Western where her cousin was and accordingly she writ the following letter which we shall give the reader at length for more reasons than one

Honoured Madam

The occasion of my writing this will perhaps make a letter of mine agreeable to my dear aunt for the sake of one of her nieces though I have little reason to hope it will be so on the account of another

Without more apology as I was coming to throw my unhappy self at your feet I met by

•

nitely too much enough indeed to satisfy me that unless she is immediately prevented she is in danger of running into the same fatal mischief which by foolishly and ignorantly refusing your most wise and prudent advice I have unfortunately brought on myself)

In short I have seen the man, nay I was most part of yesterday in his company and a charming young fellow I promise you he is By what accident he came acquainted with me is too tedious to tell you now but I have this morning changed my lodgings to avoid him lest I should by my means discover my cousin for he doth not yet know where she is and it is adviseable he should not till my uncle hath secured her ——No time therefore is to be lost and I need only inform you that she is now with Lady Bellaston whom I have seen and who hath I find a design of concealing her from her family You know madam she is a strange woman but nothing could misbecome

ing you of the matter of fact

I hope madam the care which I have shewn on this occasion for the good of my family will recommend me again to the favour of a lady who hath always exerted so much zeal for the honour and true interest of us all and that it may be a means of restoring me to your friendship which hath made so great a part of my former and is so necessary to my future happiness

I am

with the utmost respect

honoured madam

your most dutiful obliged niece and most obedient humble servant

HARRIET FITZPATRICK

Mrs Western was now at her brother s house where she had resided ever since the flight of Sophia in order to administer comfort to the poor squire in his affliction Of this comfort which she doled out to him in daily portions we have formerly given a specimen

She was now standing with her back to the fire and with a pinch of snuff in her hand was dealing forth this daily allowance of comfort to the squire while he smoaked his afternoon pipe when she received the above letter which she had no sooner read than she delivered it to him saying There sir there is an account of your lost sheep Fortune hath again restored her to you and if you will be governed by my advice it is possible you may yet preserve her

The squire had no sooner read the letter than he leaped from his chair threw his pipe into the fire and gave a loud huzza for joy He then summoned his servants called for his boots and ordered the Chevalier and several other horses to be saddled and that parson Supple should be immediately sent for Having done this he turned to his sister caught her in his arms and gave her a close embrace saying Zounds! you don t seem pleased one would imagine you was sorry I have found the girl

Brother answered she the deepest politicians, who see to the bottom discover often a very different aspect of affairs, from what swims on the surface It is true indeed things do look rather less desperate than they did formerly in Holland when Lewis the Fourteenth was at the gates of Amsterdam but there is a delicacy required in this matter which you will pardon me brother if I suspect you want

sister cries the squire

law of the land I know I may take my own wherever I can find it Shew me my own daughter and if I don t know how to come at her I ll suffer you to call me a fool as long as I live There be justices of peace in London as well as in other places

I protest cries she you make me tremble for the event of this matter which if you will proceed by my advice you may bring to so good an issue Do you really imagine brother that the house of a woman of figure is to be attacked by warrants and brutal justices of the peace? I will inform you how to proceed As soon as you arrive in town and have got yourself into a decent dress (for indeed brother you have none at present fit to appear in) you must send your compliments to Lady Bellaston and desire leave to wait on her When you are admitted to her presence as you certainly will be and have told her your story and have made proper use of my name (for I think you just know one another only by sight though you are relations) I am confident she will withdraw her protection from my niece who hath certainly imposed upon her This is the only method —Justices of peace indeed do you im are above the law And what must I stand sending a parcel of compliments to a confounded whore that keeps away a daughter from her own natural father? I tell you sister I am not so ignorant as you think me——I know you would have women above the law but it is all a lye I heard his lordship say at size that no one is above the law But this of yours is Hanover law I suppose

Mr Western said she I think you daily improve in ignorance ——I protest you are grown an arrant bear

No more a bear than yourself sister Western said the squire — Pox! you may talk of your civility an you will I am sure you never you I have got more good manners than some folks "

Mr Western answered the lady you may say what you please je vous mesprise de tout mon cœur * I shall not therefore be angry —— Besides as my cousin with that odious Irish name justly says I have that regard for

* I despise you with all my heart honour and true interest of my family and that concern for my niece who is a part of it that I have resolved to go to town myself upon this occasion for indeed indeed brother you are not a fit minister to be employed at a polite court —Greenland—Greenland should always be the scene of the tramontane negociation

I thank Heaven cries the squire I don t

[illegible]

you are not angry for what I have said so I am not angry for what you have said Indeed

[illegible]

for my part I never bear malice and I like it very kind of you to go up to London for I never was there but twice in my life and then I did not stay above a fortnight at a time and to be sure I can t be expected to know much of the streets and the folks in that time I never denied that you know d all these matters better than I For me to dispute that would be all as one as for you to dispute the management of a pack of dogs or the finding a hare sitting with me — Which I promise you says she I never will — Well and I promise you returned he that I never will dispute the t other

Here then a league was struck (to borrow a phrase from the lady) between the contending parties and now the parson arriving and the horses being ready the squire departed having promised his sister to follow her advice and she prepared to follow him the next day

But having communicated these matters to the parson on the road they both agreed that the prescribed formalities might very well be dispensed with and the squire having changed his mind proceeded in the manner we have already seen

Chapter 7

In which various misfortunes befel poor Jones

AFFAIRS were in the aforesaid situation when Mrs Honour arrived at Mrs Miller s and called Jones out from the company as we have before seen with whom when she found herself alone she began as follows —

O my dear sir! how shall I get spirits to tell you you are undone sir and my poor lady s undone and I am undone Hath any thing happened to Sophia? cries Jones staring like a madman "All that is bad cries Honour Oh I shall never get such another lady! Oh that I should ever live to see this day! At these words Jones turned pale as ashes, trembled and stammered but Honour went on— O! Mr Jones I have lost my lady for ever! How? what! for Heaven s sake tell me O my dear Sophia! You may well call her so! said Honour she was the dearest lady to me I shall never have such another place —

D—n your place! cries Jones where is— what—what is become of my Sophia? As to be sure cries she servants may be d—n d It signifies nothing what becomes of them though they are turned away and ruined ever so much To be sure they are not flesh and blood like other people No to be sure it signifies nothing what becomes of them If you have any pity and compassion cries Jones I beg you will instantly tell me what hath happened to Sophia? To be sure I have more pity for you than you have for me answered Honour

I don t d—n you because you have lost the sweetest lady in the world To be sure you are worthy to be pitied and I am worthy to be pitied too for to be sure if ever there was a good mistress—— What hath happened cries Jones in almost a raving fit What?— What? said Honour Why the worst that [illegible]

knees in thanksgiving that it was no worse

No worse! repeated Honour what could be worse for either of us? He carried her off swearing she should marry Mr Blifil that s for your comfort and for poor me I am turned out of doors Indeed Mrs Honour answered Jones you frightened me out of my wits I imagined some most dreadful sudden accident had happened to Sophia something compared to which even seeing her married to Blifil would be a trifle but while there is life there are hopes my dear Honour Women in this land of liberty cannot be married by actual brutal force To be sure sir said she that s true There may be some hopes for you but alack a-day! what hopes are there for poor me? And to be sure sir you must be sensible I suffer all this upon your account All the quarrel the squire hath to me is for taking your part as I have done against Mr Blifil Indeed Mrs Honour answered he I am sensible of my obligations to you and will leave nothing in my power undone to make you amends Alas! sir said she what can make a servant amends for the loss of one place but the getting another altogether as good? Do not despair Mrs Honour said Jones I hope to reinstate you again in the same Alack a day s r said she how can I flatter myself with such hopes when I know it is a thing im possible? for the squire is so set against me and yet if you should ever have my lady as to be sure I now hopes heartily you will for you are a generous good natured gentleman and I am sure you loves her and to be sure she loves you as dearly as her own soul it is a mat ter in vain to deny it because as why every body that is in the least acquainted with my lady must see it for poor dear lady she can t dissemble and if two people who loves one another a n t happy why who should be so? Happiness don t always depend upon what people has besides my lady has enough for both To be sure therefore as one may say it would be all the pity in the world to keep two such loviers asunder nay I am convinced for my part you will meet together at last for if it is to be there is no preventing it If a marriage is made in heaven all the justices of peace upon earth can t break it off To be sure I wishes that parson Supple had but a little more spirit to tell the squire of his wickedness in endeavouring to force his daughter contrary to her liking but then his whole dependance is on the squire and so the poor gentleman though he is a very religious good sort of man and talks of the badness of such doings behind the squire s back yet he dares not say his soul is his own to his face To be sure I never saw him make so bold as just now I was afeard the squire would have struck him I would not have your honour be melancholy sir nor despair things may go better as long as you are sure of my lady and that I am certain you may be for she never will be brought to con sent to marry any other man Indeed I am ter ribly afeared the squire will do her a mischief in his passion for he is a prodigious passion ate gentleman and I am afeared too the poor lady will be brought to break her heart for she is as tender hearted as a chicken It is pity me thinks she had not a little of my courage If I was in love with a young man and my father offered to lock me up I d tear his eyes out but I d come at him but then there s a great for tune in the case which it is in her father's power either to give her or not that to be sure may make some difference

Whether Jones gave strict attention to all the foregoing harangue or whether it was for want of any vacancy in the discourse I can not determine but he never once attempted to answer nor did she once stop till Partridge came running into the room and informed him that the great lady was upon the stairs

Nothing could equal the dilemma to which Jones was now reduced Honour knew noth ing of any acquaintance that subsisted between him and Lady Bellaston and she was almost the last person in the world to whom he would have communicated it In this hurry and dis tress he took (as is common enough) the worst course and instead of exposing her to the lady which would have been of little consequence he chose to expose the lady to her he therefore resolved to hide Honour whom he had but just time to convey behind the bed and to draw the curtains

The hurry in which Jones had been all day engaged on account of his poor landlady and her family the terrors occasioned by Mrs Hon our and the confusion into which he was thrown by the sudden arrival of Lady Bellas ton had altogether driven former thoughts out of his head so that it never once occurred to his memory to act the part of a sick man which indeed neither the gaiety of his dress nor the freshness of his countenance would have at all supported

He received her ladyship therefore rather agreeably to her desires than to her expecta tions with all the good humour he could muster in his countenance and without any real or affected appearance of the least disorder

Lady Bellaston no sooner entered the room than she squatted herself down on the bed So my dear Jones said she "you find noth ing can detain me long from you Perhaps I ought to be angry with you that I have neither seen nor heard from you all day for I perceive your distemper would have suffered you to come abroad nay I suppose you have not sat in your chamber all day drest up like a fine lady to see company after a lying in but how ever don t think I intend to scold you for I never will give you an excuse for the cold be haviour of a husband by putting on the ill humour of a wife

Nay Lady Bellaston said Jones I am sure your ladyship will not upbraid me with neglect of duty when I only waited for orders Who my dear creature hath reason to com plain? Who missed an appointment last night and left an unhappy man to expect and wish and sigh and languish?"

Do not mention it, my dear Mr Jones " cried

she ' If you knew the occasion you would pity me In short it is impossible to conceive what women of condition are obliged to suffer from the impertinence of fools in order to keep up the farce of the world I am glad however, all your languishing and wishing have done you no harm for you never looked better in your life Upon my faith! Jones you might at this instant sit for the picture of Adonis

There are certain words of provocation which men of honour hold can properly be answered only by a blow Among lovers possibly there may be some expressions which can be answered only by a kiss Now the compliment which Lady Bellaston now made Jones seems to be of this kind especially as it was attended with a look in which the lady conveyed more soft ideas than it was possible to express with her tongue

Jones was certainly at this instant in one of the most disagreeable and distressed situations imaginable for to carry on the comparison we made use of before though the provocation was given by the lady Jones could not receive satisfaction nor so much as offer to ask it in the presence of a third person seconds in this kind of duels not being according to the law of arms As this objection did not occur to Lady Bellaston who was ignorant of any other woman being there but herself she waited some time in great astonishment for an answer from more tragical than this scene would have been if it had lasted much longer The lady had already changed colour two or three times had got up from the bed and sat down again while Jones was wishing the ground to sink under him or the house to fall on his head when an odd accident freed him from an embarrassment out of which neither the eloquence of a

Nightingale dead drunk or rather in that state of drunkenness which deprives men of the use of their reason without depriving them of the use of their limbs

Mrs Miller and her daughters were in bed and Partridge was smoaking his pipe by the kitchen fire so that he arrived at Mr Jones s chamber-door without any interruption This he burst open and was entering without any ceremony when Jones started from his seat and ran to oppose him which he did so effectually that Nightingale never came far enough within the door to see who was sitting on the bed

Nightingale had in reality mistaken Jones s apartment for that in which himself had lodged he therefore strongly insisted on coming in often swearing that he would not be kept from his own bed Jones however prevailed over him and delivered him into the hands of Partridge whom the noise on the stairs soon summoned to his master s assistance

And now Jones was unwillingly obliged to return to his own apartment where at the very instant of his entrance he heard Lady Bellaston venting an exclamation though not a very loud one and at the same time saw her flinging herself into a chair in a vast agitation which in a lady of tender constitution would have been an hysteric fit

In reality the lady frightened with the struggle between the two men of which she did not know what would be the issue as she heard Nightingale swear many oaths he would come to his own bed attempted to retire to her known place of hiding which to her great confusion she found already occupied by another

Is this usage to be borne Mr Jones? cries the lady — Basest of men!—What wretch is this to whom you have exposed me? ' Wretch' cries Honour bursting in a violent rage from her place of concealment— Marry come up! —Wretch forsooth?—as poor a wretch as I am I am honest this is more than some folks who are richer can say

Jones instead of applying himself directly to

as the most unfortunate man in the world and presently after addressing himself to Lady Bellaston he fell to some very absurd protestations of innocence By this time the lady having recovered the use of her reason which she had as ready as any woman in the world especially on such occasions calmly replied Sir you need make no apologies I see now who the person is I did not at first know Mrs Honour but now I do I can suspect nothing wrong between her and you and I am sure

Mrs Honour was altogether as placable as she was passionate Hearing therefore, Lady Bellaston assume the soft tone she likewise softened hers — 'I'm sure, madam," says she, 'I have been always ready to acknowledge your ladyship's friendships to me sure I never had so good a friend as your ladyship——and to be sure, now I see it is your ladyship that I spoke to I could almost bite my tongue off for very mad — I constructions upon your ladyship — to be sure it doth not become a servant as I am to think about such a great lady — I mean I was a servant for indeed I am nobody's servant now, the more miserable wretch is me — I have lost the best mistress——" Here Honour thought fit to produce a shower of tears — Don't cry, child,' says the good lady, 'ways perhaps may be found to make you amends Come to me to morrow morning" She then took up her fan which lay on the ground, and without even looking at Jones, walked very majestically out of the room there being a kind of dignity in the impudence of women of quality, which their inferiors vainly aspire to attain to in circumstances of this nature

Jones followed her downstairs often offering her his hand, which she absolutely refused him and got into her chair without taking any notice of him, as he stood bowing before her but to obtain a promise of most inviolable secrecy, and that she would the next morning endeavour to find out Sophia and bring him a further account of the proceedings of the squire

Thus ended this unfortunate adventure to the satisfaction only of Mrs Honour, for a secret (as some of my readers will perhaps acknowledge from experience) is often a very valuable possession and that not only to those who faithfully keep it but sometimes to such as whisper it about till it come to the ears of every one, except the ignorant person who pays for the supposed concealing of what is publickly known

Chapter 8

Short and sweet

strances for the hurricane which had happened the preceding night in his chamber These were, however, so gentle and so friendly professing, and indeed truly, to aim at nothing more than the real good of Mr Jones himself, that he, far from being offended thankfully received the admonition of the good woman

house

But though Mrs Miller did not refrain from a short expostulation in private at their first meeting, yet the occasion of his being summoned downstairs that morning was of a more now ready drest, and full as sober as many of my readers will think a man ought to be who receives a wife in so imprudent a manner.

And here perhaps it may be proper to ac seen him the night before

Now when the uncle had arrived at his lodgings with his nephew, partly to indulge his ordered wine to be set on the table with which he so briskly plyed the young gentleman, that this latter, who though not much used to drinking did not detest it so as to be guilty of disobedience or want of complacence by refusing was soon completely finished taken up with his own concerns

This sudden and afflicting news was no less father could have had but one objection, namely that he was worth nothing yet she had never thought proper to communicate her amour even to that father, and so artfully had she managed, that it had never been once suspected by any, till now that it was consummated

Old Mr. Nightingale no sooner received this account, than in the utmost confusion he ordered a post chaise to be instantly got ready, and having recommended his nephew to the care of a servant, he directly left the house, scarce knowing what he did, nor whither he went

The uncle thus departed, when the servant came to attend the nephew to bed, had waked him for that purpose, and had at last made the servant, who had received no strict orders to the contrary, readily complied and thus being conducted back to the house of Mrs Miller, he had staggered up to Mr Jones's chamber, as hath been before recounted

This bar of the uncle being now removed (though young Nightingale knew not as yet in what manner) and all parties being quickly ready, the mother, Mr Jones Mr. Nightingale, and his love, stept into a hackney-coach, which conveyed them to Doctors' Commons, where Miss Nancy was, in vulgar language, soon made an honest woman and the poor mother be came, in the purest sense of the word, one of the happiest of all human beings

And now Mr Jones having seen his good offices to that poor woman and her family brought to a happy conclusion, began to apply himself to his own concerns but here, lest many of my readers should censure his folly for thus troubling himself with the affairs of others, and lest some few should think he acted more disinterestedly than indeed he did, we think proper to assure our reader, that he was so far from being unconcerned in this mat ter that he had indeed a very considerable interest in bringing it to that final consummation

To explain this seeming paradox at once, he was one who could truly say with him in Terence, Homo sum humani nihil a me alie num puto * He was never an indifferent spectator of the misery or happiness of any one, and he felt either the one or the other in greater proportion as he himself contributed to either He could not therefore, be the in strument of raising a whole family from the lowest state of wretchedness to the highest pitch of joy without conveying great felicity to himself, more, perhaps than worldly men often purchase to themselves by undergoing the most severe labour and often by wading through the deepest iniquity

* I am a man I hold as indifferent nothing that concerns man

Those readers who are of the same complex ion with him will perhaps, think this short chapter contains abundance of matter while others may probably wish short as it is, that it had been totally spared as impertinent to the main design, which I suppose they con clude is to bring Mr Jones to the gallows or, if possible, to a more deplorable catastrophe.

Chapter 9

Containing love letters of several sorts

LETTER I

Surely I am under some strange infatuation, I cannot keep my resolutions a moment, how ever strongly made or justly founded Last night I resolved never to see you more, this morning I am willing to hear if you can, as you say, clear up this affair. And yet I know that to be impossible I have said everything to myself which you can invent —Perhaps not Perhaps your invention is stronger. Come to me, there fore, the moment you receive this If you can forge an excuse, I almost promise you to be lieve it Betrayed too—I will think no more —Come to me directly —This is the third letter I have writ, the two former are burnt —I am almost inclined to burn this too—I wish I may preserve my senses —Come to me presently.

LETTER II

If you ever expect to be forgiven, or even suffered within my doors, come to me this in stant

LETTER III

I now find you was not at home when my notes came to your lodgings The moment you receive this let me see you,—I shall not stir out, nor shall anybody be let in but yourself Sure nothing can detain you long

Jones had just read over these three billets, when Mr Nightingale came into the room "Well Tom" said he, "any news from Lady Bellaston, after last night's adventure?" (for ... that house friends Though I was too drunk to see her last night, I saw her at the masquerade Do you think I am ignorant who the queen of the fairies is?" "And did you really then know the lady at the masquerade?" said Jones "Yes upon my soul, did I,' said Nightingale, "and have given you twenty hints of it since, though you seemed always so tender on that point, that I would not speak plainly I fancy, my friend, by your extreme nicety in this matter, you are not so well acquainted with the character of the lady as with her person Don't be angry, Tom, but upon my honour, you are not the first young fellow she hath debauched Her reputation is in no danger, believe me"

Though Jones had no reason to imagine the lady to have been of the vestal kind when his amour began, yet, as he was thoroughly ignorant of the town, and had very little acquaintance in it, he had no knowledge of that character which is vulgarly called a demirep, that is to say, a woman who intrigues with every man she likes, under the name and appearance of virtue, and who, though some overnice ladies will not be seen with her, is visited (as they term it) by the whole town, in short, whom everybody knows to be what nobody calls her

When he found, therefore, that Nightingale was perfectly acquainted with his intrigue, and began to suspect that so scrupulous a delicacy as he had hitherto observed was not quite necessary on the occasion, he gave a latitude to his friend's tongue, and desired him to speak plainly what he knew, or had ever heard of the lady

Nightingale, who, in many other instances, was rather too effeminate in his disposition, had a pretty strong inclination to tittle tattle He had no sooner, therefore received a full liberty of speaking from Jones than he en tenderness for all women of condition to repeat We would cautiously avoid giving an opportunity to the future commentators on our works, of making any malicious application and of forcing us to be against our will the author of scandal, which never entered into our head

Jones having very attentively heard all that Nightingale had to say, fetched a deep sigh, which the other observing cried Heyday! why, thou art not in love, I hope! Had I imagined my stories would have affected you, I promise you should never have heard them" "O my dear friend'' cries Jones 'I am so entangled with this woman, that I know not how to extricate myself In love, indeed! no, my friend, but I am under obligations to her, and very great ones Since you know so much, I will be very explicit with you It is owing perhaps solely to her, that I have not, before this, wanted a bit of bread How can I possibly desert such a woman? and yet I must desert her or be guilty of the blackest treachery to one who deserves infinitely better of me than she can a woman, my Nightingale, for whom I have a passion which few can have an idea of I am half distracted with doubts how to act' "And is this other, pray, an honourable mistress?' cries Nightingale "Honourable!' answered Jones, 'no breath ever yet durst sully her reputation The sweetest air is not purer, the limpid stream not clearer, than her honour She is all over, both in mind and body, consummate perfection She is the most beautiful creature in the universe and yet she is mistress of such noble elevated qualities, that, though she is never from my thoughts, I scarce ever think of her beauty but when I see it'— "And can you my good friend,' cries Nightingale with such an engagement as this upon your hands, hesitate a moment about quitting such a—" 'Hold" said Jones, "no more abuse of her I detest the thought of ingratitude'

Pooh!' answered the other, 'you are not the first upon whom she hath conferred obligations of this kind She is remarkably liberal where she likes though let me tell you her favours are so prudently bestowed that they should rather raise a man's vanity than his gratitude In short, Nightingale proceeded so far on this head and told his friend so many stories of the lady, which he swore to the truth of, that he entirely removed all esteem for her from the breast of Jones and his gratitude was lessened in proportion Indeed he began to

tion turned towards Sophia her virtue, her

her if he could but find a handsome pretence, which being communicated to his friend, Nightingale considered a little, and then said "I have it, my boy! I have found out a sure method propose marriage to her and I would venture hanging upon the success Marriage? cries Jones Ay propose marriage answered Nightingale and she will declare off in a moment I knew a young fellow whom she kept formerly who made the offer to her in earnest and was presently turned off for his pains

Jones declared he could not venture the experiment Perhaps said he she may be less shocked at this proposal from one man than from another And if she should take me at my word where am I then? caught in my own trap and undone for ever No answered Nightingale not if I can give you an expedient by which you may at any time get out of the trap — What expedient can that be? replied Jones This answered Nightingale The young fellow I mentioned who is one of the most intimate acquaintances I have in the world is so angry with her for some ill offices she hath since done him that I am sure he would without any difficulty give you a sight of her letters upon which you may decently break with her and declare off before the knot is tied if she should really be willing to tie it which I am convinced she will not

After some hesitation Jones upon the strength of this assurance consented but as he swore he wanted the confidence to propose the matter to her face he wrote the following letter which Nightingale dictated —

Madam

I am extremely concerned that by an unfortunate engagement abroad I should have missed receiving the honour of your ladyship s command the moment they came and the delay which I must now suffer of vindicating myself to your ladyship greatly adds to this misfortune O Lady Bellaston! what a terror have I been in for fear your reputation should be exposed by these perverse accidents! There is one only way to secure it I need not name what that is Only permit me to say that as your honour is as dear to me as my own so my sole ambition is to have the glory of laying my liberty at your feet and believe me when I assure you I can never be made completely happy without you generously bestow on me a legal right of calling you mine for ever —I am, madam with most profound respect your ladyship s most obliged obedient humble servant

Thomas Jones

To this she presently returned the following answer

Sir

When I read over your serious epistle I could, from its coldness and formality have sworn that you already had the legal right you mention nay that we had for many years composed that monstrous animal a husband and wife Do you really then imagine me a fool? or do you fancy yourself capable of so entirely persuading me out of my senses that I should deliver my whole fortune into your power in order to enable you to support your pleasures at my expense? Are these the proofs of love which I expected? Is this the return for—? but I scorn to upbraid you and am in great admiration of your profound respect

P.S I am prevented from revising —Perhaps I have said more than I meant —Come to me at eight this evening

Jones by the advice of his privy-council replied

Madam

It is impossible to express how much I am shocked at the suspicion you entertain of me Can Lady Bellaston have conferred favours on a man whom she could believe capable of so base a design? or can she treat the most solemn tie of love with contempt? Can you imagine madam that if the violence of my passion in an unguarded moment overcame the tenderness which I have for your honour I would think of indulging myself in the continuance of an intercourse which could not possibly escape long the notice of the world and which when discovered must prove so fatal to your reputation? If such be your opinion of me I must pray for a sudden opportunity of returning those pecuniary obligations which I have been so unfortunate to receive at your hands and for those of a more tender kind I shall ever remain &c And so concluded in the very words with which he had concluded the former letter

The lady answered as follows

I see you are a villain! and I despise you from my soul If you come here I shall not be at home

Though Jones was well satisfied with his deliverance from a thraldom which those who have ever experienced it will I apprehend allow to be none of the lightest he was not however perfectly easy in his mind There was in this scheme too much of fallacy to satisfy one who utterly detested every species of fals hood or dishonesty nor would he indeed have submitted to put it in practice had he not been involved in a distressful situation where he was obliged to be guilty of some dis honour either to the one lady or the other his stratagem upon which he received many thanks and much applause from his friend He answered Dear Tom we have conferred very different obligations on each other To me you owe the regaining your liberty to you I owe the loss of mine But if you are as happy in the one instance as I am in the other I promise you we are the two happiest fellows in England.

The two gentlemen were now summoned down to dinner where Mrs Miller who per formed herself the office of cook had exerted her best talents to celebrate the wedding of her daughter This joyful circumstance she as cribed principally to the friendly behaviour of Jones her whole soul was fired with gratitude towards him and all her looks words and act ons were so busied in expressing it that her daughter and even her new son in law were very little objects of her consideration

Dinner was just ended when Mrs Miller re ceived a letter but as we have had letters enow in th s chapter we shall communicate its con tents in our next

Chapter 10

Consisting partly of facts and partly of observations upon them nephew Blifil and a desire to be accommo dated with his usual lodgings which were the first floor for himself and the second for his nephew

The chearfulness which had before dis played itself in the countenance of the poor woman was a little clouded on his occasion This news did indeed a good deal disconcert her To requite so disinterested a match with her daughter by presently turning her new son in law out of doors appeared to her very unjustifiable on the one hand and on the other she could scarce bear the thoughts of rule diametrically opposite to what is practised by most generous people He contrived on all occasions to hide his beneficence not only from the world but even from the object of it He constantly used the words Lend and Pay instead of Give and by every other meth od he could invent always lessened with his tongue the favours he conferred while he was heaping them with both hands When he set tled the annuity of £50 a year therefore on Mrs Miller he told her it was in considera tion of always having her first floor when he was in town (which he scarce ever intended to be) but that she might let it at any other time for that he would always send her a month s warning He was now however hur satisfied to have relinquished them on a less sufficient excuse than what Mrs Miller could now have made

But there are a sort of persons who as Prior excellently well remarks direct their conduct by something

Beyond the fix d and settled rules Of vice and virtue in the schools
Beyond the letter of the law

To these it is so far from being sufficient that their defence would acquit them at the Old Bailey that they are not even contented though conscience the severest of all judges short of th s mark they mope and pine are as uneasy and restless as a murderer who is afraid of a ghost or of the hangman

Mrs Miller was one of these She could not conceal her uneasiness at this letter with the contents of which she had no sooner acquainted the company and given some hints of her dis tress than Jones her good angel presently relieved her anxiety As for myself madam said he my lodging is at your service at a moment s warning and Mr Nightingale I am sure as he cannot yet prepare a house fit to receive his lady will consent to return to his new lodging whither Mrs Nightingale will

[illegible]

of Mrs Miller began again to glow with additional gratitude to Jones but perhaps it may be more difficult to persuade him that Mr Jones having in his last speech called her daughter Mrs Nightingale (it being the first time that agreeable sound had ever reached her ears) gave the fond mother more satisfaction and warmed her heart more towards Jones than his having dissipated her present anxiety

The next day was then appointed for the removal of the new married couple and of Mr Jones who was likewise to be provided for in the same house with his friend And now the serenity of the company was again restored and they past the day in the utmost chearfulness all except Jones who though he outwardly accompanied the rest in their mirth felt many a bitter pang on the account of his [illegible]

[illegible]

after Sophia and to make her report to him [illegible]

[illegible]

a letter with an assignation in it from Sophia and bore the disappointment as ill Whether this impatience arose from that natural weakness of the human mind which makes it desirous to know the worst and renders uncertainty the most intolerable of pains or whether he still flattered himself with some secret hopes we will not determine But that it might be the last whoever has loved cannot but know For of all the powers exercised by this passion over our minds one of the most wonderful is that of supporting hope in the midst of despair Difficulties improbabilities nay impossibilities are quite overlooked by it so that to any man extremely in love may be applied what Addison says of Cæsar

The Alps and Pyrenæans sink before him!

Yet it is equally true that the same passion will sometimes make mountains of molehills and produce despair in the midst of hope but these cold fits last not long in good constitutions Which temper Jones was now in, we leave the reader to guess having no exact information about it but this is certain that he had spent two hours in expectation when being unable any longer to conceal his uneasiness he retired to his room where his anxiety had almost made him frantick when the following letter was brought him from Mrs. Honour with which we shall present the reader verbatim et literatim

Sir

I shud sartenly haf kaled on you a cordin too mi prommiss haddunt itt bin that hur lashipp prevent mee for to bee sur, Sir you nose very well that evere persun must luk furst at ome and sartenly such anuther offar mite not have ever hapned, so as I shud ave bin justly to blam had I not excepted of it when her lashipp was so veri kind as to offar to mak mee hur one uman without mi ever askin any [illegible] on of thee best

[illegible]

that kine it as bin thru ignorens and I am hartili sorri for it I nose your onur to be a genteelman of more onur and onesty if I ever said ani such thing to repete it to hurt a pore servant that as alwais add thee gratest respect in thee wurld for ure onur To be sur won shud kepe wons tung within wons teeth for no boddi nose what may hapen and to bee sur if ani boddi ad tolde mee yesterday that I shud haf ben in so gud a plase to day I shud not haf beleeved it for to be sur I never was a drem I of any such thing nor shud I ever have soft after ani other bodi s plase but as her lashipp wass so kine of her one a cord too give it mee without askin to be sur Mrs Etoff herself nor no other boddi can blam mee for exceptin such a thing when it fals in mi waye I beg ure Onur not to menshion ani thing of what I haf sad for I wish ure Onur all thee gud luk in the wurld and I don t cuestion butt thatt u will haf Madam Sofia in the end butt ass to miself ure onur nose I kant bee of ani farder sarvis to u in that matar, nou bein under thee cumand off anuther parson and nott mi one mistress I begg ure Onur to say nothing of what past and belive me to be sir ure Onur's umble servant to cumand till deth

Honour Blackmore

Various were the conjectures which Jones entertained on this step of Lady Bellaston who in reality, had little farther design than to secure within her own house the repository of a secret, which she chose should make no farther progress than it had made already, but mostly, she desired to keep it from the ears of Sophia, for though that young lady was almost the only one who would never have repeated it again, her ladyship could not persuade herself of this, since, as she now hated poor Sophia with most implacable hatred, she conceived a reciprocal hatred to herself to be lodged in the tender breast of our heroine, where no such passion had ever yet found an entrance

While Jones was terrifying himself with the apprehension of a thousand dreadful machinations, and deep political designs which he imagined to be at the bottom of the promotion of Honour, Fortune, who hitherto seems to have been an utter enemy to his match with Sophia, tried a new method to put a final end to it, by throwing a temptation in his way, which in his present desperate situation it seemed unlikely he should be able to resist.

Chapter 11

Containing curious, but not unprecedented matter

There was a lady, one Mrs Hunt, who had often seen Jones at the house where he lodged being intimately acquainted with the women there, and indeed a very great friend to Mrs Miller Her age was about thirty, for she owned six and twenty, her face and person very good, only inclining a little too much to be fat She had been married young by her relations to an old Turkey merchant who having got a great fortune, had left off trade With him she lived without reproach but not without pain, in a state of great self-denial for about twelve years, and her virtue was rewarded by his dying and leaving her very rich The first year of her widowhood was just at an end, and she had past it in a good deal of retirement, seeing only a few particular friends

she resolved to please herself in her second husband as she had done her friends in the first From her the following billet was brought to Jones —

Sir,

From the first day I saw you, I doubt my eyes have told you too plainly that you were lodged given me such a character of you, and told me such proofs of your virtue and good neither my person, understanding, or that think it worth while to sacrifice that to possession of me, I am yours, if not, forget my weakness, and let this remain an eternal secret between you and

Arabella Hunt

At the reading of this Jones was put into a violent flutter His fortune was then at a very low ebb, the source being stopt from which hitherto he had been supplied Of all he had received from Lady Bellaston, not above five had independent of her father, went much against the delicacy both of his pride and his love This lady's fortune would have been exceeding convenient to him, and he could have no objection to her in any respect. On the contrary he liked her as well as he did any to continue longer engaged to a hopeless passion for him? Ought he not to do so in friendship to her? This notion prevailed some moments and he had almost determined to be false to her from a high point of honour but that refinement was not able to stand very long against the voice of nature, which cried in his heart th it such friendship was treason to love At last he called for pen ink, and paper, and writ as follows to Mrs Hunt —

MADAM

It would be but a poor return to the favour you have done me to sacrifice any gallantry to the possession of you and I would certainly do it, though I were not disengaged as at present I am, from any affair of that kind But I should not be the honest man you think me, if I did not tell you that my affections are engaged to another, who is a woman of virtue, and one that I never can leave, though it is probable I shall never possess her God forbid that in return of your kindness to me, I should do you such an injury as to give you my hand when I cannot give my heart No I had much rather starve than be guilty of that Even though my mistress were married to another, I would not marry you unless my heart had entirely effaced all impressions of her Be assured that your secret was not more safe in your own breast than in that of your most obliged and grateful humble servant,

T JONES

When our heroe had finished and sent this letter he went to his scrutore took out Miss Western s muff kissed it several times and then strutted some turns about his room with more satisfaction of mind than ever any Irish man felt in carrying off a fortune of fifty thousand pounds

Chapter 12

A discovery made by Partridge

WHILE Jones was exulting in the consciousness of his integrity Partridge came capering into the room as was his custom when he brought or fancied he brought any good tidings He had been dispatched that morning by his master with orders to endeavour by the servants of Lady Bellaston or by any other means to discover whither Sophia had been conveyed and he now returned and with a joyful countenance told our heroe that he had found the lost bird I have seen sir says he Black George the gamekeeper who is one of the servants whom the squire hath brought with him to town I knew him presently though I have not seen him these several years but you know sir he is a very remarkable man or to use a purer phrase he hath a most remarkable beard the largest and blackest I ever saw It was some time however before Black George could recollect me Well but what is your good news cries Jones what do you know of my Sophia? You shall know presently sir answered Partridge, I am coming to it as fast as I can You are so impatient sir you would come at the infinitive mood before you can get to the imperative As I was saying sir it was some time before he recollected my face — Confound your face! cries Jones what of my Sophia? Nay sir, answered Partridge I

rupted me but if you look so angry at me you will frighten all of it out of my head or to use a purer phrase out of my memory I never saw you look so angry since the day we left Upton which I shall remember if I was to live a thousand years' — Well pray go on in my remembrance the longest day I have to live Well but Black George? cries Jones.

and nothing alters a man so much as grief I have heard it will change the colour of a man s hair in a night However at last know me he did that s sure enough for we are both of an age and were at the same charity school George was a great dunce but no matter for that all men do not thrive in the world according to their learning I am sure I have reason to say so but it will be all one a thousand years hence Well sir where was I?—O—well we no sooner knew each other than after many hearty shakes by the hand we agreed to go to an alehouse and take a pot and by good luck the beer was some of the best I have met with since I have been in town Now sir I am coming to the point for no sooner did I name you and told him that you and I came to town together and had lived together ever since than he called for another pot and swore he would drink to your health and indeed he drank your health so heartily that I was overjoyed to see there was so much gratitude left in the world and after we had emptied that pot I said I would be my pot too and so we drank another to your

* I am not as I was

health and then I made haste home to tell you the news

What news? cries Jones you have not mentioned a word of my Sophia! Bless me! I had like to have forgot that Indeed we mentioned a great deal about young Madam Western and George told me all that Mr Blifil is coming to town in order to be married to her He had best make haste then says I or somebody will have her before he comes and indeed says I Mr Seagrim it is a thousand p ties somebody should not have her for he certainly loves her above all the women in the world I would have both you and she know that it is not for her fortune he follows her for I can assure you as to matter of that there is another lady one of much greater quality and fortune than she can pretend to who is so fond of somebody that she comes after him day and night

Here Jones fell into a passion with Partridge for having as he said betrayed him but the poor fellow answered he had mentioned no name Besides sir said he I can assure you George is sincerely your friend and wished Mr Blifil at the devil more than once nay he said he would do anything in his power upon earth to serve you and so I am convinced he will Betray you indeed! why I question whether you have a better friend than George upon earth except myself or one that would go farther to serve you

Well says Jones a little pacified you say this fellow who I believe indeed is enough inclined to be my friend lives in the same house with Sophia?

In the same house! answered Partridge why sir he is one of the servants of the family and very well drest I promise you he is if it was not for his black beard you would hardly know him

One service then at least he may do me says Jones sure he can certainly convey a letter to my Sophia cries

I

rst

Well then said Jones do you leave me at present and I will write a letter which you shall deliver to him to-morrow morning for I suppose you know where to find him

O yes sir answered Partridge I shall certainly find him again there is no fear of that The liquor is too good for him to stay away long I make no doubt but he will be there every day he stays in town

So you don t know the street then where my Sophia is lodged? cries Jones

Indeed sir I do says Partridge

What is the name of the street? cries Jones

The name sir? why here sir just by answered Partridge not above a street or two off I don t indeed know the very name for as he never told me if I had asked you know it might have put some suspicion into his head No no sir let me alone for that I am too cunning for that I promise you

Thou art most wonderfully cunning indeed replied Jones however I will write to my charmer since I believe you will be cunning enough to find him to morrow at the alehouse

And now having dismissed the sagacious Partridge Mr Jones sat himself down to write, in which employment we shall leave him for a time And here we put an end to the fifteenth book.

BOOK XVI

Containing the space of five days

Chapter 1

Of prologues

I have heard of a dramatic writer who used to say he would rather write a play than a prologue in like manner I think I can with less pains write one of the books of this history than the prefatory chapter to each of them

To say the truth I believe many a hearty curse hath been devoted on the head of that author who first instituted the method of pre fixing to his play that portion of matter which is called the prologue and which at first was part of the piece itself but of latter years hath had usually so little connexion with the drama before which it stands that the prologue to one play might as well serve for any other Those indeed of more modern date seem all to be written on the same three topics viz an abuse of the taste of the town a condemnation of all contemporary authors and an eulogium on the performance just about to be repre sented The sentiments in all these are very little varied nor is it possible they should and indeed I have often wondered at the great in vention of authors who have been capable of finding such various phrases to express the same thing

In like manner I apprehend some future historian (if any one shall do me the honour of imitating my manner) will after much scratching his pate bestow some good wishes on my memory for having first established these several initial chapters most of which like modern prologues may as properly be prefixed to any other book in this history as to that which they introduce or indeed to any other history as to this

But however authors may suffer by either of these inventions the reader will find sufficient emolument in the one as the spectator hath long found in the other

First it is well known that the prologue serves the critic for an opportunity to try his faculty of hissing and to tune his catcall to the best advantage by which means I have known those musical instruments so well pre-pared that they have been able to play in full concert at the first rising of the curtain

The same advantages may be drawn from these chapters in which the critic will be always sure of meeting with something that may serve as a whetstone to his noble spirit so that he may fall with a more hungry appe-tite for censure on the history itself And here his sagacity must make it needless to observe how artfully these chapters are calculated for that excellent purpose for in these we have always taken care to intersperse somewhat of the sour or acid kind in order to sharpen and stimulate the said spirit of criticism

Again the indolent reader as well as spec tator finds great advantage from both these for as they are not obliged either to see the one or read the others and both the play and the book are thus protracted by the former they have a quarter of an hour longer allowed them to sit at dinner and by the latter they have the advantage of beginning to read at the fourth or fifth page instead of the first a mat ter by no means of trivial consequence to per sons who read books with no other view than to say they have read them a more general motive to reading than is commonly imagined and from which not only law books and good books but the pages of Homer and Virgil of Swift and Cervantes have been often turned over

Many other are the emoluments which arise from both these but they are for the most part so obvious that we shall not at present stay to enumerate them especially since it occurs to us that the principal merit of both the pro-logue and the preface is that they be short

Chapter 2

A whimsical adventure which befel the squire with the distressed situation of Sophia

We must now convey the reader to Mr Western s lodgings which were in Piccadilly where he was placed by the recommendation of the landlord at the Hercules Pillars at Hyde Park Corner for at the inn which was the first he saw on his arrival in town he placed his horses and in those lodgings which were the first he heard of he deposited himself

Here when Sophia alighted from the hack ney coach which brought her from the house of Lady Bellaston she desired to retire to the apartment provided for her, to which her father very readily agreed and whither he attended her himself A short dialogue neither very material nor pleasant to relate minutely then passed between them in which he pressed her vehemently to give her consent to the marriage with Blifil who as he acquainted her was to be in town in a few days but instead of complying she gave a more peremptory and resolute refusal than she had ever done before This so incensed her father that after many bitter vows that he would force her to have him whether she would or no he departed from her with many hard words and curses locked the door and put the key into his pocket

While Sophia was left with no other company than what attend the closest state prisoner namely fire and candle the squire sat down to regale himself over a bottle of wine with his parson and the landlord of the Hercules Pillars who as the squire said would make an excellent third man and could inform them of the news of the town and how affairs went for to be sure says he he knows a great deal since the horses of many of the quality stand at his house

In this agreeable society Mr Western past that evening and great part of the succeeding day during which period nothing happened of sufficient consequence to find a place in this history All this time Sophia past by herself for her father swore she should never come out of her chamber alive unless she first consented to marry Blifil nor did he ever suffer the door to be unlocked unless to convey her food on which occasions he always attended himself

The second morning after his arrival while he and the parson were at breakfast together on a toast and tankard he was informed that a gentleman was below to wait on him

A gentleman! quoth the squire who the devil can he be? Do doctor go down and see who tis Mr Blifil can hardly be come to town yet—Go down do and know what his business is"

The doctor returned with an account that it was a very well-drest man and by the ribbon in his hat he took him for an officer of the army that he said he had some particular business which he could deliver to none but Mr Western himself

"An officer! cries the squire what can any such fellow have to do with me? If he wants an order for baggage-waggons I am no justice of peace here nor can I grant a warrant—Let un come up then if he must speak to me

A very genteel man now entered the room who having made his compliments to the squire and desired the favour of being alone with him delivered himself as follows—

Sir I come to wait upon you by the command of my Lord Fellamar but with a very different message from what I suppose you expect after what past the other night

My lord who? cries the squire I never heard the name o un

His lordship said the gentleman is willing to impute everything to the effect of liquor and the most trifling acknowledgment of that kind will set everything right for as he hath the most violent attachment to your daughter you sir are the last person upon earth from whom he would resent an affront and happy is it for you both that he hath given such public demonstrations of his courage as to be able to put up an affair of this kind without danger of any imputation on his honour All he desires therefore is that you will before me make some acknowledgment the slightest in the world will be sufficient and he intends this afternoon to pay his respects to you in order to obtain your leave of visiting the young lady on the footing of a lover

"I don t understand much of what you say sir said the squire but I suppose by what you talk about my daughter that this is the lord which my cousin Lady Bellaston mentioned to me and said something about his courting my daughter If so be that how that be the case—you may give my service to his lordship and tell un the girl is disposed of already

Perhaps sir said the gentleman "you are not sufficiently apprized of the greatness of this offer I believe such a person title, and fortune would be nowhere refused

Lookee sir answered the squire to be very plain my daughter is bespoke already but if she was not I would not marry her to a lord upon any account I hate all lords they are a parcel of courtiers and Hanoverians and I will have nothing to do with them"

Well sir said the gentleman if that is your resolution the message I am to deliver to you is that my lord desires the favour of your company this morning in Hyde Park

You may tell my lord" answered the squire that I am busy and cannot come I have enough to look after at home and can t stir abroad on any account"

"I am sure sir" quoth the other "you a too much a gentleman to send such a message you will not I am convinced have it said of you that after having affronted a noble peer, you refuse him satisfaction His lordship would have been willing from his great regard to the young lady to have made up matters in another way but unless he is to look on you as a father his honour will not suffer his putting up such an indignity as you must be sensible you offered him

I offered him! cries the squire 'it is a d—n d lie! I never offered him anything

Upon these words the gentleman returned a very short verbal rebuke and this he accompanied at the same time with some manual remonstrances which no sooner reached the ears of Mr Western than that worthy squire began to caper very briskly about the room bellowing at the same time with all his might as if desirous to summon a greater number of spectators to behold his agility

The parson who had left great part of the tankard unfinished was not retired far he murder me—for he hath fallen upon me with tell me I lyed?

No as I hope to be saved answered the squire —I believe I might say Twas a lie that I had offered any affront to my lord—but I never said the word you lie —I understand have dared strike me I d have knocked thy lantern jaws about thy ears Come down into yard this minute and I ll take a bout with thee at single stick for a broken head that I will or I will go into naked room and box thee for a belly full At unt half a man at unt I m sure

The captain with some indignation replied I see sir you are below my notice and I shall inform his lordship you are below his I am sorry I have dirtied my fingers with you At which words he withdrew the parson interposing to prevent the squire from stopping him in which he easily prevailed as the other though he made some efforts for the purpose did not seem very violently bent on success However when the captain was departed the squire sent many curses and some menaces after him but as these did not set out from his lips till the officer was at the bottom of the stairs and grew louder and louder as he was more and more remote they did not reach his ears or at least did not retard his departure.

Poor Sophia however who in her prison heard all her father s outcries from first to last, began now first to thunder with her foot and afterwards to scream as loudly as the old gentleman himself had done before though in a much sweeter voice These screams soon silenced the squire and turned all his consideration towards his daughter whom he loved so tenderly that the least apprehension of any harm happening to her threw him presently into agonies for except in that single instance in which the whole future happiness of her life was concerned she was sovereign mistress of his inclinations

Having ended his rage against the captain with swearing he would take the law of him the squire now mounted upstairs to Sophia whom as soon as he had unlocked and opened the door he found all pale and breathless. The moment however that she saw her father she collected all her spirits and catching him hold by the hand she cryed passionately O my dear sir I am almost frightened to death! I hope to heaven no harm hath happened to you No no cries the squire no great harm The rascal hath not hurt me much but rat me if I don t ha the la o un Pray dear sir says she tell me what s the matter who is it that hath insulted you? I don t know the name o un answered Western some vine I question whether he had got a voot of land in the world But dear sir cries she what was the occasion of your quarrel? What should it be Sophy answered the squire but about you Sophy? All my misfortunes are about you you will be the death of your poor father at last Here s a varlet of a lord the Lord knows who forsooth! who hath a taan a liking to you and because I would not gi un my consent he sent me a kallenge Come do be a good girl Sophy and put an end to all your father s troubles come do consent to ha un he will be in town within this day or two do but promise me to marry un as soon as he comes and you will make me the happiest man in the world and I will make you the happiest woman you shall have the finest cloaths in London and the finest jewels and a coach and six at your command I promised Allworthy already to give up half my estate—od rabbet it! I should hardly stick at giving up the whole Will my papa be so kind says she as to hear me speak? — Why wout ask Sophy? cries he when dost know I had rather hear thy voice than the musick of the best pack of dogs in England —Hear thee my dear litle girl! I hope I shall hear thee as long as I live for if I was ever to lose that pleasure I would not gee a brass varden to live a moment longer Indeed Sophy you do not know how I love you indeed you don t or you never could have run away and left your poor father who hath no other joy no other comfort upon earth but his little Sophy At these words the tears stood in his eyes and Sophia (with the tears streaming from hers) answered Indeed my dear papa I know you have loved me tenderly and heaven is my witness how sincerely I have returned your affection nor could anything but an apprehension of being forced into the arms of this man have driven me to run from a father whom I love so passionately that I would with pleasure sacrifice my life to his happiness nay I have endeavoured to reason myself into doing more and had almost worked up a resolution to endure the most miserable of all lives to comply with your inclination It was that resolution alone to which I could not force my mind nor [illegible]

[illegible] it proceeded If my father s life [illegible] health or any real happiness of his was at stake here stands your resolved daughter may heaven blast me if there is a misery I would not suffer to preserve you!—No that most detested most loathsome of all lots would I embrace I would give my hand to Blifil for your sake — I tell thee it will preserve me answers the father it will give me health happiness life every thing —Upon my soul I shall die if dost refuse me I shall break my heart I shall upon my soul — Is it possible says she you can have such a desire to make me miserable? — I tell thee noa answered he loudly d—n me if there is a thing upon earth I would not do to see thee happy — And will not my dear papa allow me to have the least knowledge of what will make me so? If it be true that happiness consists in opinion what must be my condition when I shall think myself the most miserable of all the wretches upon earth? Better think yourself so said he than know it by being married to a poor bastardly vagabond.

If it will content you sir said Sophia I will give you the most solemn promise never to marry him nor any other while my papa lives without his consent Let me dedicate my whole life to your service let me be again your poor Sophy and my whole business and pleasure be as it hath been to please and divert you Lookee Sophy answered the squire I am not to be choused in this manner Your aunt Western would then have reason to think me the fool she doth No no Sophy I d have you to know I have a got more wisdom and know more of the world than to take the word of a woman in a matter where a man is concerned How sir have I deserved this want of confidence? said she have I ever broke a single promise to you? or have I ever been found guilty of a falsehood from my cradle?

Lookee Sophy cries he that s neither here nor there I am determined upon this match and have him you shall d n me if sh it unt D—n me if shat unt though dost hang thyself the next morning At repeating which words he clinched his fist knit his brows bit his lips [illegible]

[illegible] viewing the agonies of a tender [illegible] taking her last farewell of her [illegible] band or rather he looked [illegible]

[illegible] compunction with [illegible] innocent whom [illegible] bands falls into fits [illegible] what is called [illegible] semblance would [illegible] bawd hath an [illegible] the father [illegible] think otherwise [illegible] have [illegible] urging his [illegible] tution

In this [illegible] he left his [illegible] and depar[illegible] a very [illegible] on the [illegible] he locked [illegible] returned to [illegible]

he durst in behalf of the young lady which though perhaps it was not quite so much as his duty required yet was it sufficient to throw the squire into a violent rage and into many indecent reflections on the whole body of the clergy which we have too great an honour for that sacred function to commit to paper

Chapter 3

What happened to Sophia during her confinement

THE landlady of the house where the squire lodged had begun very early to entertain a strange opinion of her guests However, as she was informed that the squire was a man of vast fortune and as she had taken care to exact a very extraordinary price for her rooms she did not think proper to give any offence for though she was not without some concern for the confinement of poor Sophia of whose great sweetness of temper and affability the maid of the house had made so favourable a report which was confirmed by all the squire s servants yet she had much more concern for her own interest than to provoke one whom as she said she perceived to be a very nastish kind of a gentleman

Though Sophia eat but little yet she was regularly served with her meals indeed I believe if she had liked any one rarity that the squire however angry would have spared neither pains nor cost to have procured it for her since however strange it may appear to some of my readers he really doated on his daughter and to give her any kind of pleasure was the highest satisfaction of his life

The dinner hour being arrived Black George carried her up a pullet the squire himself (for he had sworn not to part with the key) attending the door As George deposited the dish some compliments passed between him and Sophia (for he had not seen her since she left the country and she treated every servant with more respect than some persons shew to those who are in a very slight degree their inferiors) Sophia would have had him take the pullet back saying she could not eat but George begged her to try and particularly recommended to her the eggs of which he said it was full

All this time the squire was waiting at the door but George was a great favourite with his master as his employment was in concerns of the highest nature namely about the game and was accustomed to take many liberties He

which he received only a good humoured rebuke at the door when he returned

The eggs of pullets partridges pheasants, &c were as George well knew the most favourite dainties of Sophia It was therefore no wonder that he who was a very good natured fellow should take care to supply her with this kind of delicacy at a time when all the servants in the house were afraid she would be starved for she had scarce swallowed a whose appetite it often renders sharper than it can be rendered by the air on Bansted Downs or Salisbury Plain yet the sublimest to dissect the fowl which she found to be as full of eggs as George had reported it

But if she was pleased with these it contained something which would have delighted the Royal Society much more for if a fowl with three legs be so invaluable a curiosity when perhaps time hath produced a thousand such at what price shall we esteem a bird which so totally contradicts all the laws of animal œconomy as to contain a letter in its belly? Ovid tells us of a flower into which Hyacinthus was metamorphosed that bears letters on its leaves which Virgil recommended as a miracle to the Royal Society of his day but no age nor nation hath ever recorded a bird with a letter in its maw

But though a miracle of this kind might have engaged all the Academies des Sciences in Europe and perhaps in a fruitless inquiry yet the reader by barely recollecting the last dialogue which passed between Messieurs Jones and Partridge will be very easily satisfied from whence this letter came and how it before her no sooner saw the letter than she immediately snatched it up tore it open and read as follows —

MADAM

Was I not sensible to whom I have the honour of writing I should endeavour, however difficult, to paint the horrors of my mind at the account brought me by Mrs Honour, but as tenderness alone can have any true idea of the pangs which tenderness is capable of feeling so can this most amiable quality, which my Sophia possesses in the most eminent degree, sufficiently inform her what her Jones must have suffered on this melancholy occasion Is there a circumstance in the world which can heighten my agonies, when I hear of any misfortune which hath befallen you? Surely there is one only, and with that I am arcursed It is, my Sophia, the dreadful consideration that I am myself the wretched cause Perhaps I here do myself too much honour, but none will envy me an honour which costs me so extremely dear Pardon me this presumption, and pardon me a greater still, if I ask you, whether my advice, my assistance, my presence, my absence, my death, or my tortures can bring you any relief? Can the most perfect admiration, the most watchful observance, the most ardent love, the most melting tenderness, the most resigned submission to your will, make you amends for what you are to sacrifice to my happiness? If they can, fly, my lovely angel, to those arms which are ever open to receive and protect you, and to which, whether you bring yourself alone, or the riches of the world with you is, in my opinion, an alternative not worth regarding If, on the contrary, wisdom shall predominate, and, on the most mature reflection, inform you, that the sacrifice is too great, and if there be no way left to reconcile your father, and restore the peace of your dear mind, but by abandoning me, I conjure you drive me for ever from your thoughts, exert your resolution, and let no compassion for my sufferings bear the least weight in that tender bosom Believe me, madam, I so sincerely love you better than myself, that my great and principal end is your happiness My first wish (why would not fortune indulge me in it?) was, and pardon me if I say, still is, to see you every moment the happiest of women, my second wish is to hear you are so, but no misery on earth can equal mine, while I think you owe an uneasy moment to him who is, in every sense, and to every purpose, your devoted,

Madam,

Thomas Jones

What Sophia said, or did or thought upon this letter, how often she read it or whether more than once shall all be left to our reader's imagination. The answer to it he may perhaps see hereafter, but not at present for this reason, among others, that she did not now write any, and that for several good causes one of which was this, she had no paper, pen, nor ink

In the evening while Sophia was meditating on the letter she had received, or on some thing else, a violent noise from below disturbed her meditations This noise was no other than a round bout at altercation between two persons One of the combatants by his voice, she immediately distinguished to be her father, but she did not so soon discover the shriller pipes to belong to the organ of her aunt Western who was just arrived in town, where having by means of one of her servants, who stopt at the Hercules Pillars learned where her brother lodged, she drove directly to his lodgings

We shall therefore take our leave at present of Sophia, and, with our usual good-breeding, attend her ladyship

Chapter 4

In which Sophia is delivered from her confinement

The squire and the parson (for the landlord was now otherwise engaged) were smoaking their pipes together, when the arrival of the lady was first signified The squire no sooner heard her name, than he immediately ran down to usher her upstairs for he was a great observer of such ceremonials, especially to his sister, of whom he stood more in awe than of any other human creature though he never would own this, nor did he perhaps know it himself worse than ever La brother how could you get into this odious place? no person of condition I dare swear ever set foot here before ' I don t know " cries the squire "I think they do well enough it was landlord recommended them I thought as he knew most of the quality he could best shew me where to get among um ' 'Well and where s my niece?' says the lady "have you been to wait upon Lady Bellaston yet?' "Ay ay " cries the squire, "your niece is safe enough, she is upstairs in chamber " "How! ' answered the lady, "is my ni in this house and does she not know being here? No nobody can well get to her says the squire for she is under lock and key I have her safe I fetched her from my lady cousin the first night I came to town and I have taken care o her ever since she is as secure as a fox in a bag I promise you

Good heaven! returned Mrs Western what do I hear? I thought what a fine piece of work would be the consequence of my consent to your coming to town yourself! nay it was in deed your own headstrong will nor can I charge myself with having ever consented to it Did not you promise me brother that you would take none of these headstrong measures? Was it not by these headstrong measures that you forced my niece to run away from you in the country? Have you a mind to oblige her to take such another step? Z——ds and the devil! cries the squire dashing his pipe on the ground did ever mortal hear the like? when I expected you would have commended me for all I have done to be fallen upon in this manner! How brother! said the lady have I ever given you the least reason to imagine I should commend you for locking up your daughter? Have I not often told you that women in a free country are not to be treated with such arbitrary power? We are as free as the men and I heartily wish I could not say we deserve that freedom better If you expect I should stay a moment longer in this wretched house or that I should ever own you again as my relation or that I should ever trouble myself again with the affairs of your family I insist upon it that my niece be set at liberty this instant This she spoke with so commanding an air standing with her back to the fire with one hand behind her and a pinch of snuff in the other that I question whether Thalestris at the head of her Amazons ever made a more tremendous figure It is no wonder therefore that the poor squire was not proof against the awe which she inspired "There he cried throwing down the key there it is do whatever you please I intended only to have kept her up till Blifil came to town which can t be long and now if any harm happens in the mean time remember who is to be blamed for it

I will answer it with my life cries Mrs Western but I shall not intermeddle at all unless upon one condition and that is that you will commit the whole entirely to my care without taking any one measure yourself unless I shall eventually appoint you to act If you ratify these prel min mes brother I yet will endeavour to preserve the honour of your family if not I shall continue in a neutral state

I pray you good sir said the parson permit yourself this once to be admonished by her ladyship peradventure by communing with young Madam Sophia she will effect more than you have been able to perpetrate by more rigorous measures

What dost thee open upon me? cries the squire if thee dost begin to babble I shall whip thee in presently

Fie brother answered the lady is this language to a clergyman? Mr Supple is a man of sense and gives you the best advice and the whole world I believe will concur in his opinion but I must tell you I expect an immediate [illegible]

then I here before Mr Supple evacuate the garrison and renounce you and your family for ever

"I pray you let me be a mediator cries the parson let me supplicate you'

Why there lies the key on the table cries the squire She may take un up if she pleases who hinders her?

No brother answered the lady "I insist on the formality of its being delivered me with a full ratification of all the concessions stipulated

Why then I will deliver it to you —There tis cries the squire I am sure sister you can t accuse me of ever denying to trust my daughter to you She hath a lived wi you a whole year and muore to a time without my ever zeeing her

And it would have been happy for her answered the lady if she had always lived with me Nothing of this kind would have happened under my eye

Ay certainly cries he I only am to blame

Why you are to blame brother answered she I have been often obliged to tell you so and shall always be obliged to tell you so However I hope you will now amend and gather so much experience from past errors as not to defeat my wisest machinations by your blunders Indeed brother you are not qu il fied for these negociations All your whole scheme of politics is wrong I once more therefore insist that you do not intermeddle Remember only what is past ——

Z——ds and bl—d sister cries the squire what [illegible]

could put any human creature into a pass on but you are so wrongheaded every way

Let me beg you madam said the parson not to irritate his worship

Irritate him? said the lady sure you are as great a fool as himself Well brother since you have promised not to interfere I will once more undertake the management of my niece Lord have mercy upon all affairs which are under the directions of men! The head of one woman is worth a thousand of yours And now having summoned a servant to show her to Sophia she departed bearing the key with her

She was no sooner gone than the squire (having first shut the door) ejaculated twenty bitches and as many hearty curses against her not sparing himself for having ever thought of her estate but added Now one hath been a slave so long it would be pity to lose it at last for want of holding out a little longer The bitch can t live for ever and I know I am down for it upon the will

The parson greatly commended this resolu tion and now the squire having ordered in another bottle which was his usual method when anything either pleased or vexed him did by drinking plentifully of this medicinal julap so totally wash away his choler that his temper was become perfectly placid and serene when Mrs Western returned with Sophia into the room The young lady had on her hat and capuchin and the aunt acquainted Mr Western that she intended to take her niece with her to her own lodgings for indeed brother says she these rooms are not fit to receive a Christian soul in the most sensible women in the world

Very well madam, quoth Western what [illegible]

To this cries the parson I am ready to bear testimony

Nay brother says Mrs Western I have always I m sure given you as favourable a character You must own you have a little too much hastiness in your temper but when you will allow yourself time to reflect I never knew a man more reasonable

Why then sister if you think so said the squire here s your good health with all my heart I am a little passionate sometimes but I scorn to bear any malice Sophy do you be a good girl and do everything your aunt orders you

I have not the least doubt of her answered Mrs Western She hath had already an ex ample before her eyes in the behaviour of that wretch her cousin Harriet who ruined herself by neglecting my advice O brother what think you? You was hardly gone out of hear ing when you set out for London when who should arrive but that impudent fellow with the odious Irish name--that Fitzpatrick He broke in abruptly upon me without notice or made him very little answer and delivered him the letter from his wife which I bid him answer himself I suppose the wretch will en deavour to find us out but I beg you will not see her for I am determined I will not

I zee her! answered the squire you need not fear me I ll ge no encouragement to such undutiful wenches It is well for the fellow her husband I was not at huome Od rabbit it he should have taken a dance thru the horse-pond I promise un You zee Sophy what undutifulness brings volks to You have an example in your own family

Brother cries the aunt you need not shock my niece by such odious repetitions Why will you not leave everything entirely to me? Well well I wull I wull said the squire

And now Mrs Western luckily for Sophia put an end to the conversation by ordering chairs to be called I say luckily for had it continued much longer fresh matter of dis sension would most probably have arisen be tween the brother and sister between whom education and sex made the only difference for both were equally violent and equally posi tive they had both a vast affection for Sophia and both a sovereign contempt for each other

Chapter 5

In which Jones receives a letter from Sophia and goes to a play with Mrs Miller and Partridge

The arrival of Black George in town and the good offices which that grateful fellow had promised to do for his old benefactor greatly comforted Jones in the midst of all the anxiety and uneasiness which he had suffered on the account of Sophia from whom by the means of the said George he received the following answer to his letter which Sophia to whom the use of pen ink and paper was restored with her liberty wrote the very evening when she departed from her confinement

SIR

As I do not doubt your sincerity in what you write, you will be pleased to hear that some of my afflictions are at an end by the arrival of my aunt Western with whom I am at present and with whom I enjoy all the liberty I can desire One promise my aunt hath in sted on my making which is that I will not see or converse with any person without her knowledge and consent This promise I an omission from forgetfulness or this per haps is included in the word conversing How ever as I cannot but consider this as a breach of her generous confidence in my honour you cannot expect that I shall after this continue to write myself or to receive letters without her knowledge A promise is with me a very sacred thing and to be extended to everything understood from it as well as to what is ex pressed by it and this consideration may per haps on reflection afford you some comfort But why should I mention a comfort to you of this kind for though there is one thing in which I can never comply with the best of fathers yet am I firmly resolved never to act in defiance of him or to take any step of con sequence without his consent A firm persua sion of this must teach you to divert your thoughts from what fortune hath (perhaps) made impossible This your own interest per suades you. This may reconcile I hope Mr Allworthy to you and if it will you have my injunctions to pursue it Accidents have laid some obligations on me and your good inten tions probably more Fortune may perhaps be some time kinder to us both than at present Believe this that I shall always think of you as I think you deserve, and am,

Sir

Your obliged humble servant

SOPHIA WESTERN

I charge you write to me no more—at present at least, and accept this which is now of no service to me, which I know you must want, and think you owe the trifle only to that for tune by which you found it *

A child who hath just learnt his letters would have spelt this letter out in less time than Jones took in reading it The sensations it occasioned were a mixture of joy and grief somewhat like what divide the mind of a good man when he peruses the will of his deceased friend in which a large legacy which his dis tresses make the more welcome is bequeathed to him Upon the whole however he was more pleased than displeased and indeed the reader may probably wonder that he was displeased at all but the reader is not quite so much in love as was poor Jones and love is a disease which though it may in some in stances resemble a consumption (which it

tom in a favourable light

One thing gave him complete satisfaction which was that his mistress had regained her liberty and was now with a lady where she might at least assure herself of a decent treat ment Another comfortable circumstance was the reference which she made to her promise of never marrying any other man for however disinterested he might imagine his passion and notwithstanding all the generous over tures made in his letter I very much question whether he could have heard a more afflicting piece of news than that Sophia was married from the flesh and is indeed entirely and purely spiritual is a gift confined to the female part of the creation many of whom I have heard declare (and doubtless with great truth) that they would with the utmost readi ness resign a lover to a rival when such resig nation was proved to be necessary for the tem poral interest of such lover Hence therefore I conclude that this affection is in nature though I cannot pretend to say I have ever seen an instance of it

Mr Jones having spent three hours in read ing and kissing the aforesaid letter and being

* Meaning perhaps the bank bill for £100

that taste for humour which many affect he expected to enjoy much entertainment in the criticisms of Partridge from whom he expected the simple dictates of nature unimproved indeed but likewise unadulterated by art

In the first row then of the first gallery did Mr Jones Mrs Miller her youngest daughter and Partridge take their places Partridge immediately declared it was the finest place he had ever been in When the first music was played he said It was a wonder how so many fiddlers could play at one time without putting one another out While the fellow was lighting the upper candles he cried out to Mrs Miller Look look madam the very picture of the man in the end of the common prayer book before the gunpowder treason service Nor could he help observing with a sigh when all the candles were lighted That here were candles enough burnt in one night to keep an honest poor family for a whole twelvemonth

As soon as the play which was Hamlet Prince of Denmark began Partridge was all attention nor did he break silence till the entrance of the ghost upon which he asked Jones What man that was in the strange dress something said he like what I have seen in a picture Sure it is not armour is it? Jones answered That is the ghost To which Partridge replied with a smile Persuade me to that sir if you can Though I can t say I ever actually saw a ghost in my life yet I am certain I should know one if I saw him better than that comes to No no sir ghosts don t appear in such dresses as that neither In this mistake which caused much laughter in the neighbourhood of Partridge he was suffered to continue till the scene between the ghost and Hamlet when Partridge gave that credit to Mr Garrick which he had denied to Jones and fell into so violent a trembling that his knees knocked against each other Jones asked him what was the matter and whether he was afraid of the warrior upon the stage? O la! sir said he I perceive now it is what you told me I am not afraid of anything for I know it is but a play And if it was really a ghost it could do one no harm at such a distance and in so much company and yet if I was frightened I am not the only person Why who cries Jones dost thou take to be such a coward here besides thyself? Nay you may call me coward if you will but if that little man there upon the stage is not frightened I never saw any man frightened in my life Ay ay go along with you Ay to be sure! Who s fool then? Will you? Lud have mercy upon such fool hardiness!—Whatever happens it is good enough for you —Follow you? I d follow the devil as soon Nay perhaps it is the devil—for they say he can put on what likeness he pleases—Oh! here he is again —No farther! No you have gone far enough already farther than I d have gone for all the king s dominions Jones offered to speak but Partridge cried Hush hush! dear sir don t

ceeded each other in Hamlet succeeding likewise in him

When the scene was over Jones said Why Partridge you exceed my expectations You enjoy the play more than I conceived possible Nay sir answered Partridge if you are not afraid of the devil I can t help it but to be sure it is natural to be surprized at such things though I know there is nothing in them not that it was the ghost that surprized me neither for I should have known that to have been only a man in a strange dress but when I saw the little man so frightened himself it was that which took hold of me And dost thou imagine then Partridge cries Jones that he was really frightened? Nay sir said Partridge did not you yourself observe afterwards when he found it was his own father s spirit and how he was murdered in the garden how his fear forsook him by degrees and he was struck dumb with sorrow as it were just as I should have been had it been my own case?—But hush! O la! what noise is that? There he is again —Well to be certain though I know there is nothing at all in it I am glad I am not down yonder where those men are Then turning his eyes again upon Hamlet Ay you may draw your sword what signifies a sword against the power of the devil?

how people may be deceived by faces! Nulla fides fronti is I find a true saying Who think by looking in the king's face had ever committed a murder? He then inquired after the ghost but Jones who intended he should be surprized gave him no other satisfaction than that he might possibly see him again soon and in a flash of fire

Partridge sat in a fearful expectation of this and now when the ghost made his next appearance Partridge cried out There sir now what say you now? is he frightened now or no? As much frightened as you think me and to be sure nobody can help some fears I would not be in so bad a condition as what s his name squire Hamlet is there for all the world Bless me! what s become of the spirit? As I am laugh so for as to you sir you would not be afraid I believe if the devil was here in person —There there—Ay no wonder you are in such a passion shake the vile wicked wretch to pieces If she was my own mother I would serve her so To be sure all duty to a mother is forfeited by such wicked doings ——Ay go about your business I hate the sight of you

Our critic was now pretty silent till the play which Hamlet introduces before the king This he did not at first understand till Jones explained it to him but he no sooner entered into the spirit of it than he began to bless himself that he had never committed murder Then turning to Mrs Miller he asked her If she did not imagine the king looked as if he wicked man there hath to sit upon a much higher chair than he sits upon No wonder he run away for your sake I ll never trust an

surprize at the number of skulls thrown upon the stage To which Jones answered That it was one of the most famous burial places about town No wonder then cries Partridge that the place is haunted But I never saw in my life a worse grave-digger I had a sexton when I was clerk that should have dug three graves while he is digging one The fellow handles a spade as if it was the first time he had ever had one in his hand Ay ay you may sing You had rather sing than work I believe —Upon Hamlet s taking up the skull he cried out Well! it is strange to see how fearless some men are I never could bring myself to touch anything belonging to a dead man on any account —He seemed frightened enough too at the ghost I thought Nemo omnibus horis sapit

Little more worth remembering occurred during the play at the end of which Jones asked him Which of the players he had liked says Mrs Miller you are not of the same opinion with the town for they are all agreed that Hamlet is acted by the best player who ever was on the stage He the best player! cries Partridge with a contemptuous sneer why I could act as well as he myself I am sure if I had seen a ghost I should have looked in the very same manner and done just as he did And then to be sure in that scene as you called it between him and his mother where you told me he acted so fine why Lord help me any man that is any good man that had such a mother would have done exactly the same I know you are only joking with me but indeed madam though I was never at a play in London yet I have seen acting before in the country and the king for my money he speaks all his words distinctly half as loud again as the other —Anybody may see he is an actor

While Mrs Miller was thus engaged in conversation with Partridge a lady came up to Mr Jones whom he immediately knew to be Mrs Fitzpatrick She said she had seen him from the other part of the gallery and had taken that opportunity of speaking to him as she had something to say which might be of great service to himself She then acquainted him with her lodgings and made him an appointment the next day in the morning which upon recollection she presently changed to the afternoon at which time Jones promised to attend her

Thus ended the adventure at the playhouse where Partridge had afforded great mirth not only to Jones and Mrs Miller but to all who sat within hearing who were more attentive to what he said than to anything that passed on the stage

He durst not go to bed all that night for fear of the ghost and for many nights after sweated two or three hours before he went to sleep with the same apprehensions and waked several times in great horrors crying out Lord have mercy upon us! there it is

Chapter 6

In which the history is obliged to look back

It is almost impossible for the best parent to observe an exact impartiality to his children even though no superior merit should bias his affection but sure a parent can hardly be blamed when that superiority determines his preference

As I regard all the personages of this history in the light of my children so I must confess the same inclination of partiality to Sophia and for that I hope the reader will allow me the same excuse from the superiority of her character

This extraordinary tenderness which I have for my heroine never suffers me to quit her any long time without the utmost reluctance I could now therefore return impatiently to inquire what hath happened to this lovely creature since her departure from her father s but that I am obliged first to pay a short visit to Mr Blifil

Mr Western in the first confusion into which his mind was cast upon the sudden news he received of his daughter and in the first hurry to go after her had not once thought of sending any account of the discovery to Blifil He had not gone far however before he recollected himself and accordingly stopt at the very first inn he came to and dispatched away a messenger to acquaint Blifil with his having found Sophia and with his firm resolution to marry her to him immediately if he would come up after him to town

As the love which Blifil had for Sophia was of that violent kind which nothing but the loss of her fortune or some such accident could lessen his inclination to the match was not at all altered by her having run away though he was obliged to lay this to his own account He very readily therefore embraced th

hatred for he concluded that matrimony af

truth if we are to judge by the ordinary behaviour of married persons to each other we shall perhaps be apt to conclude that the generality seek the indulgence of the former passion only in their union of everything but of hearts.

There was one difficulty however, in his way and this arose from Mr Allworthy That good man when he found by the departure of Sophia (for neither that nor the cause of it could be concealed from him) the great aversion which she had for his nephew began to be seriously concerned that he had been deceived into carrying matters so far He by no means concurred with the opinion of those parents who think it as immaterial to consult the inclinations of their children in the affair of marriage as to solicit the good pleasure of their servants when they intend to take a journey and who are by law or decency at least withheld often from using absolute force On the contrary as he esteemed the institution to be of the most sacred kind he thought every preparatory caution necessary to preserve it holy and inviolate and very wisely concluded that the surest way to effect this was by laying the foundation in previous affection

Blifil indeed soon cured his uncle of all anger on the score of deceit by many vows and protestations that he had been deceived himself with which the many declarations of Western very well tallied but now to persuade Allworthy to consent to the renewing his addresses was a matter of such apparent difficulty that the very appearance was sufficient to have deterred a less enterprizing genius but this young gentleman so well knew his own talents that nothing within the province of cunning seemed to him hard to be atchieved

Here then he represented the violence of his own affection and the hopes of subduing aversion in the lady by perseverance He begged that in an affair on which depended all his future repose he might at least be at liberty to then (which will be surely time enough) deny your consent He urged the great and eager desire which Mr Western had for the match and lastly he made great use of the name of Jones to whom he imputed all that had happened and from whom he said to preserve so valuable a young lady was even an act of charity

All these arguments were well seconded by Thwackum who dwelt a little stronger on the authority of parents than Mr Blifil himself had done He ascribed the measures which Mr Blifil was desirous to take to Christian motives and though says he the good young gentleman hath mentioned charity last I am al most convinced it is his first and principal consideration

Square possibly had he been present would have sung to the same tune though in a different key and would have discovered much moral fitness in the proceeding but he was now gone to Bath for the recovery of his health

Allworthy though not without reluctance at last yielded to the desires of his nephew He said he would accompany him to London where he might be at liberty to use every honest endeavour to gain the lady But I declare said he I will never give my consent to any absolute force being put on her inclinations nor shall you ever have her unless she can be brought freely to compliance

Thus did the affection of Allworthy for his nephew betray the superior understanding to be triumphed over by the inferior and thus is the prudence of the best of heads often defeated by the tenderness of the best of hearts

Blifil having obtained this unhoped for acquiescence in his uncle rested not till he carried his purpose into execution And as no immediate business required Mr Allworthy s presence in the country and little preparation is necessary to men for a journey they set out the very next day and arrived in town that waited on Mr Western by whom he was most kindly and graciously received and from whom he had every possible assurance (perhaps more than was possible) that he should very shortly be as happy as Sophia could make him nor would the squire suffer the young gentleman to return to his uncle till he had almost against his will carried him to his sister

Chapter 7

In which Mr Western pays a visit to his sister, in company with Mr Blifil

Mrs Western was reading a lecture on prudence and matrimonial politics to her niece when her brother and Blifil broke in with less ceremony than the laws of visiting require Sophia no sooner saw Blifil than she turned pale and almost lost the use of all her faculties but her aunt on the contrary waxed red and having all her faculties at command began to exert her tongue on the squire

Brother said she I am astonished at your behaviour will you never learn any regard to decorum? Will you still look upon every apartment as your own or as belonging to one of your country tenants? Do you think yourself at liberty to invade the privacies of women of condition without the least decency or notice? —— Why what a pox is the matter now? quoth the squire one would think I had caught you at— — None of your brutality sir I beseech you answered she —You have surprized my poor niece so that she can hardly I see support herself —Go my dear retire and endeavour to recruit your spirits for I see you have occasion At which words Sophia who never received a more welcome command hastily withdrew

To be sure sister cries the squire you are mad when I have brought Mr Blifil here to court her to force her away

Sure brother says she you are worse than mad when you know in what situation affairs are to——I am sure I ask Mr Blifil s pardon but he knows very well to whom to impute so disagreeable a reception For my own part I am sure I shall always be very glad to see Mr Blifil but his own good sense would not have suffered him to proceed so abruptly had you not compelled him to it

Blifil bowed and stammered and looked like a fool but Western without giving him time to form a speech for the purpose answered Well well I am to blame if you will I always am certainly but come let the girl be fetched back again or let Mr Blifil go to her ——He s come up on purpose and there is no time to be lost

Brother cries Mrs Western Mr Blifil I am confident understands himself better than to think of seeing my niece any more this morning after what hath happened Women are of a nice contexture and our spirits when disordered are not to be recomposed in a moment Had you suffered Mr Blifil to have sent his compliments to my niece and to have desired the favour of waiting on her in the afternoon I should possibly have prevailed on her to have seen him but now I despair of bringing about any such matter

I am very sorry madam cried Blifil that Mr Western s extraordinary kindness to me which I can never enough acknowledge should have occasioned— Indeed sir said she interrupting him you need make no apologies we all know my brother so well

I don t care what anybody knows of me answered the squire — but when must he come to see her? for consider I tell you he is come up on purpose and so is Allworthy —

Brother said she whatever message Mr Bl fil thinks proper to send to my niece shall be delivered to her and I suppose she will want no instructions to make a proper answer I am convinced she will not refuse to see Mr Blifil at a proper time — The devil she won t answered the squire — Odsbud!—Don t we know—I say nothing but some volk are wiser than all the world —If I might have had my will she had not run away before and now I expect to hear every moment she is guone agin For as great a fool as some volk think me I know very well she hates— No matter brother replied Mrs Western I will not hear my niece abused It is a reflection on my family She is an honour to it and she will be an honour to it I promise you I will pawn my whole reputation in the world on her conduct —I shall be glad to see you brother in the afternoon for I have somewhat of importance to mention to you —At present Mr Blifil as well as you must excuse me for I am in haste to dress Well but said the squire do appoint a time Indeed said she I can appoint no time I tell you I will see you in the afternoon — What the devil would you have me do? cries the squire turning to Blifil I can no more turn her than a beagle can turn an old hare Perhaps she will be in a better humour in the afternoon — I am condemned I see sir to misfortune answered Blifil but I shall always own my obligations to you He then took a ceremonious leave of Mrs Western [illegible]

If Mr Western was little pleased with this interview Blifil was less As to the former he imputed the whole behaviour of his sister to her humour only and to her dissatisfaction at the omission of ceremony in the visit but Blifil saw a little deeper into things. He suspected somewhat of more consequence from two or three words which dropt from the lady and to say the truth he suspected right as will appear when I have unfolded the several matters which will be contained in the following chapter

Chapter 8

Schemes of Lady Bellaston for the ruin of Jones

Love had taken too deep a root in the mind of Lord Fellamar to be plucked up by the rude hands of Mr Western In the heat of resentment he had indeed given a commission to Captain Egglane which the captain had far exceeded in the execution nor had it been executed at all had his lordship been able to find the captain after he had seen Lady Bellaston which was in the afternoon of the day after he had received the affront but so industrious was the captain in the discharge of his duty that having after long inquiry found out the squire s lodgings very late in the evening, he sat up all night at a tavern that he might not miss the squire in the morning and by that means missed the revocation which my lord had sent to his lodgings

In the afternoon then next after the intended rape of Sophia his lordship as we have said made a visit to Lady Bellaston who laid open so much of the character of the squire that his lordship plainly saw the absurdity he had been guilty of in taking any offence at his words especially as he had those honourable designs on his daughter He then unbosomed the violence of his passion to Lady Bellaston who readily undertook the cause and encouraged him with certain assurance of a most favourable reception from all the elders of the family and from the father himself when he should be sober and should be made acquainted with the nature of the offer made to his daughter The only danger she said lay in the fellow she had formerly mentioned who though a beggar and a vagabond had by some means or other she knew not what procured himself tolerable cloaths and past for a gentleman Now says she as I have for quainted his lordship I am thinking my lord added she (for this fellow is too mean for your personal resentment) whether it [illegible]

promise you however well drest is but a vagabond and as proper as any fellow in the streets to be pressed into the service and as for the conscientious part, surely the preservation of a young lady from such ruin is a most meritorious act nay with regard to the fellow himself unless he could succeed (which Heaven forbid) with my cousin it may probably be the means of preserving him from the gallows and perhaps may make his fortune in an honest way '

Lord Fellamar very heartily thanked her ladyship for the part which she was pleased to take in the affair, upon the success of which his whole future happiness entirely depended He said he saw at present no objection to the pressing scheme, and would consider of putting it in execution He then most earnestly recommended to her ladyship to do him the honour of immediately mentioning his proposals to the family, to whom he said he offered a carte blanche, and would settle his fortune in almost any manner they should require And after uttering many ecstasies and raptures concerning Sophia, he took his leave and departed, but not before he had received the strongest charge to beware of Jones and to lose no time in securing his person where he should no longer be in a capacity of making any attempts to the ruin of the young lady

The moment Mrs Western was arrived at her lodgings a card was despatched with her compliments to Lady Bellaston who no sooner received it than with the impatience of a lover, she flew to her cousin, rejoiced at this [illegible]

a woman of sense and who knew the world [illegible]

fusal

The two ladies being met after very short previous ceremonials fell to business which was indeed almost as soon concluded as begun for Mrs Western no sooner heard the name of Lord Fellamar than her cheeks glowed with pleasure but when she was acquainted with the eagerness of his passion the earnestness of his proposals and the generosity of his offer, she declared her full satisfaction in the most explicit terms

In the progress of their conversation their discourse turned to Jones and both cousins [illegible]

upon to sacrifice a simple inclination to the addresses of a fine gentleman, who brings her both a title and a large estate ' For, indeed " added she, ' I must do Sophy the justice to confess this Blifil is but a hideous kind of fellow as you know, Bellaston, all country gentlemen are, and hath nothing but his fortune to recommend him "

' Nay," said Lady Bellaston, "I don't then so much wonder at my cousin, for I promise you this Jones is a very agreeable fellow, and hath one virtue which the men say is a great recommendation to us What do you think, Mrs Western—I shall certainly make you laugh nay, I can hardly tell you myself for laughing —will you believe that the fellow hath had the assurance to make love to me? But if you should be inclined to disbelieve it, here is evidence enough his own handwriting I assure you" She then delivered her cousin the letter with the proposals of marriage, which, if the reader hath a desire to see, he will find already on record in the XVth book of this history

Upon my word I am astonished," said Mrs Western "this is, indeed a masterpiece of assurance With your leave, I may possibly make some use of this letter ' You have my full liberty,' cries Lady Bellaston, ' to apply it to what purpose you please However, I would not have it shewn to any but Miss Western nor to her unless you find occasion " ' Well and how did you use the fellow? returned Mrs Western ' Not as a husband," said the lady ' I am not married I promise you my dear You know, Bell, I have tried the comforts once already and once, I think, is enough for any reasonable woman "

This letter Lady Bellaston thought would certainly turn the balance against Jones in the mind of Sophia and she was emboldened to give it up partly by her hopes of having him instantly dispatched out of the way and partly by having secured the evidence of Honour who upon sounding her she saw sufficient reason to imagine was prepared to testify whatever she pleased

But perhaps the reader may wonder why Lady Bellaston who in her heart hated Sophia should be so desirous of promoting a match which was so much to the interest of the young lady Now, I would desire such readers to look carefully into human nature page almost the last, and there he will find, in scarce legible characters that women, notwithstanding the preposterous behaviour of mothers aunts &c, in matrimonial matters, do in reality think it so great a misfortune to have their inclina woman who hath once been pleased with the possession of a man will go above halfway to the devil to prevent any other woman from enjoying the same

If he will not be contented with these reasons I freely confess I see no other motive to the actions of that lady unless we will conceive she was bribed by Lord Fellamar which for my own part I see no cause to suspect

Now this was the affair which Mrs Western was preparing to introduce to Sophia by some prefatory discourse on the folly of love and on the wisdom of legal prostitution for hire when her brother and Blifil broke abruptly in upon her and hence arose all that coldness in her behaviour to Blifil which though the squire as was usual with him imputed to a wrong cause infused into Blifil himself (he being a much more cunning man) a suspicion of the real truth

Chapter 9

In which Jones pays a visit to Mrs Fitzpatrick

THE READER may now perhaps be pleased to return with us to Mr Jones who at the appointed hour attended on Mrs Fitzpatrick but before we relate the conversation which now past it may be proper according to our method to return a little back and to account for so great an alteration of behaviour in this lady that from changing her lodging principally to avoid Mr Jones she had now industriously as hath been seen sought this interview

And here we shall need only to resort to what happened the preceding day when hearing from Lady Bellaston that Mr Western was arrived in town she went to pay her duty to him at his lodgings at Piccadilly where she was received with many scurvy compellations too coarse to be repeated and was even threatened to be kicked out of doors From hence an old servant of her aunt Western with whom she was well acquainted conducted her to the lodgings of that lady who treated her not more kindly but more politely or to say the truth with rudeness in another way In short she returned from both plainly convinced not only that her scheme of reconciliation had proved abortive but that she must for ever give over all thoughts of bringing it about by any means whatever From this moment desire of revenge only filled her mind and in this temper meeting Jones at the play an opportunity seemed to her to occur of effecting this purpose

The reader must remember that he was acquainted by Mrs Fitzpatrick in the account she gave of her own story with the fondness Mrs Western had formerly shewn for Mr Fitzpatrick at Bath from the disappointment of which Mrs Fitzpatrick derived the great bitterness her aunt had expressed toward her She had therefore no doubt but that the good lady would as easily listen to the addresses of Mr Jones as she had before done to the other for the superiority of charms was clearly on the side of Mr Jones and the advance which

Therefore when Jones attended after a previous declaration of her desire of serving him arising as she said from a firm assurance how much she should by so doing oblige Sophia and after some excuses for her former disappointment and after acquainting Mr Jones in whose custody his mistress was of which she thought him ignorant she very explicitly mentioned her scheme to him and advised him to make sham addresses to the older lady in order to procure an easy access to the younger informing him at the same time of the success which Mr Fitzpatrick had formerly owed to the very same stratagem utter detestation of all fallacy as from her avowed duty to her aunt

Mrs Fitzpatrick was a little nettled at this and indeed if it may not be called a lapse of the tongue it was a small deviation from politeness in Jones and into which he scarce would have fallen had not the delight he felt in praising Sophia hurried him out of all reflection for this commendation of one cousin was more than a tacit rebuke on the other

Indeed sir answered the lady with some warmth "I cannot think there is anything easier than to cheat an old woman with a fession of love, when her complexion is amorous, and, though she is my aunt, I must say there never was a more liquorish one than her ladyship Can't you pretend that the despair of possessing her niece, from her being promised to Blifil, has made you turn your thoughts towards her? As to my cousin Sophia, I can't imagine her to be such a simpleton as to have the least scruple on such an account, or to conceive any harm in punishing one of these haggs for the many mischiefs they bring upon families by their tragi comic passions, for which I think it is a pity they are not punishable by law I had no such scruple myself, and yet I hope my cousin Sophia will not think it an affront when I say she cannot detest every real species of falsehood more than her cousin Fitzpatrick To my aunt, indeed I pretend no duty, nor doth she deserve any However, sir, I have

Jones now clearly saw the error he had committed and exerted his utmost power to rectify it but he only faultered and stuttered into nonsense and contradiction To say the truth, it is often safer to abide by the consequences of the first blunder than to endeavour to rectify it, for by such endeavours we generally plunge deeper instead of extricating ourselves, and few persons will on such occasions have the good nature which Mrs Fitzpatrick displayed to Jones, by saying with a smile You need attempt no more excuses for I can easily forgive a real lover whatever is the effect of fondness for his mistress"

She then renewed her proposal and very fervently recommended it, omitting no argument which her invention could suggest on the subject, for she was so violently incensed

ite scheme

Jones however persisted in declining the so eager in pressing her advice He said he would not deny the tender and passionate regard he had for Sophia but was so conscious of the inequality of their situations, that he could never flatter himself so far as to hope that so divine a young lady would condescend to think on so unworthy a man, nay, he protested, he could scarce bring himself to wish she should He concluded with a profession of generous sentiments, which we have not at present leisure to insert

There are some fine women (for I dare not here speak in too general terms) with whom self is so predominant, that they never detach it from any subject and, as vanity is with them a ruling principle, they are apt to lay hold of whatever praise they meet with, and, though the property of others, convey it to their own use In the company of these ladies it is impossible to say anything handsome of another woman which they will not apply to themselves nay they often improve the praise they seize, as, for instance, if her beauty, her wit her gentility, her good humour deserve so much commendation, what do I deserve, who possess those qualities in so much more eminent a degree?

To these ladies a man often recommends himself while he is commending another woman, and, while he is expressing ardour and generous sentiments for his mistress, they are considering what a charming lover this man would make to them, who can feel all this tenderness for an inferior degree of merit Of this strange as it may seem, I have seen many instances besides Mrs Fitzpatrick, to whom all this really happened and who now began to feel a somewhat for Mr Jones the symptoms of which she much sooner understood than poor Sophia had formerly done

To say the truth perfect beauty in both sexes is a more irresistible object than it is generally thought, for, notwithstanding some of us are contented with more homely lots and learn by rote (as children to repeat what gives them no idea) to despise outside, and to value more solid charms, yet I have always observed at the approach of consummate beauty, that these more solid charms only shine with that kind of lustre which the stars have after the rising of the sun

When Jones had finished his exclamations many of which would have become the mouth of Oroondates himself, Mrs Fitzpatrick heaved of such tenderness to be thrown away on those who are insensible of it I know my cousin better than you, Mr Jones, and I must say, any woman who makes no return to such a passion, and such a person is unworthy of both"

"Sure, madam," said Jones, "you can't mean —" "Mean!" cries Mrs Fitzpatrick, 'I know not what I mean there is something I think, in true tenderness bewitching, few women ever meet it in men, and fewer still know how to be the most contemptible of women who can overlook such merit'

The manner and look with which all this was spoke, infused a suspicion into Jones which we don t care to convey in direct words to the reader Instead of making any answer, he said 'I am afraid, madam, I have made too tiresome a visit," and offered to take his leave

"Not at all, sir," answered Mrs Fitzpatrick —' Indeed I pity you, Mr Jones, indeed I do but if you are going, consider of the scheme I have mentioned—I am convinced you will approve it—and let me see you again as soon as you can —To morrow morning if you will, or at least some time to-morrow I shall be at home all day"

Jones then after many expressions of thanks, nothing he must have had no understanding in the language of the eyes In reality, it confirmed his resolution of returning to her no more for, faulty as he hath hitherto appeared in this history, his whole thoughts were now so confined to his Sophia, that I believe no woman upon earth could have now drawn him into an act of inconstancy

Fortune, however who was not his friend, resolved as he intended to give her no second opportunity, to make the best of this and accordingly produced the tragical incident which we are now in sorrowful notes to record

Chapter 10

The consequence of the preceding visit to Bath, and thence the day after set forward to London

The reader hath been already often informed of the jealous temper of this gentleman He may likewise be pleased to remember the suspicion which he had conceived of Jones at Upton upon his finding him in the room with Mrs Waters, and, though sufficient reasons had afterwards appeared entirely to clear up that suspicion, yet now the reading so handsome a character of Mr Jones from his wife caused him to reflect that she likewise was in the inn at the same time, and jumbled together such a confusion of circumstances in a head which was naturally none of the clearest, that the whole produced that green-eyed monster mentioned by Shakespear in his tragedy of Othello

And now, as he was inquiring in the street after his wife, and had just received directions to the door, unfortunately Mr Jones was issuing from it

Fitzpatrick did not yet recollect the face of Jones however, seeing a young well dressed fellow coming from his wife he made directly up to him and asked him what he had been doing in that house? 'for I am sure" said he, "you must have been in it, as I saw you come out of it"

Jones answered very modestly,' That he had been visiting a lady there" To which Fitzpatrick replied 'What business have you with the lady?" Upon which Jones who now perfectly remembered the voice features and indeed coat, of the gentleman cried out—'Ha, my good friend! give me your hand, I hope there is no ill blood remaining between us upon a small mistake which happened so long ago'

'Upon my soul sir" said Fitzpatrick, 'I don t know your name nor your face" 'Indeed, sir" said Jones, "neither have I the pleasure of knowing your name, but your face I very well remember to have seen before at Upton, where a foolish quarrel happened between us which if it is not made up yet, we will now make up over a bottle"

'At Upton! cried the other'——"Ha! upon my soul I believe your name is Jones?" 'Indeed, answered he, "it is"—'O! upon my soul' cries Fitzpatrick,' you are the very man I wanted to meet —Upon my soul I will drink a bottle with you presently, but first I will give you a great knock over the pate There is for you you rascal Upon my soul if you do not give me satisfaction for that blow I will give you another' And then drawing his sword put himself in a posture of defence, which was the only science he understood

Jones was a little staggered by the blow which came somewhat unexpectedly but presently recovering himself, he also drew, and though he understood nothing of fencing p on so boldly upon Fitzpatrick, that h

fession of love, when her complexion is amorous and, though she is my aunt, I must say there never was a more liquorish one than her ladyship Can't you pretend that the despair of possessing her niece, from her being promised to Blifil has made you turn your thoughts towards her? As to my cousin Sophia I can t imagine her to be such a simpleton as to have the least scruple on such an account, or to conceive any harm in punishing one of these haggs for the many mischiefs they bring upon families by their tragi-comic passions, for which I think it is a pity they are not punishable by law I had no such scruple myself, and yet I hope my cousin Sophia will not think it an affront when I say she cannot detest every real species of falsehood more than her cousin Fitzpatrick To my aunt, indeed I pretend no duty, nor doth she deserve any However sir, I have given you my advice, and if you decline pursuing it I shall have the less opinion of your understanding—that s all "

Jones now clearly saw the error he had committed and exerted his utmost power to rectify it but he only faultered and stuttered into nonsense and contradiction To say the truth it is often safer to abide by the consequences of the first blunder than to endeavour to rectify it, for by such endeavours we generally plunge deeper instead of extricating ourselves, and few persons will on such occasions have the good nature which Mrs Fitzpatrick displayed to Jones, by saying with a smile, "You need attempt no more excuses, for I can easily forgive a real lover, whatever is the effect of fondness for his mistress "

She then renewed her proposal and very fervently recommended it, omitting no argument which her invention could suggest on the subject for she was so violently incensed [illegible]

[illegible] ite scheme

Jones, however, persisted in declining the [illegible]

[illegible] so eager in pressing her advice He said he would not deny the tender and passionate regard he had for Sophia but was so conscious of the inequality of their situations that he could never flatter himself so far as to hope that so divine a young lady would condescend to think on so unworthy a man nay, he protested, he could scarce bring himself to wish she should He concluded with a profession of generous sentiments, which we have not at present leisure to insert.

There are some fine women (for I dare not here speak in too general terms) with whom self is so predominant, that they never detach it from any subject, and, as vanity is with them a ruling principle, they are apt to lay hold of whatever praise they meet with, and, though the property of others, convey it to their own use In the company of these ladies it is impossible to say anything handsome of another woman which they will not apply to themselves, nay, they often improve the praise they seize, as, for instance, if her beauty, her wit, her gentility, her good humour deserve so much commendation, what do I deserve, who possess those qualities in so much more eminent a degree?

To these ladies a man often recommends himself while he is commending another woman, and, while he is expressing ardour and generous sentiments for his mistress they are considering what a charming lover this man would make to them, who can feel all this tenderness for an inferior degree of merit Of this, strange as it may seem, I have seen many instances besides Mrs Fitzpatrick, to whom all this really happened, and who now began to feel a somewhat for Mr Jones the symptoms of which she much sooner understood than poor Sophia had formerly done

To say the truth, perfect beauty in both sexes is a more irresistible object than it is generally thought, for, notwithstanding some of us are contented with more homely lots and learn by rote (as children to repeat what gives them no idea) to despise outside, and to value more solid charms, yet I have always observed at the approach of consummate beauty that these more solid charms only shine with that kind of lustre which the stars have after the rising of the sun

[illegible]

a deep sigh and taking her eyes off from Jones on whom they had been some time fixed and dropping them on the ground, she cried In deed, Mr Jones, I pity you but it is the curse of such tenderness to be thrown away on those who are insensible of it I know my cousin better than you Mr Jones, and I must say, any woman who makes no return to such a passion, and such a person, is unworthy of both "

"Sure madam said Jones you can t mean — Mean! cries Mrs Fitzpatrick I know not what I mean there is something I think in true tenderness bewitching few women ever meet it in men and fewer still know how to

o ... ook such merit

The manner and look with which all this was spoke infused a suspicion into Jones wh ch we don t care to convey in direct words to the reader Instead of making any answer he said I am afraid madam I have made too have mentioned—I am convinced you will ap prove it—and let me see you again as soon as you can—To-morrow morning if you will or at least some time to morrow I shall be at home all day

Jones then after many expressions of thanks very respectfully retired nor could Mrs Fitz patrick forbear making him a present of a look at parting by which if he had understood noth ng he must have had no understanding in the language of the eyes In reality it con firme ...

mo

in

so

woman upon earth could have now drawn him into an act of inconstancy

Fortune however who was not his friend resolved as he intended to give her no second opportunity to make the best of this and ac cord ngly produced the tragical incident which we are now in sorrowful notes to record

Chapter 10

The consequence of the preceding visit

Mr Fitzpatrick having received the let ter before mentioned from Mrs Western and being by that means acquainted with the place to which his wife was retired returned d rectly to Bath and thence the day after set forward to London

The reader hath been already often informed of the jealous temper of this gentleman He may likewise be pleased to remember the sus picion which he had conceived of Jones at Upton upon his finding him in the room with Mrs Waters and though sufficient reasons had afterwards appeared entirely to clear up that suspicion yet now the reading so handsome a character of Mr Jones from his wife caused him to reflect that she likewise was in the inn at the same time and jumbled together such a confusion of circumstances in a head which was naturally none of the clearest that the whole produced that green-eyed monster men tioned by Shakespear in his tragedy of Othello

... n the street

suing from it

Fitzpatrick did not yet recollect the face of Jones however seeing a young well-dressed fellow coming from his wife he made directly up to him and asked him what he had been doing in that house? for I am sure said he you must have been in it as I saw you come out of it

Jones answered very modestly That he had been visiting a lady there To which Fitz patrick replied What business have you with the lady? Upon which Jones who now per fectly remembered the voice features and in deed coat of the gentleman cried out— Ha my good friend! give me your hand I hope there is no ill blood remaining betw een us upon a small mistake which happened so long ago

Upon my soul sir said Fitzpatrick I don t know your name nor your face" "In deed sir said Jones neither have I the pleasure of knowing your name but your face I very well remember to have seen before at Upton where a foolish quarrel happened be tween us which if it is not made up yet we will now make up over a bottle

At Upton! cried the other— Ha! upon my soul I believe your name is Jones? In deed answered he it is — O! upon my soul" cries Fitzpatrick you are the very man I wanted to meet—Upon my soul I will drink which came somewhat unexp ... ly but pres ently recovering himself he also drew and though he underst ... ability ... encing pre ... on so boldly upon Fitzpatrick that he ...

do n his guard and sheathed one half of his sword in the body of the said gentleman who had no sooner received it than he stept back wards dropped the point of his sword and leaning upon it cried I have satisfaction enough I am a dead man

I hope not cries Jones but whatever be the consequence you must be sensible you have drawn it upon yourself At this instant a number of fellows rushed in and seized Jones who told them he should make no re sistance and begged some of them at least would take care of the wounded gentleman

Ay cries one of the fellows the wounded

vented his voyage he s bound to another port now and many other such jests was our poor Jones made the subject of by these fellows who were indeed the gang employed by Lord Fella mar and had dogged him into the house of Mrs Fitzpatrick waiting for him at the corner of the street when this unfortunate accident happened

The officer who commanded this gang very wisely concluded that his business was now to

senger to inquire after the wounded gentle man who was now at a tavern under the sur geon s hands The report brought back was that the wound was certainly mortal and there were no hopes of life Upon which the con stable informed Jones that he must go before a justice He answered Whenever you please I am indifferent as to what happens to me for though I am convinced I am not guilty of murder in the eve of the law yet the weight of blood I find intolerable upon my mind

Jones was now conducted before the justice where the surgeon who dressed Mr Fitzpatrick appeared and deposed that he believed the wound to be mortal upon which the prisoner was committed to the Gatehouse It was very late at night so that Jones would not send for Partridge till the next morning and as he never shut his eyes till seven so it was near twelve before the poor fellow who was greatly frightened at not hearing from his master so long received a message which almost de prived him of his being when he heard it

He went to the Gatehouse with trembling knees and a beating heart and was no sooner arrived in the presence of Jones than he la mented the misfortune that had befallen him with many tears looking all the while fre quently about him in great terror for as the news now arrived that Mr Fitzpatrick was dead the poor fellow apprehended every minute

Jones presently dispatched every one out of the room and having eagerly broke open the letter read as follows —

You owe the hearing from me again to an accident which I own surprizes me My aunt hath just now shown me a letter from you to Lady Bellaston which contains a proposal of marriage I am convinced it is your own hand and what more surprizes me is that it is dated at the very time when you would have me im agine you was under such concern on my ac count —I leave you to comment on this fact All I desire is that your name may never more be mentioned to

S W

Of the present situation of Mr Jones s mind and of the pangs with which he was now tor mented we cannot give the reader a better idea than by saying his misery was such that even Thwackum would almost have p tied

BOOK XVII

CONTAINING THREE DAYS

Chapter 1

Containing a portion of introductory writing

WHEN a comic writer hath made his principal characters as happy as he can or when a tragic writer hath brought them to the highest pitch of human misery they both conclude their business to be done and that their work is come to a period

Had we been of the tragic complexion the reader must now allow we were nearly arrived at this period since it would be difficult for the devil or any of his representatives on earth to have contrived much greater torments for poor Jones than those in which we left him in the last chapter and as for Sophia a good natured woman would hardly wish more uneasiness to a rival than what she must at present be supposed to feel What then remains to complete the tragedy but a murder or two and a few moral sentences!

But to bring our favourites out of their present anguish and distress and to land them at last on the shore of happiness seems a much harder task a task indeed so hard that we do not undertake to execute it In regard to Sophia it is more than probable that we shall somewhere or other provide a good husband for her in the end—either Blifil or my lord or somebody else but as to poor Jones such are the calamities in which he is at present involved owing to his imprudence by which if a man doth not become felon to the world he is at least a *felo de se so destitute is he now of friends and so persecuted by enemies that we almost despair of bringing him to any good and if our reader delights in seeing executions I think he ought not to lose any time in taking a first row at Tyburn

This I faithfully promise that notwithstanding any affection which we may be supposed to have for this rogue whom we have unfortunately made our heroe we will lend him none of that supernatural assistance with which we are entrusted upon condition that we use it only on very important occasions If he doth not therefore find some natural means of fairly extricating himself from all his distresses we will do no violence to the truth and dignity of history for his sake for we had rather relate that he was hanged at Tyburn (which may very probably be the case) than forfeit our integrity or shock the faith of our reader

In this the antients had a great advantage over the moderns Their mythology which was at that time more firmly believed by the vulgar than any religion is at present gave them always an opportunity of delivering a favourite heroe Their deities were always ready at the writer s elbow to execute any of his purposes and the more extraordinary the invention was the greater was the surprize and delight of the credulous reader Those writers could with greater ease have conveyed a heroe from one country to another nay from one world to an other and have brought him back again than a poor circumscribed modern can deliver him from a jail

The Arabians and Persians had an equal advantage in writing their tales from the genii and fairies which they believe in as an article of their faith upon the authority of the Koran itself But we have none of these helps To natural means alone we are confined let us try therefore what by these means may be done for poor Jones though to confess the truth something whispers me in the ear that he doth not yet know the worst of his fortune and that a more shocking piece of news than any he hath yet heard remains for him in the unopened leaves of fate

* A suicide

Chapter 2

The generous and grateful behaviour of Mrs Miller

MR ALLWORTHY and Mrs Miller were just sat down to breakfast when Blifil who had gone out very early that morning returned to make one of the company

[illegible]

you with the remembrance of ever having shewn any kindness to such a villain What is the matter child?" said the uncle "I fear I have shown kindness in my life to the un worthy more than once But charity doth not adopt the vices of its objects" "O, sir!" returned Blifil "it is not without the secret direction of Providence that you mention the word adoption Your adopted son, sir, that Jones, that wretch whom you nourished in your bosom, hath proved one of the greatest villains upon earth" 'By all that's sacred, 'tis false," cries Mrs Miller 'Mr Jones is no villain He is one of the worthiest creatures breathing, and if any other person had called him villain, I would have thrown all this boiling water in his face" Mr Allworthy looked very much amazed at this behaviour But she did not give him leave to speak, before, turning to him, she cried, "I hope you will not be angry with me, I would not offend you, sir, for the world, but, indeed, I could not bear to hear him called so" "I must own, madam," said Allworthy, very gravely 'I am a little surprized to hear you so warmly defend a fellow you do not know' 'O! I do know him, Mr Allworthy," said she "indeed I do, I should be the most ungrateful of all wretches if I denied it O! he hath preserved me and my little family we have all reason to bless him while we live— And I pray Heaven to bless him and turn the hearts of his malicious enemies I know I find, I see he hath such' 'You surprize me, madam, still more" said Allworthy 'sure you must mean some other It is impossible you should have any such obligations to the man my nephew mentions' 'Too surely' answered she 'I have obligations to him of the greatest and tenderest kind He hath been the preserver of me and mine Believe me, sir he hath been abused grossly abused to you I know he hath, or you whom I know to be all goodness and honour would not, after the many kind and tender things I have heard you say of this poor helpless child have so disdainfully called him fellow—Indeed, my best of friends, he deserves a kinder appellation from you had you heard the good the kind, the grateful things which I have heard him utter of you He never upon your head I do not love that child there better than he loves you'

'I see sir, now" said Blifil with one of those grinning sneers with which the devil marks his best beloved 'Mrs Miller really doth know him I suppose you will find she is not the only one of your acquaintance to whom he hath exposed you As for my character, I perceive, by some hints she hath thrown out, he hath been very free with it, but I forgive him" "And the Lord forgive you, sir!" said Mrs Miller, "we have all sins enough to stand in need of his forgiveness"

"Upon my word, Mrs Miller," said Allworthy, 'I do not take this behaviour of yours to my nephew kindly, and I do assure you, as any reflections which you cast upon him must come only from that wickedest of men, they would only serve, if that were possible, to heighten my resentment against him for I must tell you, Mrs Miller, the young man who now stands before you hath ever been the warmest advocate for the ungrateful wretch whose cause you espouse This, I think, when you hear it from my own mouth, will make you wonder at so much baseness and ingratitude"

'You are deceived, sir," answered Mrs Miller, "if they were the last words which were to issue from my lips, I would say you were deceived, and I once more repeat it, the Lord forgive those who have deceived you! I do not pretend to say the young man is without faults, but they are all the faults of wildness and of youth, faults which he may, nay, which I am certain he will relinquish, and, if he should not, they are vastly overbalanced by one of the most humane, tender, honest hearts that ever man was blest with"

"Indeed Mrs Miller," said Allworthy, 'had this been related of you, I should not have believed it" "Indeed, sir," answered she, "you will believe everything I have said, I am sure you will and when you have heard the story which I shall tell you (for I will tell you all) you will be so far from being offended, that you will own (I know your justice so well), that I must have been the most despicable and most ungrateful of wretches if I had acted any other part than I have'

'Well madam,' said Allworthy, "I shall be very glad to hear any good excuse for a behaviour which, I must confess, I think wants an excuse And now, madam will you be pleased to let my nephew proceed in his story without interruption He would not have introduced a matter of slight consequence with such a preface Perhaps even this story will cure you of your mistake"

Mrs Miller gave tokens of submission, and then Mr Blifil began thus 'I am sure, sir, if you don't think proper to resent the ill usage of Mrs Miller, I shall easily forgive what affects me only I think your goodness hath not deserved this indignity at her hands

Well child said Allworthy but what is this new instance? What hath he done of late?

What cries Blifil notwithstanding all Mrs Miller hath said I am very sorry to relate and what you should never have heard from me had it not been a matter impossible to conceal from the whole world In short he hath killed a man I will not say murdered—for perhaps it may not be so construed in law and I hope the best for his sake

Allworthy looked shocked and blessed himself and then turning to Mrs Miller he cried Well, madam what say you now?

Why I say sir answered she that I never was more concerned at anything in my life but if the fact be true I am convinced the man whoever he is was in fault Heaven knows there are many villains in this town who make it their business to provoke young gentlemen Nothing but the greatest provocation could have tempted him for of all the gentlemen I ever had in my house I never saw one so gentle or so sweet tempered He was beloved by everyone in the house and every one who came near it

While she was thus running on a violent knocking at the door interrupted their conversation and prevented her from proceeding further or from receiving any answer for as she concluded this was a visitor to Mr Allworthy she hastily retired taking with her her little girl whose eyes were all over blubbered at the melancholy news she heard of Jones who used to call her his little wife and not only gave her many playthings but spent whole hours in playing with her himself

Some readers may perhaps be pleased with these minute circumstances in relating of which we follow the example of Plutarch one of the best of our brother historians and others to whom they may appear trivial will we hope at least pardon them as we are never prolix on such occasions

Chapter 3

The arrival of Mr Western with some matters concerning the paternal authority

Mrs Miller had not long left the room when Mr Western entered but not before a small wrangling bout had passed between him and his chairmen for the fellows who had moreover farther encouraged by his generosity (for he had given them of his own accord sixpence more than their fare) they therefore very boldly demanded another shilling which so provoked the squire that he not only bestowed many hearty curses on them at the door but retained his anger after he came into the room swearing that all the Londoners were like the court and thought of nothing but plundering country gentlemen D—n me says he if I won t walk in the rain rather than get into one of their hand barrows again They have jolted me more in a mile than Brown Bess would in a long fox chase

When his wrath on this occasion was a little appeased he resumed the same passionate tone on another There says he there is fine business forwards now The hounds have changed at last and when we imagined we had a fox to deal with od rat it it turns out to be a badger at last!

Pray my good neighbour said Allworthy drop your metaphors and speak a little plainer Why then says the squire to tell you plainly we have been all this time afraid of a son of a whore of a bastard of somebody s I don t know whose not I And now here s a confounded son of a whore of a lord who may be a bastard too for what I know or care for he shall never have a daughter of mine by my consent They have beggared the nation but they shall never beggar me My land shall never be sent over to Hanover

You surprize me much my good friend said Allworthy Why zounds! I am surprized myself answered the squire I went to zee sister Western last night according to her own appointment and there I was had into a whole room full of women There was my lady cousin Bellaston and my Lady Betty and my Lady Catherine and my lady I don t know who d—n me if ever you catch me among such a kennel of hoop petticoat b—s! D—n me I d rather be run by my own dogs as one Acton was that the story book says was turned into a hare and his own dogs killed un and eat un Od rabbit it no mortal was ever run in such a manner if I dodged one way one had me if I offered to clap back another snapped me O certainly one of the greatest matches in England says one cousin (here he attempted to mimic them) A very advantageous offer indeed cries another cousin (for you must know they be all my cousins thof I never zeed half o um before) Surely says that fat a—se b—, my Lady Bellaston cousin you must be out of your wits to think of refusing such an offer'

Now I begin to understand says All worthy some person hath made proposals to Miss Western which the ladies of the family approve but is not to your liking

My liking! said Western how the devil should it? I tell you it is a lord and those are always volks whom you know I always re solved to have nothing to do with Did unt I refuse a matter of vorty years purchase now for a bit of land which one o um had a mind to put into a park only because I would have no dealings with lords and dost think I would marry my daughter zu? Besides ben t I engaged to you and did I ever go off any bargain when I had promised?

As to that point neighbour said All worthy I entirely release you from any en gagement No contract can be binding between parties who have not a full power to make it at the time nor ever afterwards acquire the power of fulfilling it

Slud! then answered Western I tell you I have power and I will fulfil it Come along with me directly to Doctors Commons I will get a licence and I will go to sister and take away the wench by force and she shall ha un or I will lock her up and keep her

swered he Why then sir cries Allworthy I can truly say without a compliment either to you or the young lady that when this match

bours and between whom there had always existed so mutual an intercourse and good harmony I thought a most desirable event and with regard to the young lady not only the concurrent opinion of all who knew her but my own observation assured me that she would be an inestimable treasure to a good husband I shall say nothing of her personal qualifications which certainly are admirable her good nature her charitable disposition her modesty are too well known to need any panegyric but she hath one quality which existed in a high degree in that best of women who is now one of the first of angels which as it is not of a glaring kind more commonly escapes observation so little indeed is it re- marked that I want a word to express it I must use negitives on this occasion I never heard anything of pertness or what is called repartee out of her mouth no pretence to wit much less to that kind of wisdom which is the result only of great learning and ex perience the affectation of which in a young woman is as absurd as any of the affectations of an ape No dictatorial sentiments no judi cial opinions no profound criticisms When ever I have seen her in the company of men she hath been all attention with the modesty of a learner not the forwardness of a teacher You ll pardon me for it but I once to try her only desired her opinion on a point which was controverted between Mr Thwackum and Mr Square To which she answered with much sweetness You will pardon me good Mr Allworthy I am sure you cannot in earnest think me capable of deciding any point in which two such gentlemen disagree Thwac kum and Square who both alike thought themselves sure of a favourable decision seconded my request She answered with the same good humour I must absolutely be ex cused for I will affront neither so much as to give my judgment on his side Indeed she always shewed the highest deference to the

tainly real

Here Blifil sighed bitterly upon which Western whose eyes were full of tears at the praise of Sophia blubbered out Don t be chicken hearted for shat ha her d—n me shat ha her if she was twenty times as good

Remember your promise sir cried All worthy I was not to be interrupted Well shat unt answered the squire I won t speak another word

Now my good friend continued All worthy I have dwelt so long on the merit of this young lady partly as I really am in love with her character and partly that fortune (for the match in that light is really advan tageous on my nephew s side) might not be imagined to be my principal view in having or be guilty of any violence or injustice to possess myself of them Now to force a woman into a marriage contrary to her consent or approbation is an act of such injustice and oppress on that I wish the laws of our country could restrain it but a good conscience is never lawless in the worst regulated state and will provide those laws for itself which the neglect of legislators hath forgotten to supply This is surely a case of that kind for is it not cruel nay impious to force a woman into that state against her will for her behaviour in

...ial duties in an adequate manner is no easy task and shall we lay this burthen upon a woman while we at the same time deprive her of all that assistance which may enable her to undergo it? Shall we tear her very heart from her while we enjoin her duties to which a whole heart is scarce equal? I must speak very plainly here I think parents who act in this manner are accessories to all the guilt which their children afterwards incur and of course must before a just judge expect to partake of their punishment but if they could avoid this good heaven! is there a soul who can bear the thought of having contributed to the damnation of his child?

For these reasons my best neighbour as I see the inclinations of this young lady are most unhappily averse to my nephew I must decline any further thoughts of the honour you intended him though I assure you I shall always retain the most grateful sense of it

Well sir said Western (the froth bursting forth from his lips the moment they were uncorked) you cannot say but I have heard you out and now I expect you ll hear me and if I don t answer every word on t why then I ll consent to gee the matter up First then I desire you to answer me one question—Did not I beget her? did not I beget her? answer me that They say indeed it is a wise father that knows his own child but I am sure I have the best title to her for I bred her up But I believe you will allow me to be her father and if I be

ask you and if surely
...
me

side that I am only desiring her to take away half my estate now and t other half when I die Well and what is it all vor? Why is unt it to make her happy? It s enough to make one mad to hear volks talk if I was going to marry myself then she would ha reason to cry and to blubber but on the contrary han t I offered to bind down my land in such a manner that I could not marry if I would seeing as narro woman upon earth would ha me What the devil in hell can I do more? I contribute to her damnation!—Zounds! I d zee all the world d—n d bevore her little vinger should be hurt Indeed Mr Allworthy you must excuse me but I am surprized to hear you talk in zuch a manner and I must say take it how you will that I thought you had more sense

Allworthy resented this reflection only with a smile nor could he if he would have endeavoured it have conveyed into that smile any mixture of malice or contempt His smiles at folly were indeed such as we may suppose the angels bestow on the absurdities of mankind

Blifil now desired to be permitted to speak a few words As to using any violence on the young lady I am sure I shall never consent to it My conscience will not permit me to use violence on any one much less on a lady for whom however cruel she is to me I shall always preserve the purest and sincerest affection but yet I have read that women are seldom proof against perseverance Why may I not hope then by such perseverance at last to a parent hath at least a negative voice in these matters nay I have heard this very young lady herself say so more than once and declare that she thought children inexcusable who married in direct opposition to the will of their parents Besides though the other ladies of the family seem to favour the pretensions of my lord I

this murder which he hath committed if the law should spare his life—

What s that? cries Western Murder! hath he committed a murder and is there any hopes of seeing him hanged?—Tol de rol tol lol de rol Here he fell a singing and capering about the room

Child says Allworthy this unhappy passion of yours distresses me beyond measure I heartily pity you and would do every fair thing to promote your success."

'I desire no more," cries Blifil, "I am convinced my dear uncle hath a better opinion of me than to think that I myself would accept of more."

"Lookee," says Allworthy, "you have my leave to write, to visit, if she will permit it—but I insist on no thoughts of violence I will have no confinement, nothing of that kind attempted"

'Well, well," cries the squire, "nothing of that kind shall be attempted, we will try a little longer what fair means will effect; and if this fellow be but hanged out of the way—Tol lol de rol! I never heard better news in my life—I warrant everything goes to my mind—Do, prithee, dear Allworthy, come and dine with me at the Hercules Pillars I have bespoke a shoulder of mutton roasted, and a spare rib of pork, and a fowl and egg sauce There will be nobody but ourselves unless we have a mind to have the landlord for I have sent Parson Supple down to Basingstoke after my tobacco-box which I left at an inn there, and I would not lose it for the world,

tion, and soon after the squire went off singing and capering at the hopes of seeing the

he would endeavour to conquer a passion, in which I cannot,' says he, flatter you with any hopes of succeeding It is certainly a vulgar error, that aversion in a woman may be conquered by perseverance Indifference may perhaps sometimes yield to it but the usual triumphs gained by perseverence in a lover are over caprice prudence, affectation, and often an exorbitant degree of levity, which excites women not over warm in their constitutions to indulge their vanity by prolonging the time of courtship even when they are well enough pleased with the object, and resolve (if they ever resolve at all) to make him a very pitiful amends in the end But a fixed dislike as I am afraid this is will rather gather strength than be conquered by time Besides my dear I have another apprehension which you must excuse I am afraid this passion which you have for this fine young creature hath her beautiful person too much for its object and is unworthy of the name of that love which is the only foundation of matrimonial felicity To admire, to like, and to long for the possession of a beautiful woman, without any regard to her sentiments towards us is I am afraid too natural but love, I believe, is the child of love only, at least, I am pretty confident that to love the creature who we are assured hates us is not in human nature Examine your heart therefore, thoroughly, my good boy, and if upon examination, you have but the least suspicion of this kind, I am sure your own virtue and religion will impel you to drive so vicious a passion from your heart, and your good sense will soon enable you to do it without pain"

The reader may pretty well guess Blifil's answer, but, if he should be at a loss, we are not at present at leisure to satisfy him, as our history now hastens on to matters of higher importance, and we can no longer bear to be absent from Sophia

Chapter 4

An extraordinary scene between Sophia and her aunt

The lowing heifer and the bleating ewe, in herds and flocks, may ramble safe and unregarded through the pastures These are indeed, hereafter doomed to be the prey of man yet many years are they suffered to enjoy their liberty undisturbed But if a plump doe be discovered to have escaped from the forest and to repose herself in some field or grove, the whole parish is presently alarmed, every man is ready to set dogs after her, and, if she is preserved from the rest by the good squire, it is only that he may secure her for his own eating

I have often considered a very fine young woman of fortune and fashion, when first found strayed from the pale of her nursery to be in pretty much the same situation with this doe The town is immediately in an uproar, she is hunted from park to play, from court to assembly from assembly to her own chamber and rarely escapes a single season from the jaws of some devourer or other, for, if her friends protect her from some, it is only to deliver her over to one of their own chusing often more disagreeable to her than any of the rest while whole herds or flocks of other women securely, and scarce regarded, traverse the park, the play, the opera, and the assembly, and though, for the most part at least they are at last devoured yet for a long time do they wanton in liberty without disturbance or controul

Of all these paragons none ever tasted more of this persecution than poor Sophia Her ill stars were not contented with all that she had suffered on account of Blifil they now raised her another pursuer who seemed likely to torment her no less than the other had done For though her aunt was less violent she was no less assiduous in teizing her than her father had been before

The servants were no sooner departed after dinner than Mrs Western who had opened the matter to Sophia informed her That she expected his lordship that very afternoon and intended to take the first opportunity of leaving her alone with him If you do madam answered Sophia with some spirit I shall take the first opportunity of leaving him by himself How! madam! cries the aunt is this the return you make me for my kindness in relieving you from your confinement at your father's? You know madam said Sophia the cause of that confinement was a refusal to comply with my father in accepting a man I detested and will my dear aunt who hath relieved me from that distress involve me in another equally bad? And do you think then madam answered Mrs Western "that there is no difference between my Lord Fellamar and Mr Blifil? "Very little in my opinion cries Sophia and if I must be condemned to one I would certainly have the merit of sacrificing myself to my father's pleasure "Then my pleasure I find said the aunt hath very little weight with you but that consideration shall not move me I act from nobler motives The view of aggrandizing my family of ennobling yourself is what I proceed upon Have you no sense of ambition? Are there no charms in the thoughts of having a coronet on your coach? None upon my honour said Sophia A pincushion upon my coach would please me just as well "Never mention honour cries the aunt It becomes not the mouth of such a wretch I am sorry niece you force me to use these words but I cannot bear your groveling temper you have none of the blood of the Westerns in you But however mean and base your own ideas are you shall bring no imputation on mine I will never suffer the world to say of me that I encouraged you in refusing one of the best matches in England a match which besides its advantage in fortune would do honour to almost any family and hath indeed in title the advantage of ours" "Surely says Sophia I am born deficient and have not the senses with which other people are blessed there must be certainly some sense which can relish the delights of sound and show which I have not for surely mankind would not labour so much nor sacrifice so much for the obtaining nor would they be so elate and proud with possessing what appeared to them as it doth to me the most insignificant of all trifles

No no miss cries the aunt you are born with as many senses as other people but I assure you you are not born with a sufficient understanding to make a fool of me or to expose my conduct to the world so I declare this to you upon my word and you know I believe how fixed my resolutions are unless you agree to see his lordship this afternoon I will with my own hands deliver you to morrow morning to my brother and will never henceforth interfere with you nor see your face again Sophia stood a few moments silent after this speech which was uttered in a most angry and peremptory tone and then bursting into tears she cryed Do with me madam whatever you please I am the most miserable undone wretch upon earth if my dear aunt forsakes me where shall I look for a protector? My dear niece cries she you will have a very good protector in his lordship a protector whom nothing but a hankering after that vile fellow Jones can make you decline Indeed madam said Sophia you wrong me How can you imagine after what you have shewn me if I had ever any such thoughts that I should not banish them for ever? If it will satisfy you I will receive the sacrament upon it never to see his face again

But child dear child said the aunt be reasonable can you invent a single objection?

I have already I think told you a sufficient objection answered Sophia What? cries the aunt I remember none Sure madam said Sophia I told you he had used me in the rudest and vilest manner Indeed child answered she I never heard you or did not understand you —but what do you mean by this rude vile manner? Indeed madam" said Sophia I am almost ashamed to tell you He caught me in his arms pulled me down upon the settee and thrust his hand into my bosom and kissed it with such violence that I have the mark upon my left breast at this moment Indeed! said Mrs. Western "Yes, indeed madam," answered Sophia "my father luckily came in at that instant or Heaven knows what rudeness he intended to have proceeded to I am astonished and con founded cries the aunt No woman of the name of Western hath been ever treated so since we were a family I would have torn the eyes of a prince out if he had attempted such freedoms with me It is impossible! sure Sophia you must invent this to raise my in dignation against him I hope madam said Sophia you have too good an opinion of me to imagine me capable of telling an un truth Upon my soul it is true I should have stabbed him to the heart had I been present returned the aunt Yet surely he could have no dishonourable design it is impossible! he durst not besides his proposals shew he hath not for they are not only honourable but generous I don t know the age allows too great freedoms A distant salute is all I would have allowed before the ceremony I have had lovers formerly not so long ago neither sev eral lovers though I never would consent to marriage and I never encouraged the least freedom It is a foolish custom and what I never would agree to No man kissed more of me than my cheek It is as much as one can bring oneself to give lips up to a husband and indeed could I ever have been persuaded to marry I believe I should not have soon been brought to endure so much You will par don me dear madam said Sophia if I make one observation you own you have had many lovers and the world knows it even if you should deny it You refused them all and I am convinced one coronet at least among them You say true dear Sophy answered she I had once the offer of a title Why then said Sophia will you not suffer me to refuse this once? It is true child said she I have refused the offer of a title but it was not so good an offer that is not so very very good an offer — Yes madam said Sophia but you have had very great pro posals from men of vast fortunes It was not the first nor the second nor the third advan tageous match that offered itself I own it was not said she Well madam continued Sophia and why may not I expect to have a second perhaps better than this? You are now but a young woman and I am convinced that I may not be left alone at least this eve- ning grant me that and I will submit if you think after what is past I ought to see him in your company Well I will grant it cries the aunt Sophy you know I love you and can deny you nothing You know the easiness of my nature I have not always been so easy I have been formerly thought cruel by the men I mean I was called the cruel Parthenissa I have broke many a window that has had verses to the cruel Parthenissa in it Sophy I was never so handsome as you and yet I had the human form Thus run she on for near half an hour upon herself and her conquests and her cruelty till the arrival of my lord who after a most tedious visit during which Mrs. Western never once offered to leave the room retired not much more satisfied with the aunt than with the niece for Sophia had brought her aunt into so excellent a temper that she consented to almost everything her niece said and agreed that a little distant behaviour might not be improper to so forward a lover

Thus Sophia by a little well directed flat tery for which surely none will blame her obtained a little ease for herself and at least put off the evil day And now we have seen our heroine in a better situation than she hath been for a long time before we will look a little after Mr Jones whom we left in the most deplorable situation that can be well imagined

Chapter 5

Mrs Miller and Mr Nightingale visit Jones in the prison

WHEN Mr Allworthy and his nephew went to meet Mr Western Mrs Miller set forwards to her son in law s lodgings in order to acquaint him with the accident which had befallen his friend Jones but he had known it long before from Partridge (for Jones when he left Mrs Miller had been furnished with a room in the same house with Mr Nightingale) forwards to the Gatehouse where she heard he was and where Mr Nightingale was ar rived before her

The firmness and constancy of a true friend is a circumstance so extremely delightful to persons in any kind of distress that the dis tress itself if it be only temporary and admits of relief is more than compensated by bringing this comfort with it Nor are instances of this kind so rare as some superficial and inaccurate observers have reported To say the truth want of compassion is not to be numbered among our general faults The black ingredient which fouls our disposition is envy Hence our eye is seldom I am afraid turned upward to those who are manifestly greater better wiser or happier than ourselves without some degree of malignity while we commonly look downwards on the mean and miserable with sufficient benevolence and pity In fact I have remarked that most of the defects which have discovered themselves in the friendships within my observation have arisen from envy only a hellish vice and yet one from which I have known very few absolutely exempt But enough of a subject which if pursued would lead me too far

Whether it was that Fortune was apprehensive lest Jones should sink under the weight of his adversity and that she might thus lose any future opportunity of tormenting him or whether she really abated somewhat of her severity towards him she seemed a little to relax her persecution by sending him the company of two such faithful friends and what is perhaps more rare a faithful servant For Partridge though he had many mor

tion in the presence of his friends Partridge brought an account that Mr Fitzpatrick was still alive though the surgeon declared that he had very little hopes Upon which Jones fetching a deep sigh Nightingale said to him

My dear Tom why should you afflict yourself so upon an accident which whatever be the consequence can be attended with no danger to you and in which your conscience cannot accuse you of having been the least to blame? If the fellow should die what have you done more than taken away the life of a ruffian in your own defence? So will the coroner s inquest certainly find it and then you will be easily admitted to bail and though you must undergo the form of a trial yet it is a trial which many men would stand for you for a shilling Come come Mr Jones says Mrs Miller chear yourself up I knew you could not be the aggressor and so I told Mr Allworthy and so he shall acknowledge too before I have done with him

Jones gravely answered "That whatever might be his fate he should always lament the having shed the blood of one of his fellow creatures as one of the highest misfortunes which could have befallen him But I have another misfortune of the tenderest kind— O! Mrs Miller I have lost what I held most dear upon earth That must be a mistress, said Mrs Miller but come come I know more than you imagine (for indeed Partridge had blabbed all) and I have heard more than you know Matters go better I promise you than you think and I would not give Blifil sixpence for all the chance which he hath of the lady

Indeed my dear friend indeed answered Jones you are an entire stranger to the cause of my grief If you was acquainted with the story you would allow my case admitted of no comfort I apprehend no danger from Blifil I have undone myself Don t despair replied Mrs Miller you know not what a woman can do and if anything be in my power I promise you I will do it to serve you It is my duty My son my dear Mr Nightingale who is so kind to tell me he hath obliga

me —but as you have been so kind to mention it there is a favour which perhaps may be in your power I see you are acquainted with the lady (how you came by your information I know not) who sits, indeed very near my heart If you could contrive to deliver this (giving her a paper from his pocket) I shall for ever acknowledge your goodness

Give it me said Mrs Miller If I see it not in her own possession before I sleep may my next sleep be my last! Comfort yourself my good young man! be wise enough to take warning from past follies and I warrant all shall be well and I shall yet see you happy with the most charming young lady in the world for I so hear from every one she is

Believe me madam " said he "I do not disturbances I have unfortunately occasioned in your house for which I heartily ask your pardon, I am not an abandoned profligate Though I have been hurried into vices I do not approve a vicious character, nor will I ever, from this moment deserve it"

Mrs Miller expressed great satisfaction in these declarations, in the sincerity of which she averred she had an entire faith, and now the remainder of the conversation past in the joint attempts of that good woman and Mr Nightingale to cheer the dejected spirits of Mr Jones, in which they so far succeeded as to leave him much better comforted and satisfied than they found him, to which happy alteration nothing so much contributed as the kind undertaking of Mrs Miller to deliver his letter to Sophia, which he despaired of finding any means to accomplish, for when Black George produced the last from Sophia he informed Partridge that she had strictly charged him on pain of having it communicated to her father, not to bring her any answer He was, moreover, not a little pleased to find he had so warm an advocate to Mr Allworthy himself in this good woman who was in reality, one of the worthiest creatures in the world

After about an hour s visit from the lady (for Nightingale had been with him much longer) they both took their leave, promising to return to him soon during which Mrs Miller said she hoped to bring him some good news from his mistress, and Mr Nightingale promised to enquire into the state of Mr Fitzpatrick s wound, and likewise to find out some of the persons who were present at the rencounter

The former of these went directly in quest of Sophia whither we likewise shall now attend her

Chapter 6

In which Mrs Miller pays a visit to Sophia

Access to the young lady was by no means difficult for as she lived now on a perfect friendly footing with her aunt she was at full liberty to receive what visitants she pleased

Sophia was dressing when she was acquainted that there was a gentlewoman below to wait on her As she was neither afraid nor ashamed to see any of her own sex Mrs Miller was immediately admitted

Curtsies and the usual ceremonials between women who are strangers to each other, being past Sophia said I have not the pleasure to know you madam' 'No madam' answered Mrs Miller, 'and I must beg pardon for intruding upon you But when you know what has induced me to give you this trouble, I hope——" "Pray, what is your business, madam?" said Sophia, with a little emotion. "Madam, we are not alone," replied Mrs Miller, in a low voice. "Go out, Betty," said Sophia

When Betty was departed, Mrs Miller said, "I was desired, madam, by a very unhappy young gentleman, to deliver you this letter" Sophia changed colour when she saw the direction, well knowing the hand and after some hesitation, said—"I could not conceive, madam, from your appearance, that your business had been of such a nature —Whomever you brought this letter from, I shall not open it I should be sorry to entertain an unjust suspicion of any one, but you are an utter stranger to me"

'If you will have patience, madam," answered Mrs Miller, "I will acquaint you who I am, and how I came by that letter" "I have no curiosity, madam, to know anything," cries Sophia, 'but I must insist on your delivering that letter back to the person who gave it you"

Mrs Miller then fell upon her knees, and in the most passionate terms implored her compassion, to which Sophia answered "Sure, madam, it is surprizing you should be so very strongly interested in the behalf of this person I would not think, madam"—"No madam," says Mrs Miller, "you shall not think anything but the truth I will tell you all and you will not wonder that I am interested He is the best natured creature that ever was born"——She then began and related the story of Mr Anderson ——After this she cried "This madam, this is his goodness but I have much more tender obligations to him He hath preserved my child '——Here, after shedding some tears she related everything concerning that fact, suppressing only those circumstances which would have most reflected on her daughter, and concluded with saying "Now, madam, you shall judge whether I can ever do enough for so kind so good so generous a young man, and sure he is the best and worthiest of all human beings"

The alterations in the countenance of Sophia had hitherto been chiefly to her disadvantage and had inclined her complexion to too great paleness, but she now waxed redder, if possible, than vermilion, and cried, "I know not what to say certainly what arises from gratitude cannot be blamed——But what service can my reading this letter do your friend, since I am resolved never——' Mrs Miller fell again to her entreaties, and begged to be forgiven, but she could not she said carry it back Well madam says Sophia I cannot help it if you will force it upon me—Certainly you may leave it whether I will or no What Sophia meant or whether she meant anything I will not presume to determine but Mrs Miller actually understood this as a hint and presently laying the letter down on the table took her leave having first begged permission to wait again on Sophia which request had neither assent nor denial

The letter lay upon the table no longer than till Mrs Miller was out of sight for then Sophia opened and read it

This letter did very little service to his cause for it consisted of little more than confessions of his own unworthiness and bitter lamentations of despair together with the most solemn protestations of his unalterable fidelity to Sophia of which he said he hoped to convince her if he had ever more the honour of being admitted to her presence and that he could account for the letter to Lady Bellaston in such a manner that though it would not entitle him to her forgiveness he hoped at least to obtain it from her mercy And concluded with vowing that nothing was ever less in his thoughts than to marry Lady Bellaston

Though Sophia read the letter twice over with great attention his meaning still remained a riddle to her nor could her invention suggest to her any means to excuse Jones She certainly remained very angry with him though indeed Lady Bellaston took up so much of her resentment that her gentle mind had but little left to bestow on any other person

That lady was most unluckily to dine this very day with her aunt Western and in the afternoon they were all three by appointment to go together to the opera and thence to Lady Thomas Hatchet s drum Sophia would have gladly been excused from all but would not disoblige her aunt and as to the arts of counterfeiting illness she was so entirely a stranger to them that it never once entered into her head When she was drest therefore down she went resolved to encounter all the horrors of the day and a most disagreeable one it proved for Lady Bellaston took every opportunity very civilly and slily to insult her to all which her dejection of spirits disabled her from making any return and indeed to confess the truth she was at the very best but an indifferent mistress of repartee

Another misfortune which befel poor Sophia was the company of Lord Fellamar whom she met at the opera and who attended her to the drum And though both places were too publick to admit of any particularities and she was farther relieved by the musick at the one place and by the cards at the other she could not however enjoy herself in his company for there is something of delicacy in women which will not suffer them to be even easy in the presence of a man whom they know to have pretensions to them which they are disinclined to favour

Having in this chapter twice mentioned a drum a word which our posterity it is hoped will not understand in the sense it is here applied we shall notwithstanding our present *haste stop a moment to describe the enter*tainment here meant and the rather as we can in a moment describe it

A drum then is an assembly of well-dressed persons of both sexes most of whom play at cards and the rest do nothing at all while the mistress of the house performs the part of the landlady at an inn and like the landlady of an inn prides herself in the number of her guests though she doth not always like her, get anything by it

No wonder then as so much spirits must be required to support any vivacity in these scenes of dulness that we hear persons of fashion eternally complaining of the want of them a complaint confined entirely to upper life How insupportable must we imagine this round of impertinence to have been to Sophia at this time how difficult must she have found it to force the appearance of gaiety into her looks when her mind dictated nothing but

eve of some great event

Chapter 7

A pathetic scene between Mr Allworthy and Mrs Miller bestow on him at their separation and the distresses to which that loss had subjected him of all which she had received a full account from the faithful retailer Partridge She then explained the obligations she had to Jones not that she was entirely explicit with regard to her daughter for though she had the utmost confidence in Mr Allworthy and though there could be no hopes of keeping an affair secret which was unhappily known to more than half a dozen yet she could not prevail with herself to mention those circumstances which reflected most on the chastity of poor Nancy but smothered that part of her evidence as cautiously as if she had been before a judge and the girl was now on her trial for the murder of a bastard

Allworthy said there were few characters so absolutely vicious as not to have the least mixture of good in them However says he I cannot deny but that you have some obligations to the fellow bad as he is and I shall therefore excuse what hath past already but must insist you never mention his name to me more for I promise you it was upon the fullest and plainest evidence that I resolved to take the measures I have taken Well sir says she I make not the least doubt but time will shew all matters in their true and natural colours and that you will be convinced this poor young man deserves better of you than some other folks that shall be nameless

Madam cries Allworthy a little ruffled I will not hear any reflections on my nephew and if ever you say a word more of that kind I will depart from your house that instant He is the worthiest and best of men and I once more repeat it to you he hath carried his friendship to this man to a blameable length by too long concealing facts of the blackest die The ingratitude of the wretch to this good young man is what I most resent for madam I have the greatest reason to imagine he had laid a plot to supplant my nephew in my favour and to have disinherited him

I am sure sir answered Mrs Miller a little frightened (for though Mr Allworthy had the utmost sweetness and benevolence in his smiles he had great terror in his frowns) I shall never speak against any gentleman you are pleased to think well of I am sure sir such behaviour would very little become me especially when the gentleman is your nearest relation but sir you must not be angry with me you must not indeed for my good wishes to this poor wretch Sure I may call him so now though once you would have been angry with me if I had spoke of him with the least disrespect How often have I heard you call him your son? How often have you prattled to me of him with all the fondness of a parent? Nay sir I cannot forget the many tender expressions the many good things you have told me of his beauty and his parts and his virtues of his good nature and generosity I am sure sir I cannot forget them for I find them all true I have experienced them in my own cause They have preserved my family You must pardon my tears sir indeed you must When I consider the cruel reverse of fortune which this poor youth to whom I am so much obliged hath suffered when I consider the loss of your favour which I know he valued more than his life I must I must lament him If you had a dagger in your hand ready to plunge into my heart I must lament the misery of one whom you have loved and I shall ever love

[illegible]

Come madam let us consider a little about your daughter I cannot blame you for rejoicing in a match which promises to be advantageous to her but you know this advantage in a great measure depends on the father s reconciliation I know Mr Nightingale very well and have formerly had concerns with him I will make him a visit and endeavour to serve you in this matter I believe he is a worldly man but as this is an only son and the thing is now irretrievable perhaps he may in time be brought to reason I promise you I will do all I can for you

Many were the acknowledgments which the poor woman made to Allworthy for this kind and generous offer nor could she refrain from taking this occasion again to express her gratitude towards Jones to whom said she I owe the opportunity of giving you sir this present trouble Allworthy gently stopped her but he was too good a man to be really offended with the effects of so noble a principle as now actuated Mrs Miller and indeed had not this new affair inflamed his former anger against Jones it is possible he might have been a little softened towards him by the report of an action which malice itself could not have derived from an evil motive

Mr Allworthy and Mrs Miller had been above an hour together when their conversation was put an end to by the arrival of Blifil

and another person, which other person was no less than Mr Dowling, the attorney, who was now become a great favourite with Mr Blifil, and whom Mr Allworthy, at the desire of his nephew, had made his steward, and had like-

tancy and, in the meantime, was employed in transacting some affairs which the squire then had in London in relation to a mortgage

This was the principal affair which then brought Mr Dowling to town, therefore he took the same opportunity to charge himself with some money for Mr Allworthy, and to make a report to him of some other business, in all which, as it was of much too dull a nature to find any place in this history, we will leave the uncle, nephew, and their lawyer concerned and resort to other matters

Chapter 8

Containing various matters

Before we return to Mr Jones, we will take one more view of Sophia

Though that young lady had brought her aunt into great good humour by those soothing methods which we have before related, she had not brought her in the least to abate of her zeal for the match with Lord Fellamar This zeal was now inflamed by Lady Bellaston, who had told her the preceding evening, that she was well satisfied from the conduct of Sophia, and from her carriage to his lordship, that all delays would be dangerous and that the only way to succeed was to press the match forward with such rapidity that the young lady should have no time to reflect, and be obliged to consent while she scarce knew what she did, in which manner, she said, one-half of the marriages among people of condition were brought about A fact very probably true, and to which, I suppose, is owing the mutual tenderness which afterwards exists among so many happy couples

A hint of the same kind was given by the same lady to Lord Fellamar, and both these so readily embraced the advice, that the very next day was, at his lordship s request appointed by Mrs. Western for a private interview between the young parties This was communicated to Sophia by her aunt and insisted upon in such high terms that after having urged everything she possibly could invent against it without the least effect, she at last agreed to give the highest instance of complacence which any young lady can give, and consented to see his lordship

As conversations of this kind afford no great

declarations of the most pure and ardent passion to the silent blushing Sophia, she at last collected all the spirits she could raise, and with a trembling low voice said, 'My lord you must be yourself conscious whether your former behaviour to me hath been consistent with the professions you now make" "Is there," answered he, "no way by which I can atone for madness? what I did, I am afraid must have too plainly convinced you that the violence of love had deprived me of my senses" "Indeed, my lord," said she "it is in your power to give me a proof of an affection which I much rather wish to encourage, and to which I should think myself more beholden" "Name it, madam ' said my lord very warmly "My

"Can you be so cruel to call it pretended" says he 'Yes my lord," answered Sophia "all professions of love to those whom we persecute are most insulting pretences *This pur*suit of yours is to me a most cruel persecution nay, it is taking a most ungenerous advantage of my unhappy situation' 'Most lovely, most adorable charmer, do not accuse me," cries he, 'of taking an ungenerous advantage, while I have no thoughts but what are directed to your honour and interest, and while I have no view, no hope no ambition, but to throw myself, honour fortune, everything at your feet" My lord ' says she, ' it is that fortune and those honours which gave you the advantage of which I complain These are the charms which have seduced my relations but to me they are things indifferent If your lordship will merit my gratitude, there is but one way ' 'Pardon me, divine creature," said he, "there can be none All I can do for you is so much your due, and will give me so much pleasure that there is no room for your gratitude' "Indeed my lord" answered she, "you may obtain my gratitude, my good opinion, every kind thought and wish which it is in my power to bestow, nay, you may obtain them with ease, for sure to a generous mind it must be easy to grant my request. Let me beseech you, then, to cease a pursuit in which you can never have any success For your own sake as well as mine, I entreat this favour, for sure you are too noble to have any pleasure in tormenting an unhappy creature What can your lordship propose but uneasiness to yourself by a perseverance, which, upon my honour, upon my soul, cannot, shall not prevail with me, whatever distresses you may drive me to" Here my lord fetched a deep sigh, and then said—'Is it then, madam, that I am so unhappy to be the object of your dislike and scorn, or will you pardon me if I suspect there is some other?' Here he hesitated, and Sophia answered with some spirit, 'My lord, I shall not be accountable to you for the reasons of my conduct I am obliged to your lordship for the generous offer you have made I own it is beyond either my deserts or expectations, yet I hope, my lord, you will not insist on my reasons when I declare I cannot accept it ' Lord Fellamar returned much to this which we do not perfectly understand and perhaps it could not all be strictly reconciled either to sense or grammar, but he concluded his ranting speech with saying, That if she had pre engaged herself to any gentleman however unhappy it would make him, he should think himself bound in honour to desist ' Perhaps my lord laid too much emphasis on the word gentleman for we cannot else well account for the indignation with which he inspired Sophia, who, in her answer, seemed greatly to resent some affront he had given her

While she speaking, with her voice more raised than usual Mrs Western came into the room, the fire glaring in her cheeks and the

all sensible of the honour done us and I must tell you, Miss Western the family expect a different behaviour from you ' Here my lord interfered on behalf of the young lady, but to no purpose the aunt proceeded till Sophia pulled out her handkerchief threw herself into girl hath had a foolish education, neither adapted to her fortune nor her family Her father I am sorry to say it, is to blame for everything The girl hath silly country notions of bashfulness Nothing else, my lord, upo my honour, I am convinced she hath a goo understanding at the bottom, and will b brought to reason"

This last speech was made in the absence o Sophia, for she had some time before left th room, with more appearance of passion tha she had ever shown on any occasion, and no his lordship, after many expressions of thanl to Mrs Western, many ardent professions o passion which nothing could conquer, an many assurances of perseverance, which Mr Western highly encouraged, took his leave fo this time

Before we relate what now passed betwee Mrs Western and Sophia, it may be proper t mention an unfortunate accident which ha happened, and which had occasioned the r turn of Mrs Western with so much fury, as w have seen

The reader then must know, that the mai who at present attended on Sophia was recom mended by Lady Bellaston, with whom she ha lived for some time in the capacity of a coml brush· she was a very sensible girl, and had r ceived the strictest instructions to watch h young lady very carefully. These instruction we are sorry to say, were communicated to h by Mrs Honour, into whose favour Lady Be laston had now so ingratiated herself, that th violent affection which the good waitin woman had formerly borne to Sophia was en tirely obliterated by that great attachmen which she had to her new mistress

Now, when Mrs Miller was departed, Bett (for that was the name of the girl), returnin to her young lady, found her very attentivel engaged in reading a long letter, and the vi ible emotions which she betrayed on that o casion might have well accounted for som suspicions which the girl entertained, but in deed they had yet a stronger foundation, fo she had overheard the whole scene whic passed between Sophia and Mrs Miller

Mrs Western was acquainted with all th matter by Betty, who after receiving man commendations and some rewards for her f delity was ordered, that, if the woman wh brought the letter came again, she should in troduce her to Mrs Western herself

Unluckily, Mrs Miller returned at the ver time when Sophia was engaged with his lord ship Betty, according to order, sent her d rectly to the aunt, who, being mistress of s many circumstances relating to what had pa the day before, easily imposed upon the poo woman to believe that Sophia had communicated the whole affair and so pumped every thing out of her which she knew relating to the letter and relating to Jones

This poor creature might indeed be called simplicity itself She was one of that order of mortals who are apt to believe everything which is said to them to whom nature hath neither indulged the offensive nor defensive weapons of deceit and who are consequently liable to be imposed upon by any one who will only be at the expense of a little falsehood for that purpose Mrs Western having drained Mrs Miller of all she knew which indeed was but little but which was sufficient to make the aunt suspect a great deal dismissed her with assurances that Sophia would not see her that she would send no answer to the letter nor ever receive another nor did she suffer her to depart without a handsome lecture on the merits of an office to which she could afford no better name than that of procuress —This discovery had greatly discomposed her temper when coming into the apartment next to that in which the lovers were she overheard Sophia very warmly protesting against his lordship s addresses At which the rage already kindled burst forth and she rushed in upon her niece in a most furious manner as we have already described together with what past at that time till his lordship s departure

No sooner was Lord Fellamar gone than Mrs Western returned to Sophia whom she upbraided in the most bitter terms for the ill use she had made of the confidence reposed in her and for her treachery in conversing with a man with whom she had offered but the day before to bind herself in the most solemn oath never more to have any conversation Sophia protested she had maintained no such conversation How how! Miss Western " said the aunt "will you deny your receiving a letter from him yesterday? A letter madam! answered Sophia somewhat surprized It is not very well bred miss replies the aunt to repeat my words I say a letter and I insist upon your showing it me immediately I scorn a lie madam said Sophia I did receive a letter but it was without my desire and indeed I may say against my consent "Indeed indeed miss cries the aunt you ought to be ashamed of owning you had received it at all but where is the letter? for I will see it

To this peremptory demand Sophia paused some time before she returned an answer and at last only excused herself by declaring she had not the letter in her pocket which was indeed true upon which her aunt losing all manner of patience asked her niece this short question whether she would resolve to marry Lord Fellamar or no? to which she received the strongest negative Mrs Western then replied with an oath or something very like one that she would early the next morning deliver her back into her father s hand

Sophia then began to reason with her aunt in the following manner — Why madam must I of necessity be forced to marry at all? Consider how cruel you would have thought it in your own case and how much kinder your parents were in leaving you to your liberty What have I done to forfeit this liberty? I will never marry contrary to my father s consent nor without asking yours——And when I ask the consent of either improperly it will be then time enough to force some other marriage upon me Can I bear to hear this cries Mrs Western from a girl who hath now a letter from a murderer in her pocket? I have no such letter I promise you answered Sophia and if he be a murderer he will soon be in no condition to give you any further disturbance How Miss Western! said the aunt have you the assurance to speak of him in this manner to own your affection for such a villain to my face? Sure madam said Sophia you put a very strange construction on my words Indeed Miss Western " cries the lady I shall not bear this usage you have learnt of your father this manner of treating me he hath taught you to give me the lie He hath totally ruined you by this false system of education and please heaven he shall have the comfort of its fruits for once more I declare to you that to morrow morning I will carry you back I will withdraw all my forces from the field and remain henceforth like the wise king of Prussia in a state of perfect neutrality You are both too wise to be regulated by my measures so prepare yourself for to-morrow morning you shall evacuate this house

Sophia remonstrated all she could but her aunt was deaf to all she said In this resolution therefore we must at present leave her as there seems to be no hopes of bringing her to change it.

Chapter 9

What happened to Mr Jones in the prison

Mr Jones passed about twenty four melancholy hours by himself unless when reb

by the company of Partridge before Mr Nightingale returned not that this worthy young man had deserted or forgot his friend for indeed he had been much the greatest part of the time employed in his service

He had heard upon enquiry that the only persons who had seen the beginning of the unfortunate rencounter were a crew belonging to a man-of-war which then lay at Deptford To Deptford therefore he went in search of this crew where he was informed that the men he sought after were all gone ashore He then traced them from place to place till at last he

he came in) As soon as they were alone Nightingale taking Jones by the hand cried Come my brave friend be not too much dejected at what I am going to tell you—I am sorry I am the messenger of bad news but I think it my duty to tell you I guess already what that bad news is cries Jones The poor gentleman then is dead — I hope not answered Nightingale He was alive this morning though I will not flatter you I fear from the son to apprehend let what would happen but forgive me my dear Tom if I entreat you to make the worst of your story to your friends If you disguise anything to us you will only be an enemy to yourself

What reason my dear Jack have I ever given you said Jones to stab me with so cruel a suspicion? Have patience cries Nightingale and I will tell you all After the most diligent enquiry I could make I at last met with two of the fellows who were present at this unhappy accident and I am sorry to say they do not relate the story so much in your favour as you yourself have told it Why what do they say? cries Jones Indeed what I am sorry to repeat as I am afraid of the consequence of it to you They say that they were at too great a distance to overhear any words that passed between you but they both agree that the first blow was given by you Then upon my soul answered Jones they injure me He not only struck me first but struck me without the least provocation What should induce those villains to accuse me falsely?

Nay that I cannot guess said Nightingale and if you yourself and I who am so heartily your friend cannot conceive a reason why they should belie you what reason will an indifferent court of justice be able to assign why they should not believe them? I repeated the ques-

friendly part by you for he begged them often to consider that there was the life of a man in the case and asked them over and over if they were certain to which they both answered that they were and would abide by their evidence upon oath For heaven s sake my dear friend recollect yourself for, if this should appear to be the fact it will be your business to think in time of making the best of your interest I would not shock you but you know I believe the severity of the law whatever verbal provocations may have been given you

Alas! my friend cries Jones what interest hath such a wretch as I? Besides, do you think I would even wish to live with the reputation of a murderer? If I had any friends (as alas! I have none) could I have the confidence to solicit them to speak in the behalf of a man condemned for the blackest crime in human nature? Believe me, I have no such hope but I have some reliance on a throne still greatly superior which will I am certain afford me all the protection I merit

He then concluded with many solemn and vehement protestations of the truth of what he had at first asserted

The faith of Nightingale was now again staggered and began to incline to credit his friend when Mrs Miller appeared and made a sorrowful report of the success of her embassy which when Jones had heard he cried out most heroically Well my friend I am now indifferent as to what shall happen at least with regard to my life and if it be the will of Heaven that I shall make an atonement with that for the blood I have spilt I hope the Divine Goodness will one day suffer my honour to be cleared and that the words of a dying man at least will be believed so far as to justify his character

A very mournful scene now past between the prisoner and his friends at which as few readers would have been pleased to be present so few I believe will desire to hear it particularly related We will therefore pass on to the entrance of the turnkey who acquainted Jones that there was a lady without who desired to speak with him when he was at leisure

Jones declared his surprize at this message

He said He knew no lady in the world whom he could possibly expect to see there How ever as he saw no reason to decline seeing any person Mrs Miller and Mr Nightingale pres ently took their leave and he gave orders to have the lady admitted

If Jones was surprized at the news of a visit from a lady how greatly was he astonished when he discovered this lady to be no other than Mrs Waters! In this astonishment then we shall leave him awhile in order to cure the surprize of the reader who will likewise prob ably not a little wonder at the arrival of this lady

Who this Mrs Waters was the reader pretty well knows what she was he must be perfectly satisfied. He will therefore be pleased to re member that this lady departed from Upton in the same coach with Mr Fitzpatrick and the other Irish gentleman and in their company travelled to Bath

Now there was a certain office in the gift of Mr Fitzpatrick at that time vacant namely that of a wife for the lady who had lately filled that office had resigned or at least deserted her duty Mr Fitzpatrick therefore having thor oughly examined Mrs Waters on the road, found her extremely fit for the place which on their arrival at Bath he presently con ferred upon her and she without any scruple accepted As husband and wife this gentleman and lady continued together all the time they stayed at Bath and as husband and wife they arrived together in town

Whether Mr Fitzpatrick was so wise a man as not to part with one good thing till he had secured another which he had at present only a prospect of regaining or whether Mrs Waters had so well discharged her office that he in tended still to retain her as principal and to make his wife (as is often the case) only her deputy I will not say but certain it is he never mentioned his wife to her never communi cated to her the letter given him by Mrs West ern nor ever once hinted his purpose of re possessing his wife much less did he ever mention the name of Jones For though he in tended to fight with him wherever he met him he did not imitate those prudent persons who think a wife a mother a sister or sometimes a whole family the safest seconds on these occa sions The first account therefore which she had of all this was delivered to her from his lips after he was brought home from the tavern where his wound had been drest

As Mr Fitzpatrick however had not the clearest way of telling a story at any time and was now perhaps a little more confused than usual it was some time before she discovered that the gentleman who had given him this wound was the very same person from whom her heart had received a wound which though not of a mortal kind was yet so deep that it had left a considerable scar behind it But no sooner was she acquainted that Mr Jones himself was the man who had been committed to the Gatehouse for this supposed murder than she took the first opportunity of com mitting Mr Fitzpatrick to the care of his nurse and hastened away to visit the conqueror

She now entered the room with an air of gaiety which received an immediate check from the melancholy aspect of poor Jones who started and blessed himself when he saw her Upon which she said Nay I do not wonder at your surprize I believe you did not expect to see me for few gentlemen are troubled here with visits from any lady unless a wife You see the power you have over me Mr Jones Indeed I little thought when we parted at Upton that our next meeting would have been in such a place Indeed madam says your face is more miserable than any dungeon in the universe What can be the matter with you? I thought madam said Jones as you knew of my being here you knew the unhappy reason Pugh! says she you have pinked a man in a duel that s all Jones exprest some indignation at this levity and spoke with the utmost contrition for what had happened To which she answered Well then sir if you take it so much to heart I will relieve you the

have the more honour from curing him but the king s surgeon hath seen him since and whatever be the consequence, that he was entirely the aggressor, and that you was not in the least to blame"

Jones expressed the utmost satisfaction at the account which Mrs Waters brought him He then informed her of many things which she well knew before, as who Mr Fitzpatrick was, the occasion of his resentment, &c He likewise told her several facts of which she was ignorant, as the adventure of the muff, and other particulars, concealing only the name of Sophia He then lamented the follies and vices of which he had been guilty, every one of which, he said, had been attended with such ill consequences, that he should be unpardonable if he did not take warning and quit those vicious courses for the future He lastly concluded with assuring her of his resolution to sin no more, lest a worse thing should happen to him

Mrs Waters with great pleasantry ridiculed all this, as the effects of low spirits and confinement She repeated some witticisms about the devil when he was sick, and told him, 'She doubted not but shortly to see him at liberty, and as lively a fellow as ever, and then," says she, "I don t question but your conscience will be safely delivered of all these qualms that it is now so sick in breeding '

Many more things of this kind she uttered, some of which it would do her no great honour, in the opinion of some readers, to remember, nor are we quite certain but that the an

. . . .

that it ended at last with perfect innocence, and much more to the satisfaction of Jones than of the lady, for the former was greatly transported with the news she had brought him, but the latter was not altogether so pleased with the penitential behaviour of a man whom she had, at her first interview, conceived a very different opinion of from what she now entertained of him

Thus the melancholy occasioned by the report of Mr Nightingale was pretty well effaced, but the dejection into which Mrs Miller had thrown him still continued The account she gave so well tallied with the words of Sophia herself in her letter, that he made not the least doubt but that she had disclosed his letter to her aunt, and had taken a fixed resolution to abandon him The torments this thought gave him were to be equalled only by a piece of news which fortune had yet in store for him, and which we shall communicate in the second chapter of the ensuing book

BOOK XVIII

Containing about six days

Chapter 1

A farewell to the reader

We are now reader arrived at the last stage of our long journey As we have therefore travelled together through so many pages let us behave to one another like fellow travellers in a stage coach who have passed several days in the company of each other and who, notwithstanding any bickerings or little animosities which may have occurred on the road generally make all up at last and mount, for the last time into their vehicle with chearfulness and good humour since after this one stage, it may possibly happen to us, as it commonly happens to them never to meet more

As I have here taken up this simile, give me leave to carry it a little farther I intend then, in this last book, to imitate the good company I have mentioned in their last journey Now, it is well known that all jokes and raillery are at this time laid aside whatever characters any of the passengers have for the jest sake personated on the road are now thrown off, and the conversation is usually plain and serious

In the same manner, if I have now and then, in the course of this work, indulged any pleasantry for thy entertainment, I shall here lay it down The variety of matter, indeed which I shall be obliged to cram into this book, will afford no room for any of those ludicrous observations which I have elsewhere made, and which may sometimes, perhaps, have prevented thee from taking a nap when it was beginning to steal upon thee In this last book thou wilt find nothing (or at most very little) of that nature All will be plain narrative only, and indeed, when thou hast perused the many great events which this book will produce thou wilt think the number of pages contained in it scarce sufficient to tell the story

And now my friend I take this opportunity (as I shall have no other) of heartily wishing thee well. If I have been an entertaining companion to thee I promise thee it is what I have desired If in anything I have offended it was really without any intention Some things perhaps here said may have hit thee or thy friends but I do most solemnly declare they were not pointed at thee or them I question not but thou hast been told among other stories of me that thou wast to travel with a very scurrilous fellow but whoever told thee so did me an injury No man detests and despises scurrility more than myself nor hath any man more reason for none hath ever been treated with more and what is a very severe fate I have had some of the abusive writings of those very men fathered upon me who in other of their works have abused me themselves with the utmost virulence

All these works however I am well convinced will be dead long before this page shall offer itself to thy perusal for however short the period may be of my own performances they will most probably outlive their own infirm author and the weakly productions of his abusive contemporaries

Chapter 2

Containing a very tragical incident

WHILE Jones was employed in those unpleasant meditations with which we left him tormenting himself Partridge came stumbling into the room with his face paler than ashes his eyes fixed in his head his hair standing on end and every limb trembling In short he looked as he would have done had he seen a spectre or had he indeed been a spectre himself

Jones who was little subject to fear could not avoid being somewhat shocked at this sudden appearance He did indeed himself [illegible]

[illegible]

I was obliged to stay in the outward roo[illegible] am sure I wish I had been a hundred miles off rather than have heard what I have heard Why what is the matter? said Jones The matter sir? O good Heaven! answered Partridge was that woman who is just gone out the woman who was with you at Upton? "She was Partridge cried Jones And did you really sir go to bed with that woman said he trembling — I am afraid what past between us is no secret " said Jones — Nay but pray sir for Heaven s sake sir answer me cries Partridge You know I did cries Jones Why then the Lord have mercy upon your soul and forgive you cries Partridge but as sure as I stand here alive you have been a bed with your own mother wickedness

[illegible]

Sure cries Jones Fortune will never have done with me till she hath driven me to distraction But why do I blame Fortune? I am myself the cause of all my misery All the dreadful mischiefs which have befallen me are the consequences only of my own folly and vice What thou hast told me Partridge hath almost deprived me of my senses! And was Mrs Waters then—but why do I ask? for thou must certainly know her——If thou hast any affection for me nay if thou hast any pity let me beseech thee to fetch this miserable wo[illegible]

[illegible]

agonies of grief and despair in wh[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] in the same house where the wounded gentleman was lodged [illegible] him in quest of her

If the reader will please [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] interview between Partr[illegible] Mrs Waters when she spent a whole [illegible] with Mr Jones Instances of this kind [illegible]

gamesters &c as usurers brokers and other thieves of this kind whether it be that the one way of cheating is a discountenance or reflection upon the other or that money which is the common mistress of all cheats makes them regard each other in the light of rivals but Nightingale no sooner heard the story than he exclaimed against the fellow in terms much severer than the justice and honesty of Allworthy had bestowed on him

Allworthy desired Nightingale to retain both the money and the secret till he should hear farther from him and if he should in the meantime see the fellow that he would not take the least notice to him of the discovery which he had made He then returned to his lodgings where he found Mrs Miller in a very dejected condition on account of the information she had received from her son in law Mr Allworthy with great chearfulness told her that he had much good news to communicate and with little further preface acquainted her that he had brought Mr Nightingale to consent to see his son and did not in the least doubt to effect a perfect reconciliation between them though he found the father more sowered by another accident of the same kind which had happened in his family He then mentioned the running away of the uncle s daughter which he had been told by the old gentleman and which Mrs Miller and her son in law did not yet know

The reader may suppose Mrs Miller received this account with great thankfulness and no less pleasure but so uncommon was her friendship to Jones that I am not certain whether the uneasiness she suffered for his sake did not overbalance her satisfaction at hearing a piece of news tending so much to the happiness of her own family nor whether even this very news as it reminded her of the obligations she had to Jones did not hurt as well as please her when her grateful heart said to her While my own family is happy how miserable is the poor creature to whose generosity we owe the beginning of all this happiness!

Allworthy having left her a little while to chew the cud (if I may use that expression) on these first tidings told her he had still something more to impart which he believed would give her pleasure I think said he I have discovered a pretty considerable treasure belonging to the young gentleman your friend but perhaps indeed his present situation may be such that it will be of no service to him The latter part of the speech gave Mrs Miller to understand who was meant and she answered with a sigh I hope not sir I hope so too cries Allworthy with all my heart but my nephew told me this morning he had heard a very bad account of the affair —

Good Heaven! sir said she— Well I must not speak and yet it is certainly very hard to be obliged to hold one s tongue when one hears — Madam said Allworthy you may say whatever you please you know me too well to think I have a prejudice against any one and as for that young man I assure you I should be heartily pleased to find he could acquit himself of everything and particularly of this sad affair You can testify the affection I have formerly borne him The world I know censured me for loving him so much I did not withdraw that affection from him without thinking I had the justest cause Believe me Mrs Miller I should be glad to find I have been mistaken Mrs Miller was going eagerly to reply when a servant acquainted her that a gentleman without desired to speak with her immediately Allworthy then enquired for his nephew and was told that he had been for some time in his room with the gentleman who used to come to him and whom Mr Allworthy guessing rightly to be Mr Dowling he desired presently to speak with him

When Dowling attended Allworthy put the case of the banknotes to him without mentioning any name and asked in what manner such a person might be punished To which Dowling answered He thought he might be indicted on the Black Act but said as it was a matter of some nicety it would be proper to go to counsel He said he was to attend counsel presently upon an affair of Mr Western s and if Mr Allworthy pleased he would lay the case before them This was agreed to and then Mrs Miller opening the door cried I ask pardon I did not know you had company but Allworthy desired her to come in saying he had finished his business Upon which Mr Dowling withdrew and Mrs Miller introduced Mr Nightingale the younger to return thanks for the great kindness done him by Allworthy but she had scarce patience to let the young gentleman finish his speech before she interrupted him saying O sir! Mr Nightingale brings great news about poor Mr Jones he hath been to see the wounded gentleman who is out of all danger of death and what is more, declares he fell upon poor Mr Jones himself and beat him I am sure sir you would not have Mr Jones be a coward If I was a man myself I am sure if any man was to strike me I should draw my sword Do pray my dear tell Mr Allworthy tell him all yourself Nightingale then confirmed what Mrs Miller had said and concluded with many handsome things of Jones who was he said one of the best natured fellows in the world and not in the least inclined to be quarrelsome Here Nightingale was going to cease when Mrs Miller again begged him to relate all the many dutiful expressions he had heard him make use of towards Mr Allworthy To say the utmost good of Mr Allworthy" cries Nightingale is doing no more than strict justice and can have no merit in it but indeed I must say no man can be more sensible of the obligations he hath to so good a man than is poor Jones Indeed sir I am convinced the weight of your displeasure is the heaviest burthen he lies under He hath often lamented it to me and hath as often protested in the most solemn manner he hath never been intentionally guilty of any offence towards you nay he hath sworn he would rather die a thousand deaths than he would have his conscience upbraid him with one disrespectful ungrateful or undutiful thought towards you But I ask pardon sir I am afraid I presume to intermeddle too far in so tender a point You have spoke no more than what a Christian ought cries Mrs Miller Indeed Mr Nightingale, answered Allworthy "I applaud your generous friendship and I wish he may merit it of you I confess I am glad to hear the report you bring from this unfortunate gentleman and if that matter should turn out to be as you represent it (and indeed I doubt nothing of what you say) I may perhaps in time be brought to think better than lately I have of this young man for this good gentlewoman here nay all who know me can witness that I loved him as dearly as if he had been my own son Indeed I have considered him as a child sent by fortune to my care I still remember the innocent the helpless situation in which I found him I feel the tender pressure of his little hands at this moment He was my darling indeed he was At which words he ceased and the tears stood in his eyes

As the answer which Mrs Miller made may lead us into fresh matters we will here stop to account for the visible alteration in Mr Allworthy s mind and the abatement of his anger to Jones Revolutions of this kind it is true do frequently occur in histories and dramatic writers for no other reason than because the history or play draws to a conclusion and are justified by authority of authors yet though we insist upon as much authority as any author whatever we shall use this power very sparingly and never but when we are driven to it by necessity which we do not at present foresee will happen in this work

This alteration then in the mind of Mr Allworthy was occasioned by a letter he had just received from Mr Square and which we shall give the reader in the beginning of the next chapter

Chapter 4

Containing two letters in very different stiles

My Worthy Friend —I informed you in my last that I was forbidden the use of the waters as they were found by experience rather to increase than lessen the symptoms of my distemper I must now acquaint you with a piece of news which I believe will afflict my friends more than it hath afflicted me Dr Harrington and Dr Brewster have informed me that there is no hopes of my recovery

I have somewhere read that the great use of philosophy is to learn to die I will not there fore so far disgrace mine as to show any surprize at receiving a lesson which I must be thought to have so long studied Yet to say the truth one page of the Gospel teaches this lesson better than all the volumes of antient or modern philosophers The assurance it gives us of another life is a much stronger support to a good mind than all the consolations that are drawn from the necessity of nature the emptiness or satiety of our enjoyments here or any other topic of those declamations which are sometimes capable of arming our minds with a stubborn patience in bearing the thoughts of death but never of raising them to a real contempt of it and much less of making us think it is a real good I would not here be understood to throw the horrid censure of atheism or even the absolute denial of immortality on all who are called philosophers Many of that sect as well antient as modern have from the light of reason discovered some hopes of a future state but in reality that light was so faint and glimmering and the hopes were so incertain and precarious that it may be justly doubted on which side their belief turned Plato himself concludes his Phædon with declaring that his best arguments amount o

to raise a probability and Cicero himself seems rather to profess an inclination to believe, than any actual belief in the doctrines of immortality As to myself to be very sincere with you I never was much in earnest in this faith till I was in earnest a Christian

You will perhaps wonder at the latter expression but I assure you it hath not been till very lately that I could with truth call myself so The pride of Philosophy had intoxicated my reason and the sublimest of all wisdom appeared to me as it did to the Greeks of old to be foolishness God hath however been so gracious to show me my error in time and to bring me into the way of truth, before I sunk into utter darkness for ever

I find myself beginning to grow weak, I shall therefore hasten to the main purpose of this letter

When I reflect on the actions of my past life I know of nothing which sits heavier upon my conscience than the injustice I have been guilty of to that poor wretch your adopted son I have indeed not only connived at the villany of others but been myself active in injustice towards him Believe me my dear friend when I tell you on the word of a dying man he hath been basely injured As to the principal fact, upon the misrepresentation of which you discarded him I solemnly assure you he is innocent When you lay upon your supposed death bed he was the only person in the house who testified any real concern and what happened afterwards arose from the wildness of his joy on your recovery and I am sorry to say it from the baseness of another person (but it is my desire to justify the innocent and to accuse none) Believe me my friend this young man hath the noblest generosity of heart the most perfect capacity for friendship the highest integrity and indeed every virtue which can ennoble a man He hath some faults but among them is not to be numbered the least want of duty or gratitude towards you On the contrary I am satisfied when you dismissed him from your house his heart bled for you more than for himself

Worldly motives were the wicked and base reasons of my concealing this from you so long to reveal it now I can have no inducement but the desire of serving the cause of truth of doing right to the innocent and of making all the amends in my power for a past offence I hope this declaration therefore will have the effect desired and will restore this deserving young man to your favour the hearing of which while I am yet alive will afford the utmost consolation to,

Sir,
Your most obliged,
obedient humble servant
THOMAS SQUARE

The reader will after this scarce wonder at the revolution so visibly appearing in Mr Allworthy notwithstanding he received from Thwackum by the same post another letter of a very different kind which we shall here add as it may possibly be the last time we shall have occasion to mention the name of that gentleman

SIR

I am not at all surprized at hearing from your worthy nephew a fresh instance of the villany of Mr Square the atheist's young pupil I shall not wonder at any murders he may commit and I heartily pray that your own blood may not seal up his final commitment to the place of wailing and gnashing of teeth

Though you cannot want sufficient calls to repentance for the many unwarrantable weaknesses exemplified in your behaviour to this wretch so much to the prejudice of your own lawful family and of your character I say [illegible]

to give you some admonition in order to bring you to a due sense of your errors I therefore pray you seriously to consider the judgment which is likely to overtake this wicked villain and let it serve at least as a warning to you that you may not for the future despise the advice of one who is so indefatigable in his prayers for your welfare

Had not my hand been withheld from due correction I had scourged much of this diabolical spirit out of a boy of whom from his infancy I discovered the devil had taken such entire possession But reflections of this kind now come too late

I am sorry you have given away the living of Westerton so hastily I should have applied on that occasion earlier, had I thought you would not have acquainted me previous to the disposition —Your objection to pluralities is being righteous over much If there were any crime in the practice so many godly men would not agree to it If the vicar of Aldergrove should die (as we hear he is in a declining way) I hope you will think of me, since I am certain you must be convinced of my most sincere attachment to your highest welfare—a welfare to which all worldly considerations are as trifling as the small tithes mentioned in Scripture are, when compared to the weighty matters of the law

I am sir,

Your faithful humble servant,

ROGER THWACKUM

This was the first time Thwackum ever wrote in this authoritative stile to Allworthy and of this he had afterwards sufficient reason to repent as in the case of those who mistake the highest degree of goodness for the lowest degree of weakness Allworthy had indeed never liked this man He knew him to be proud and ill natured he also knew that his divinity it self was tinctured with his temper and such as in many respects he himself did by no means approve but he was at the same time an excel lent scholar and most indefatigable in teach ing the two lads Add to this the strict severity of his life and manners an unimpeached hon esty and a most devout attachment to religion So that upon the whole though Allworthy did not esteem nor love the man yet he could never bring himself to part with a tutor to the boys who was both by learning and industry extremely well qualified for his office and he hoped that as they were bred up in his own house and under his own eye he should be able to correct whatever was wrong in Thwac kum s instructions

Chapter 5

In which the history is continued

MR ALLWORTHY in his last speech had recollected some tender ideas concerning Jones which had brought tears into the good man s eyes. This Mrs Miller observing said Yes yes, sir your goodness to this poor young man is known notwithstanding all your care to con ceal it but there is not a single syllable of truth in what those villains said Mr Nightin gale hath now discovered the whole matter It seems these fellows were employed by a lord

[illegible]

gale here hath seen the o[illegible] a very pretty gentleman and hath told him all and is very sorry for what he undertook which he would never have done had he known Mr Jones to have been a gentleman

but he was told that he was a common strolling vagabond

Allworthy stared at all this and declared he was a stranger to every word she said Yes sir answered she I believe you are —It is a very different story I believe, from what those fellows told the lawyer

What lawyer, madam? what is it you mean? said Allworthy Nay nay said she this is so like you to deny your own goodness but Mr Nightingale here saw him Saw whom madam? answered he Why your lawyer sir said she that you so kindly sent to inquire into the affair I am still in the dark upon my honour said Allworthy Why then do you tell him my dear sir cries she Indeed sir said Nightingale I did see that very lawyer who went from you when I came into the room at an alehouse in Aldersgate in company with two of the fellows who were employed by Lord Fellamar to press Mr Jones and who were by that means present at the unhappy rencounter between him and Mr Fitzpatrick I own sir said Mrs Miller when I saw this gentleman come into the room to you I told Mr Nightingale that I apprehended you had sent him thither to in quire into the affair Allworthy showed marks of astonishment in his countenance at this myself sir more surprized at what you tell me than I have ever been before at anything in my whole life Are you certain this was the gentleman? I am most certain answered Nightingale At Aldersgate? cries Allworthy And was you in company with this lawyer and the two fellows? — I was sir said the other very near half an hour Well sir said Allworthy and in what manner did the lawyer behave? did you hear all that past between him and the fellows? No s r an swered Nightingale they had been together before I came —In my presence the lawyer said little but after I had several times ex amined the fellows who persisted in a story directly contrary to what I had heard from Mr Jones and which I find by Mr Fitzpatrick was a rank falshood the lawyer then desired the fellows to say nothing but what was the truth and seemed to speak so much in favour of Mr Jones that when I saw the same person with you I concluded your goodness had prompted you to send him thither — And did you not send him thither? says Mrs Mil ler— Indeed I did not answered Allworthy nor did I know he had gone on such an errand till this moment — I see it all! said Mrs Miller upon my soul I see it all! No wonder they have been closeted so close lately Son Nightingale let me beg you run for these fellows immediately—find them out if they are above ground I will go myself — Dear madam said Allworthy be patient and do me the favour to send a servant upstairs to call Mr Dowling hither if he be in the house or if not Mr Blifil Mrs Miller went out muttering something to herself and presently returned with an answer That Mr Dowling was gone but that the t other as she called him was coming

[illegible]

Allworthy was of a cooler disposition than the good woman whose spirits were all up in arms in the cause of her friend He was not however without some suspicions which were near akin to hers When Blifil came into the room he asked him with a very serious countenance and with a less friendly look than he had ever before given him Whether he knew anything of Mr Dowling s having seen any of the persons who were present at the duel between Jones and another gentleman?

There is nothing so dangerous as a question which comes by surprize on a man whose business it is to conceal truth or to defend falshood For which reason those worthy personages whose noble office it is to save the lives of their fellow-creatures at the Old Bailey take the utmost care by frequent previous examination to divine every question which may be asked their clients on the day of tryal that

I

ally without acquainting me

Blifil then answered I own sir, I have been guilty of an offence yet may I hope your pardon? — My pardon said Allworthy very angrily — Nay sir answered Blifil I knew you would be offended yet surely my dear uncle will forgive the effects of the most amiable of human weaknesses Compassion for those who do not deserve it I own is a crime and yet it is a crime from which you yourself are not entirely free I know I have been guilty of it in more than one instance to this very person and I will own I did send Mr Dowling not on a vain and fruitless inquiry but to discover the witnesses and to endeavour to soften their evidence This sir is the truth which though I intended to conceal from you I will not deny

I confess said Nightingale this is the light in which it appeared to me from the gentleman s behaviour

Now madam said Allworthy I believe you will once in your life own you have entertained a wrong suspicion and are not so angry with my nephew as you was

Mrs Miller was silent for though she could not so hastily be pleased with Blifil whom she looked upon to have been the ruin of Jones yet in this particular instance he had imposed upon her as well as upon the rest so entirely had the devil stood his friend And indeed I look upon the vulgar observation That the devil often deserts his friends and leaves them in the lurch to be a great abuse on that gentleman s character Perhaps he may sometimes desert those who are only his cup acquaintance or who at most are but half his but he generally stands by those who are

by these surprizes causes frequently such an alteration in the countenance that the man is obliged to give evidence against himself And such indeed were the alterations which the countenance of Blifil underwent from this sudden question that we can scarce blame the eagerness of Mrs Miller who immediately cryed out Guilty upon my honour! guilty upon my soul!

Mr Allworthy sharply rebuked her for this impetuosity and then turning to Blifil who seemed sinking into the earth he said Why do you hesitate sir at giving me an answer? You certainly must have employed him for he would not of his own accord I believe have undertaken such an errand and especi ernment or as health is more perfectly established by recovery from some diseases so anger when removed often gives new life to affection This was the case of Mr Allworthy for Blifil having wiped off the greater suspicion the lesser which had been raised by Square s letter sunk of course and was forgotten and Thwackum with whom he was greatly offended bore alone all the reflections which Square had cast on the enemies of Jones

As for that young man the resentment of Mr Allworthy began more and more to abate towards him He told Blifil He did not only forgive the extraordinary efforts of his good nature but would give him the pleasure of following his example Then turning to Mrs Miller with a smile which would have become an angel he cryed What say you madam? shall we take a hackney-coach and all of us together pay a visit to your friend? I promise you it is not the first visit I have made in a prison

Every reader I believe will be able to answer for the worthy woman but they must ha e [illegible]

[illegible] ab e of feeling what now passed in the mind of Blifil but those who are will acknowledge that it was impossible for him to raise any objection to this visit Fortune however or the gentleman lately mentioned above stood his friend and prevented his undergoing so great a shock for at the very instant when the coach was sent for Partridge arrived and having called Mrs Miller from the company acquainted her with the dreadful accident lately come to light and hearing Mr Allworthy s intention begged her to find some means of stopping him For says he the matter must at all hazards be kept a secret from him and if he should now go he will find Mr Jones and his mother who arrived just as I left him lamenting over one another the horrid crime they have ignorantly committed

The poor woman who was almost deprived of her senses at his dreadful news was never less capable of invention than at present However as women are much readier at this than men she bethought herself of an excuse and returning to Allworthy said I am sure sir you will be surprized at hearing any objection from me to the kind proposal you just now made and yet I am afraid of the consequence of it if carried immediately into execut on You must imagine sir that all the calamities which have lately befallen this poor young fellow must have thrown him into the lowest dejection of spirits and now sir should we all of a sudden fling him into such a violent fit of joy as I know your presence will occasion it may I am afraid produce some fatal mischief especially as his servant who is without tells me he is very far from being well

Is his servant without? cries Allworthy pray call him hither I will ask him some [illegible]

whole story from his own mouth had promised to introduce him

Allworthy recollected Partridge the moment he came into the room though many years had passed since he had seen him Mrs Miller therefore might have spared here a formal oration in which indeed she was something prolix for the reader I believe may have observed already that the good woman among other things had a tongue always ready for the service of her friends

And are you said Allworthy to Partridge the servant of Mr Jones? I can t say sir answered he that I am regularly a servant but I live with him an t please your honour at present Non sum qualis eram as your honour very well knows

Mr Allworthy then asked him many questions concerning Jones as to his health and other matters to all which Partridge answered without having the least regard to what was but considered only what he would have things appear for a strict adherence to truth was not among the articles of this honest fellow s morality or his religion

[illegible]

before company They were no sooner left in private together than Allworthy began as in the following chapter

Chapter 6

In which the history is farther continued

SURE, friend said the good man you are the strangest of all human beings Not only to have suffered as you have formerly for obstinately persisting in a falsehood but to persist in it thus to the last and to pass thus upon the world for a servant of your own son! What interest can you have in all this? What can be your motive

I see sir said Partridge falling down upon his knees that your honour is prepossessed against me and resolved not to believe any thing I say and therefore what signifies my protestations? but yet there is One above who knows that I am not the father of this young man"

How! said Allworthy will you yet deny what you was formerly convicted of upon such unanswerable such manifest evidence? Nay what a confirmation is your being now found with this very man of all which twenty years ago appeared against you! I thought you had left the country! nay I thought you had been long since dead—In what manner did you know anything of this young man? Where did you meet with him unless you had kept some correspondence together? Do not deny this for I promise you it will greatly raise your son in my opinion to find that he hath such a sense of filial duty as privately to support his father for so many years

If your honour will have patience to hear me said Partridge I will tell you all — Being bid go on he proceeded thus When your honour conceived that displeasure against me it ended in my ruin soon after for I lost that I had nothing to trust to but the barber s shop which in a country place like that is a poor livelihood and when my wife died (for till that time I received a pension of £12 a year from an unknown hand which indeed I believe was your honour s own for nobody that ever I heard of doth these things besides) —but as I was saying when she died this pension forsook me so that now as I owed two or three small debts which began to be troublesome to me particularly one * which an attorney brought up by law charges from 15s to near £30 and as I found all my usual means of living had forsook me I packed up my little all as well as I could and went off

The first place I came to was Salisbury where I got into the service of a gentleman be longing to the law and one of the best gentle-men that ever I knew for he was not only good to me but I know a thousand good and charitable acts which he did while I staid with him and I have known him often refuse business because it was paultry and oppres sive You need not be so particular said Allworthy I know this gentleman and a very worthy man he is and an honour to his pro-fession — Well sir continued Partridge from hence I removed to Lymington where I was above three years in the service of another lawyer, who was likewise a very good sort of a man and to be sure one of the merriest gen tlemen in England Well sir at the end of the three years I set up a little school and was likely to do well again had it not been for a

it in a garden belonging to one of my neigh bours who was a proud revengeful man and employed a lawyer one—one—I can t think of his name but he sent for a writ against me and had me to size When I came there Lord have mercy upon me—to hear what the counsel lors said! There was one that told my lord a parcel of the confoundedest lies about me he said that I used to drive my hogs into other folk s gardens and a great deal more and at last he said he hoped I had at last brought my hogs to a fair market To be sure one would have thought that instead of being owner only of one poor little pig I had been the greatest hog merchant in England Well— Pray said Allworthy do not be so particular I have heard nothing of your son yet O it was a great many years answered Partridge be-fore I saw my son as you are pleased to call him —I went over to Ireland after this and over till your return to England —Then sir said he it was about half a year ago that I landed at Bristol where I staid some time and not finding it do there and hearing of a place between that and Gloucester where the barber was just dead I went thither and there I had been about two months when Mr Jones came thither He then gave Allworthy panegyrics on Jones and not forgetting to in sinuate the great love and respect which he had for Allworthy He concluded with say ing Now sir I have told your honour the whole truth And then repeated a most solemn protestation That he was no more the father of Jones than the Pope of Rome and im precated the most bitter curses on his head if he did not speak truth

What am I to think of this matter? cries Allworthy For what purpose should you so strongly deny a fact which I think it would be

* This is a fact which I knew happen to a poor clergyman in Dorsetshire by the villany of an attorney who not contented with the exorbitant

rather your interest to own? Nay sir an swered Partridge (for he could hold no longer) if your honour will not believe me you are like soon to have satisfaction enough I wish you had mistaken the mother of this young man as well as you have his father —And now being asked what he meant with all the symp toms of horror both in his voice and counte nance he told Allworthy the whole story which he had a little before expressed such desire to Mrs Miller to conceal from him

Allworthy was almost as much shocked at this discovery as Partridge himself had been while he related it Good heavens! says he in what miserable distresses do vice and im prudence involve men! How much beyond our des gns are the effects of wickedness sometimes carried! He had scarce uttered these words when Mrs Waters came hastily and abruptly into the room Partridge no sooner saw her than he cried Here sir here is the very woman herself This is the unfortunate mother of Mr Jones I am sure she will acquit me be fore your honour Pray madam—

Mrs Waters without paying any regard to what Partridge said and almost without tak ing any notice of him advanced to Mr All worthy I believe sir it is so long since I had the honour of seeing you that you do not recollect me Indeed answered Allworthy you are so very much altered on many ac counts that had not this man already ac quainted me who you are I should not have immediately called you to my remembrance Have you madam any particular business which brings you to me? Allworthy spoke this with great reserve for the reader may eas ly believe he was not well pleased with the conduct of this lady neither with what he had formerly heard nor with what Partridge had now delivered

Mrs Waters answered— Indeed sir I have very particular business with you and it is such as I can impart only to yourself I must desire therefore the favour of a word with you alone for I assure you what I have to tell you is of the utmost importance

Partridge was then ordered to withdraw but Then Partridge withdrew and that past be tween Mr Allworthy and Mrs Waters which is written in the next chapter

Chapter 7

Continuation of the history

MRS WATERS remaining a few moments silent Mr Allworthy could not refrain from saying I am sorry madam to perceive by what I have since heard that you have made so very ill a use— Mr Allworthy says she interrupting him I know I have faults but ingratitude to you is not one of them I never can nor shall forget your goodness which I own I have very little deserved but be pleased to wave all upbraiding me at present as I have so important an affair to communicate to you punished an innocent man in the person of him who hath just left us? Was he not the father of the child? Indeed he was not said Mrs Waters You may be pleased to remem ber sir I formerly told you you should one day know and I acknowledge myself to have been guilty of a cruel neglect in not having discovered it to you before Indeed I little knew how necessary it was Well madam said Allworthy be pleased to proceed You must remember sir said she a young fel low whose name was Summer Very well

young man up and maintained him at the university where I think he had finished his studies when he came to reside at your house a finer man I must say the sun never shone upon for besides the handsomest person I ever saw he was so genteel and had so much wit and good breeding Poor gentleman said Allworthy he was indeed untimely snatched away and little did I think he had any sins of this kind to answer for for I plainly perceive you are going to tell me he was the father of your child

Indeed sir answered she he was not

How! said Allworthy to what then tends all this preface? To a story sa d she which I am concerned falls to my lot to unfold to you O sir prepare to hear something which will surprize you will grieve you Speak said Allworthy I am conscious of no crime and cannot be afraid to hear Sir said she that Mr Summer the son of your friend educated at your expense who after living year in the hou e as if he had been your son died there of the small pox was tenderly lamented by you and buried as if he had been your own that Summer sir was the father of this child How! said Allworthy you con tradict yourself That I do not answered she he was indeed the father of this child but not by me Take care madam said Allworthy do not to shun the imputation of any crime be guilty of falshood Remember there is One from whom you can conceal nothing and before whose tribunal falshood will only aggravate your guilt Indeed sir says she I am not his mother nor would I now think myself so for the world I know your reason said Allworthy and shall rejoice as much as you to find it otherwise yet you must remember you yourself confest it before me So far what I confest said she was true that these hands conveyed the infant to your bed conveyed it thither at the command of its mother at her commands I afterwards owned it and thought myself by her generosity nobly rewarded both for my secrecy and my shame Who could this woman be? said Allworthy Indeed I tremble to name her answered Mrs Waters By all this preparation I am to guess that she was a relation of mine cried he Indeed she was a near one At which words Allworthy started and she continued— You had a sister sir A sister! repeated he looking aghast — As there is truth in heaven cries she your sister was the mother of that child you found between your sheets Can it be possible? cries he Good heavens! Have patience sir said Mrs Waters and I will unfold to you the whole story Just after your departure for London Miss Bridget came one day to the house of my mother She was pleased to say she had heard an extraordinary character of me for my learning and superior understanding to all the young women there so she was pleased to say She then bid me come to her to the great house where when I attended she employed me to read to her She expressed great satisfaction in my reading shewed great kindness to me and made me many presents At last she began to catechise me on the subject of secrecy to which I gave her such satisfactory answers that at last having locked the door of her room she took me into her closet and then locking that door likewise she said she should convince me of the vast reliance she had on my integrity by communicating a secret in which her honour and consequently her life was concerned She then stopt and after a silence of a few minutes during which she often wiped her eyes she inquired of me if I thought my mother might safely be confided in I answered I would stake my life on her fidelity She then imparted to me the great secret which laboured in her breast and which I believe was delivered with more pains than she afterwards suffered in childbirth It was then contrived that my mother and myself only should attend at the time and that Mrs Wilkins should be sent out of the way as she accordingly was to the very furthest part of Dorsetshire to inquire the character of a servant for the lady had turned away her own maid near three months before during all which time I officiated about her person upon trial as she said though as she afterwards declared I was not sufficiently handy for the place This and many other such things which she used to say of me were all thrown out to prevent any suspicion which Wilkins might hereafter have when I was to own the child for she thought it could never be believed she would venture to hurt a young woman with whom she had intrusted such a secret You may be assured sir I was well paid for all these affronts which together with being informed with the occasion of them very well contented me Indeed the lady had a greater suspicion of Mrs Wilkins than of any other person not that she had the least aver say that if Mrs Wilkins had committed a murder she believed she would acquaint you with it At last the expected day came and Mrs Wilkins who had been kept a week in readiness and put off from time to time upon some pretence or other that she might not return too soon was dispatched Then the child was born in the presence only of myself and my mother and was by my mother conveyed to her own house where it was privately kept by her till the evening of your return when I by the command of Miss Bridget conveyed it into the bed where you found it And all suspicions were afterwards laid asleep by the artful conduct of your sister in pretending ill will to the boy and that any regard she shewed him was out of mere complacence to you

Mrs Waters then made many protestations of the truth of this story and concluded by saying Thus sir you have at last discovered your nephew for so I am sure you will hereafter think him and I question not but he will be both an honour and a comfort to you under that appellation

"I need not madam said Allworthy express my astonishment at what you have told me and yet surely you would not and could not have put together so many circumstances to evidence an untruth I confess I recollect some passages relating to that Summer which formerly gave me a conceit that my sister had some liking to him I mentioned it to her for I had such a regard to the young man as well on h s own account as on his father s that I should willingly have consented to a match between them but she exprest the highest disdain of my unkind suspicion as she called it so that I never spoke more on the subject Good heavens! Well! the Lord disposeth all things —Yet sure it was a most unjustifiable conduct in my sister to carry this secret with her out of the world I promise you sir sa d Mrs Waters she always profest a contrary intention and frequently told me she intended one day to communicate it to you She said indeed she was highly rejoiced that her plot had succeeded so well and that you had of your own accord taken such a fancy to the child that it was yet unnecessary to make any express declaration Oh! sir had that lady lived to have seen this poor young man turned like a vagabond from your house nay sir could she have lived to hear that you had yourself employed a lawyer to prosecute him for a murder of which he was not guilty—Forgive me Mr Allworthy I must say it was unkind — Indeed you have been abused he never deserved it of you Indeed madam said Allworthy I have been abused by the person whoever he was that told you so Nay sir said she I would not be mistaken I did not presume to say you were guilty of any wrong The gentleman who came to me proposed no such matter he only said taking me for Mr Fitzpatrick s wife that if Mr Jones had murdered my husband I should be assisted with any money I wanted to carry on the prosecution by a very worthy gentleman who he said was well apprized what a villain I had to deal with It was by this man I found out who Mr Jones was and this man whose name is Dowling Mr Jones tells me is your steward I discovered his name by a very odd accident for tell you that I would assist in the prosecution? —— No sir answered she I will not charge him wrongfully He said I should be assisted but he mentioned no name Yet you must pardon me sir if from circumstances I thought it could be no other —- Indeed madam says Allworthy from circumstances I am too well convinced it was another Good Heaven! by what wonderful means is the blackest and deepest villany sometimes d scovered! —Shall I beg you madam to stay till the person you have mentioned comes for I expect him every minute? nay he may be perhaps already in the house

Allworthy then stept to the door in order to call a servant when in came not Mr Dowling but the gentleman who will be seen in the next chapter

Chapter 8

Further continuation

THE gentleman who now arrived was no other than Mr Western He no sooner saw Allworthy than without considering in the least the presence of Mrs Waters he began to vociferate in the following manner Fine doings at my house! A rare kettle of fish I have discovered at last! who the devil would be plagued with a daughter? What s the matter neighbour? said Allworthy Matter enough answered Western when I thought she was just a coming to nay when she had in a manner promised me to do as I would ha her and when I was a hoped to have had nothing more to do than to have sent for the lawyer and finished all what do you think I have found out? that the little b— hath bin playing tricks with me all the while and carrying on a correspondence with that bastard of yours Sister Western whom I have quarrelled with upon her account sent me word o t and I ordered her pockets to be searched when she was asleep and here I have got un signed with the son of a whore s own name packed her up in chamber again and tomorrow morning down she goes into the country unless she consents to be married directly and there she shall live in a garret upon bread and water all her days and the sooner such a b— breaks her heart the better, though d—n her that I believe is too tough

She will live long enough to plague me Mr Western answered Allworthy you know I have always protested against force and you yourself consented that none should be used 'Ay cries he that was only upon condition that she would consent without What the devil and doctor Faustus! shan t I do what I give me leave I will undertake once to argue with the young lady Will you? said Western why that is kind now and neighbourly and mayhap you will do more than I have been able to do with her for I promise you she hath a very good opinion of you Well sir said Allworthy if you will go home and release the young lady from her captivity I will wait upon her within his half hour But suppose said Western she should run away with un in the meantime? For lawyer Dowling tells me there is no hopes of hanging the fellow at last for that the man is alive and like to do well and that he thinks Jones will be out of prison again presently How! said Allworthy what did you employ him then to inquire or to do anything in that matter? Not I answered Western he mentioned it to me just now of his own accord Just now! cries Allworthy why where did you see him then? I want much to see Mr Dowling Why you may see un an you will presently at my lodgings for there is to be a meeting of lawyers there this morning about a mortgage Icod! I shall lose two or dree thousand pounds I believe by that honest gentleman Mr Nightingale Well sir said Allworthy I will be with you within the half hour And do for once cries the squire take a fool s advice never think of dealing with her by gentle methods take my word for it those will never do I have tried um long enough She must be frightened into it there is no other way Tell her I m her father and of the horrid sin of ise you there is nothing I wish for more than an alliance with this amiable creature Nay the girl is well enough for matter o that cries the squire a man may go farther and meet with worse meat that I may declare o her thof she be my own daughter And if she will but be obedient to me, there is narrow a father within a hundred miles o the place that loves a daughter better than I do but I see you are busy with the lady here so I will go huome and expect you and so your humble servant

As soon as Mr Western was gone Mrs Waters said I see sir the squire hath not the least remembrance of my face I believe Mr Allworthy you would not have known me either I am very considerably altered since that day when you so kindly gave me that advice which I had been happy had I followed Indeed madam cries Allworthy it gave me great concern when I first heard the contrary Indeed sir says she I was ruined by a very deep scheme of villany which if you knew though I pretend not to think it would justify me in your opinion it would at least mitigate my offence and induce you to pity me you are not now at leisure to hear my whole story but this I assure you I was betrayed by the most solemn promises of marriage nay in the eye of heaven I was married to him for after much reading on the subject I am convinced that particular ceremonies are only requisite to give a legal sanction to marriage and have only a worldly use in giving a woman the privileges of a wife but that she who lives constant to one man after a solemn private affiance whatever the world may call her hath little to charge on her own conscience I am sorry madam said Allworthy you made so ill a use of your learning Indeed it would have been well that you had been possessed of much more or had remained in a state of ignorance And yet madam I am afraid you have more than this sin to answer for During his life answered she which was above a dozen years I most solemnly assure you I had not And consider sir on my behalf what is in the power of a woman stript of her reputation and left destitute whether the good natured world will suffer such a stray sheep to return to the road of virtue even if she was never so desirous I protest then I would have chose it had it been in my power but necessity drove me into the arms of Captain Waters with whom though still unmarried I lived as a wife for many years and went by his name I parted with this gentleman at Worcester on his march against the rebels and it was then I accidentally met with Mr Jones who rescued me from the hands of a villain Indeed he is the worthiest of men No young gentleman of his age is I believe freer from vice and few have the twentieth part of his virtues nay whatever vices he hath had

I am firmly persuaded he hath now taken a resolution to abandon them" "I hope he hath," cries Allworthy, "and I hope we will preserve that resolution I must say, I have still the same hopes with regard to yourself The world, I do agree, are apt to be too unmerciful on these occasions; yet time and perseverance will get the better of this their disinclination, as I may call it, to pity, for though they are not, like heaven, ready to receive a penitent sinner; yet a continued repentance will at length obtain mercy even with the world This you may be assured of, Mrs Waters that when ever I find him, and, in a flood of tears, made him many most passionate acknowledgments of his goodness, which, as she truly said savoured more of the divine than human nature

Allworthy raised her up, and spoke in the most tender manner, making use of every expression which his invention could suggest to comfort her, when he was interrupted by the arrival of Mr Dowling who, upon his first entrance, seeing Mrs Waters, started, and appeared in some confusion from which he soon recovered himself as well as he could, and then said he was in the utmost haste to attend counsel at Mr Western's lodgings, but, however, thought it his duty to call and acquaint him with the opinion of counsel upon the case which he had before told him which was that the conversion of the moneys in that case could not be questioned in a criminal cause, but that an action of trover might be brought, and if it appeared to the jury to be the moneys of plaintiff, that plaintiff would recover a verdict for the value

Allworthy without making any answer to this, bolted the door, and then, advancing with a stern look to Dowling, he said 'Whatever be your haste, sir, I must first receive an answer to some questions Do you know this lady?'— That lady sir!' answered Dowling, with great hesitation Allworthy then, with the most solemn voice, said, 'Look you, Mr Dowling as you value my favour, or your continuance a moment longer in my service, do not hesitate nor prevaricate, but answer faithfully and truly to every question I ask —Do you know this lady?'— Yes sir said Dowling. 'I have seen the lady' Where sir?' 'At her own lodgings"—"Upon what business did you go thither, sir, and who sent you?' 'I went, sir, to inquire, sir, about Mr. Jones" "And who sent you to inquire about him? "Who, sir? why, sir, Mr Blifil sent me" "And what did you say to the lady concerning that matter?' 'Nay, sir, it is impossible to recollect every word" "Will you please, madam, to assist the gentleman's memory?' "He told me, sir,' said Mrs Waters, 'that if Mr Jones had murdered my husband, I should be assisted by any money I wanted to carry on the prosecution, by a very worthy gentleman, who was well apprized what a villain I had to deal with These, I can safely swear, were the very words he spoke'—"Were these the words sir?' said Allworthy 'I cannot charge my memory exactly,' cries Dowling but I believe I did speak to that purpose '— And did Mr Blifil order you to say so?" I am sure, sir, I should not have gone on my own accord nor have willingly exceeded my authority in matters of this kind If I said so I must have so understood Mr Blifil's instructions '"Look you, Mr Dowling said Allworthy I promise you before this lady that whatever you have done in this affair by Mr Blifil's order I will forgive, provided you now tell me strictly the truth, for I believe what you say, that you would not have acted of your own accord and without authority in this matter ——Mr Blifil then likewise sent you to examine the two fellows at Aldersgate? —'He did, sir ' Well, and what instructions did he then give you? Recollect as well as you can and tell me, as near as possible the very words he used"——"Why, sir, Mr Blifil sent me to find out the persons who were eye witnesses of this fight He said he feared they might be tampered with by Mr Jones or some of his friends He said, blood required blood and that not only all who concealed a murderer but those who omitted anything in their power to bring him to justice, were sharers in his guilt He said he found you was very desirous of having the villain brought to justice, though it was not proper you should appear in it 'He did so?' says Allworthy— Yes sir 'cries Dowling "I should refuse them, and that they might be assured they should lose nothing by being honest men and telling the truth I said we were told that Mr Jones had assaulted the gentleman first them to tell an untruth —nor should I have said what I did unless it had been to oblige you — You would not have thought I be lieve says Allworthy to have obliged me had you known that this Mr Jones was my own nephew — I am sure sir answered he it did not become me to take any notice of what I thought you desired to conceal —

How! cries Allworthy and did you know it then? — Nay sir answered Dowling if your worship bids me speak the truth I am sure I shall do it —Indeed sir I did know it for they were almost the last words which Madam Blifil ever spoke which she mentioned to me as I stood alone by her bedside when she delivered me the letter I brought your wor ship from her — What letter? cries All worthy — The letter sir answered Dowling which I brought from Salisbury and which I delivered into the hands of Mr Blifil — O heavens! cries Allworthy Well and what were the words? What did my sister say to you? — She took me by the hand answered he and as she delivered me the letter said I scarce know what I have written Tell my brother Mr Jones is his nephew—He is my son —Bless him says she and then fell back ward as if dying away I presently called in the people and she never spoke more to me and died within a few minutes afterwards — Allworthy stood a minute silent lifting up his eyes and then turning to Dowling said How came you sir not to deliver me this message?

Your worship answered he must remem ber that you was at that time ill in bed and being in a violent hurry as indeed I always am I delivered the letter and message to Mr Blifil who told me he would carry them both to you which he hath since told me he did and that yo to c sir if you had not mentioned it to me first I am certain I should never have thought it belonged to me to say anything of the mat ter either to your worship or any other per son.

We have remarked somewhere already that it is possible for a man to convey a lie in the words of truth this was the case at present for Blifil had in fact told Dowling what he now related but had not imposed upon him nor indeed had imagined he was able so to do In reality the promises which Blifil had made to Dowling were the motives which had in duced him to secrecy and as he now very plainly saw Blifil would not be able to keep them he thought proper now to make this con fession which the promises of forgiveness joined to the threats the voice the looks of Allworthy and the discoveries he had made before extorted from him who was besides taken unawares and had no time to consider of evasions

Allworthy appeared well satisfied with this relation and having enjoined on Dowling strict silence as to what had past conducted that gentleman himself to the door lest he should see Blifil who was returned to his cham ber where he exulted in the thoughts of his last deceit on his uncle and little suspected what had since passed below stairs

As Allworthy was returning to his room he met Mr M

abandon the poor young man Consider sir he was ignorant it was his own mother and the discovery itself will most probably break his heart without your unkindness

Madam says Allworthy I am under such an astonishment at what I have heard that I am really unable to satisfy you but come with me into my room Indeed Mrs Miller I have made surprizing discoveries and you shall soon know them

The poor woman followed him trembling and now Allworthy going up to Mrs Waters took her by the hand and then turning to Mrs Miller said What reward shall I bestow upon this gentlewoman for the services she hath done me?—O! Mrs Miller you have a thousand times heard me call the young man to whom you are so faithful a friend my son Little did I then think he was indeed related to me at all—Your friend madam is my nephew he is the brother of that wicked viper which I have so long nourished in my bosom —She will herself tell you the whole story and how the youth came to pass for her son Indeed Mrs Miller I am convinced that he hath been wronged and that I have been abused abused by one whom you too justly suspected of being a villain He is in truth the worst of villains

The joy which Mrs Miller now felt bereft her of the power of speech and might perhaps have deprived her of her senses if not of life had not a friendly shower of tears come seasonably to her relief At length recovering so far from her transport as to be able to speak she cried And is my dear Mr Jones then your nephew sir and not the son of this lady? And are your eyes opened to him at last? And shall I live to see him as happy as he deserves? "He certainly is my nephew says Allworthy and I hope all the rest — And is this the dear good woman the person cries she to whom all this discovery is owing? — She is indeed says Allworthy — Why then cried Mrs Miller upon her knees may Heaven shower

Mrs Waters then informed them that she believed Jones would very shortly be released for that the surgeon was gone in company with a nobleman to the justice who committed him in order to certify that Mr Fitzpatrick was then obliged to go on some business of consequence He then called to a servant to fetch him a chair and presently left the two ladies together

Mr Blifil hearing the chair ordered came downstairs to attend upon his uncle for he never was deficient in such acts of duty He asked his uncle if he was going out which is a civil way of asking a man whither he is going to which the other making no answer he again desired to know when he would be pleased to return?—Allworthy made no answer to this neither till he was just going into his chair and then turning about he said—Harkee sir do you find out before my return the letter which your mother sent me on her death bed Allworthy then departed and left Blifil in a situation to be envied only by a man who is just going to be hanged

Chapter 9

A further continuation

Allworthy took an opportunity whilst he was in the chair of reading the letter from Jones to Sophia which Western delivered him and there were some expressions in it concerning himself which drew tears from his eyes At length he arrived at Mr Western s and was introduced to Sophia

When the first ceremonies were past and the gentleman and lady had taken their chairs a silence of some minutes ensued during which the latter who had been prepared for the visit by her father sat playing with her fan and had every mark of confusion both in her countenance and behaviour At length Allworthy who was himself a little disconcerted began thus I am afraid Miss Western my family hath been the occasion of giving you some uneasiness to which I fear I have innocently become more instrumental than I intended Be assured madam had I at first known how disagreeable the proposals had been I should not have suffered you to have been so long persecuted I hope therefore you will not think the design of this visit is to trouble you with any further solicitations of that kind but entirely to relieve you from them

Sir said Sophia with a little modest hesitation this behaviour is most kind and generous and such as I could expect only from Mr Allworthy but as you have been so kind to mention this matter you will pardon me are too good and generous to resent my refusal of your nephew Our inclinations are not in our own power and whatever may be his merit I cannot force them in his favour I assure you most amiable young lady said Allworthy I am capable of no such resentment had the person been my own son and had I entertained the highest esteem for him For you say truly madam we cannot force our inclinations much less can they be directed by another Oh! sir answered Sophia every word you speak proves you deserve that good that great that benevolent character the whole world allows you I assure you sir nothing less than the certain prospect of future misery could have made me resist the commands of my father " "I sincerely believe you madam " replied Allworthy and I heartily congratulate you on your prudent foresight since by so justifiable a resistance you have avoided misery indeed " "You speak now Mr Allworthy " cries she "with a delicacy whi few men are capable of feeling! but surely in my opinion to lead our lives with one to whom we are indifferent must be a state of wretchedness—Perhaps that wretchedness would be even increased by a sense of the merits of an object to whom we cannot give our affections If I had married Mr Blifil——

Pardon my interrupting you madam answered Allworthy but I cannot bear the supposition—Believe me Miss Western I rejoice from my heart I rejoice in your escape—I have discovered the wretch for whom you have suffered all this cruel violence from your father to be a villain How sir! cries Sophia—you must believe this surprizes me — It hath surprized me madam answered Allworthy and so it will the world—But I have acquainted you with the real truth Nothing but truth says Sophia can I am convinced come from the lips of Mr Allworthy—Yet sir such sudden such unexpected news—Discovered you say—may villany be ever so! — You will soon enough hear the story cries Allworthy— at present let us not mention so detested a name—I have another matter of a very serious nature to propose—O! Miss Western I know your vast worth nor can I so easily part with the ambition of being allied to it—I have a near relation madam a young man whose character is I am convinced the very opposite to that of this wretch and whose fortune I will make equal to what his was to have been Could I madam hope you would admit a visit from him? Sophia after a minute s silence answered I will deal with the utmost sincerity with Mr Allworthy His character and the obligation I have just received from him demand it I have determined at present to listen to no such proposals from any person My only desire is to be restored to the affection of my father and to be again the mistress of his family This sir I hope to owe to your good offices Let me beseech you let me conjure you by all the goodness which I and all who know you have experienced do not the very moment when you have released me from one persecution and if this be your resolution he must submit to the disappointment whatever torments he may suffer under it I must smile now Mr Allworthy answered Sophia when you mention the torments of a man whom I do not know and who can consequently have so little acquaintance with me 'Pardon me dear young lady cries Allworthy I begin now to be afraid he hath had too much acquaintance for the repose of his future days since if ever man was capable of a sincere violent and noble passion such I am convinced is my unhappy nephew s for Miss Western A nephew of your s Mr Allworthy! answered Sophia It is surely strange I never heard of him before Indeed madam cries Allworthy it is only the circumstance of his being my nephew to which you are a stranger and which till this day was a secret to me—Mr Jones who has long loved you he! he is my nephew! Mr Jones your nephew sir! cries Sophia can it be possible? — He is indeed madam answered Allworthy he is my own sister s son—as such I shall always own him nor am I ashamed of owning him I am much more ashamed of my past behaviour to him but I was as ignorant of his merit as of his birth Indeed Miss Western I have used him cruelly—Indeed I have —Here the good man wiped his eyes and after a short pause proceeded— I never shall be able to reward him for his sufferings without your assistance—Believe me most amiable young lady I must have a great esteem of that offering which I make to your worth I know he hath been guilty of faults but there [illegible] the bottom Be

ently received from Sophia after she had a little recovered herself from the hurry of spirits into which so strange and sudden information had thrown her I sincerely wish you joy sir of a discovery in which you seem to have such satisfaction I doubt not but you will have all the comfort you can promise yourself from it The young gentleman hath certainly a thousand good qualities which makes it impossible he should not behave well to such an uncle — I hope madam said Allworthy he hath those good qualities which must make him a good husband—He must I am sure be of all men the most abandoned if a lady of your merit should condescend——

You must pardon me Mr Allworthy answered Sophia I cannot listen to a proposal of this kind Mr Jones I am convinced hath much merit but I shall never receive Mr Jones as one who is to be my husband—Upon my honour I never will — Pardon me madam cries Allworthy if I am a little surprized after what I have heard from Mr

Western——I hope the unhappy young man hath done nothing to forfeit your good opinion if he had ever the honour to enjoy it — Perhaps he may have been misrepresented to you as he was to me The same villany may have injured him everywhere —He is no murderer I assure you as he hath been called

Mr Allworthy answered Sophia I have told you my resolution I wonder not at what my father hath told you but whatever his apprehensions or fears have been if I know my heart I have given no occasion for them since it hath always been a fixed principle with me never to have married without his consent This is I think the duty of a child to a parent and this I hope nothing could ever have prevailed with me to swerve from I do not indeed conceive that the authority of any parent can oblige us to marry in direct opposition to our inclinations To avoid a force of this kind which I had reason to suspect I left my father s house and sought protection elsewhere This is the truth of my story and if the world or my father carry my intentions any farther my own conscience will acquit me I hear you Miss Western cries Allworthy with admiration I admire the justness of your sentiments but surely there is more in this I am cautious of offending you young lady but am I to look on all which I have hitherto heard or seen as a dream only? And have you suffered so much cruelty from your father on the account of a man to whom you have been always absolutely indifferent?

I beg Mr Allworthy answered Sophia you will not insist on my reasons —yes I have suffered indeed I will not Mr Allworthy conceal——I will be very sincere with you—I own I had a great opinion of Mr Jones—I believe—I know I have suffered for my opinion—I have been treated cruelly by my aunt as well as by my father but that is now past—I beg I may not be farther pressed for whatever hath been my resolution is now fixed Your nephew sir

Allworthy but that I am convinced is only in your power It is that conviction which hath made me so earnest a solicitor in his favour

You are deceived indeed sir you are deceived said Sophia I hope not by him It is sufficient to have deceived me Mr Allworthy I must insist on being pressed no farther on this subject. I should be sorry—nay I will not injure him in your favour I wish Mr Jones very well I sincerely wish him well and I repeat it again to you whatever demerit he may have to me I am certain he hath many good qualities I do not disown my former thoughts but nothing can ever recal them At present there is not a man upon earth whom I would more resolutely reject than Mr Jones nor would the addresses of Mr Blifil himself be less agreeable to me

Western had been long impatient for the event of this conference and was just now arrived at the door to listen when having heard the last sentiments of his daughter s heart he lost all temper and bursting open the door in a rage cried out— It is a lie! It is a d—n d lie! It is all owing to that d—n d rascal Jones and if she could get at un she d ha un any hour of the day Here Allworthy interposed and addressing himself to the squire with some anger in his look he said Mr Western you have not kept your word with me You promised to abstain from all violence — Why so I did cries Western as long as it was possible but to hear a wench telling such confounded lies——Zounds! doth she think if she can make vools of other volk she can make one of me?——No no I know her better than thee dost I am sorry to tell you sir answered Allworthy it doth not appear by your behaviour to this young lady that you know her at all I ask pardon for what I say but I think our intimacy your own desires and the occasion justify me She is your daughter Mr Western and I think she doth honour to your name If I was capable of envy I should sooner envy you on this account than any other man whatever — Odrabbit it! cries the squire I

squire Sblood! what confidence can I place

neighbour answered Allworthy to insist on any such consent. A negative voice your daughter allows you and God and nature have thought proper to allow you no more — A negative voice! cries the squire Ay! ay!

this—you shall you must behave to her in a kinder manner She deserves the best of treat ment Yes yes said the squire I know what she deserves now she s gone I ll shew you what she deserves See here sir here is a letter from my cousin my Lady Bellaston in which wench Odzookers! neighbour Allworthy you don t know what it is to govern a daughter

The squire ended his speech with some com pliments to his own sagacity and then All worthy after a formal preface acquainted him with the whole discovery which he had made concerning Jones with his anger to Blifil and with ever particular which hath been disclosed to the reader in the preceding chapters

Men over violent in their dispositions are for the most part as changeable in them No sooner than was Western informed of Mr All worthy s intention to make Jones his heir than he joined heartily with the uncle in every com mendation of the nephew and became as eager for her marriage with Jones as he had before been to couple her to Blifil

Here Mr Allworthy was again forced to in terpose and to relate what had passed be tween him and Sophia at which he testified great surprize

The squire was silent a moment and look d wild with astonishment at this account —At last he cried out Why what can be the mean ing of this neighbour Allworthy? Vond o un she was that I ll be sworn to —Odzookers! I have hit o t As sure as a gun I have hit o the very right o t It s all along o zister The girl hath got a hankering after this son of a whore of a lord I vound em together at my cousin my Lady Bellaston s He hath turned the head o her that s certain—but d—n me if he shall ha her—I ll ha no lords nor courtiers in my vamily

Allworthy now made a long speech in which he repeated his resolution to avoid all violent measures and very earnestly recommended gentle methods to Mr Western as those by squire in promising to bring Mr Jones to visit him that afternoon that he might as he said make all matters up with the young gentleman At Mr Allworthy s departure Western promised to follow his advice in his behaviour to Sophia saying I don t know how tis but d—n me Allworthy if you don t make me always do just as you please and yet I have as good an estate as you and am in the commission of the peace as well as yourself"

Chapter 10

Wherein the history begins to draw towards a conclusion

WHEN Allworthy returned to his lodgings he heard Mr Jones was just arrived before him He hurried therefore instantly into an empty chamber whither he ordered Mr Jones to be brought to him alone

It is impossible to conceive a more tender or moving scene than the meeting between the uncle and nephew (for Mrs Waters as the reader may well suppose had at her last visit discovered to him the secret of his birth) The first agonies of joy which were felt on both sides are indeed beyond my power to describe I shall not therefore attempt it After All worthy had raised Jones from his feet where he had prostrated himself and received him into his arms O my child! he cried how have I been to blame! how have I injured you! What amends can I ever make you for those unkind those unjust suspicions which I have entertained and for all the sufferings they have occasioned to you? Am I not now made amends? cries Jones Would not my suffer ings if they had been ten times greater have been now richly repaid? O my dear uncle this goodness this tenderness overpowers unmans destroys me I cannot bear the transports which flow so fast upon me To be again restored to your presence to your favour to be once more thus kindly received by my great my noble my generous benefactor — Indeed child cries Allworthy I have used you cruelly — He then explained to him all the treachery of Blifil and again repeated expressions of the utmost concern for having been induced by that treachery to use him so ill O talk not so answered Jones indeed sir you have u ed me nobly The wisest man might be de ceived as you were and under such a decep tion the best must have acted just as you did Your goodness displayed itself in the midst of your anger just as it then seemed I owe every thing to that goodness of which I have been most unworthy Do not put me on self accusation by carrying your generous sentiments too far Alas sir I have not been punished more than I have deserved and it shall be the whole business of my future life to deserve that happiness you now bestow on me for believe me my dear uncle my punishment hath not been thrown away upon me though I have been a great I am not a hardened sinner I thank Heaven I have had time to reflect on my past life where though I cannot charge myself with any gross villany yet I can discern follies and vices more than enough to repent and to be ashamed of follies which have been attended with dreadful consequences to myself and have brought me to the brink of destruction I am rejoiced my dear child answered Allworthy to hear you talk thus sensibly for as I am convinced hypocrisy (good Heaven! how have I been imposed on by it in others!) was never among your faults so I can readily believe all you say You now see Tom to what dangers imprudence alone may subject virtue (for virtue I am now convinced you love in a great degree) Prudence is indeed the duty which we owe to ourselves and if we will be so much our own enemies as to neglect it we are not to wonder if the world is deficient in discharging their duty to us for when a man lays the foundation of his own ruin others will I am afraid be too apt to build upon it You say however you have seen your errors and will reform them I firmly believe you my dear child and therefore from this moment you shall never be reminded of them by me Remember them only yourself so far as for the future to teach you the better to avoid them but still remember for your comfort that there is this great difference between those faults which candor may construe into imprudence and those which can be deduced from villany only The former perhaps are even more apt to subject a man to ruin but if he reform his character will at length be totally retrieved the world though not immediately will in time be reconciled to him and he may reflect not without some mixture of pleasure on the dangers he hath escaped but villany my boy when once discovered is irretrievable the stains which this leaves behind no time will wash away The censures of mankind will pursue the wretch their scorn will abash him in publick and if shame drives him into retirement he will go to it with all those terrors with which a weary child who is afraid of hobgoblins retreats from company to go to bed alone Here his murdered conscience will haunt him—Repose like a false friend will fly from him Wherever he turns his eyes horror presents itself if he looks backward unavailable repentance treads on his heels if forward incurable despair stares him in the face till like a condemned prisoner confined in a dungeon he detests his present condition and yet dreads the consequence of that hour which is to relieve him from it Comfort yourself I say my child that this is not your case and rejoice with thankfulness to him who hath suffered you to see your errors before they have brought on you that destruction to which a persistence in even those errors must have led you You have deserted them and the prospect now before you is such that happiness seems in your own power At these words Jones fetched a deep sigh upon which when Allworthy remonstrated he said Sir I will conceal nothing from you I fear there is one consequence of my vices I shall never be able to retrieve O my dear uncle! I have lost a treasure You need say no more answered Allworthy I will be explicit with you I know what you lament I have seen the young lady and have discoursed with her concerning you This I must insist on as an earnest of your sincerity in all you have said and of the stedfastness of your resolution that you obey me in one instance To abide intirely by the determination of the young lady whether it shall be in your favour or no She hath already suffered enough from solicitations which I hate to think of she shall owe no further constraint to my family I know her father will be as ready to torment her now on your account as he hath formerly been on another s but I am determined she shall suffer no more confinement no more violence no more uneasy hours O my dear uncle! answered Jones lay I beseech you some command on me in which I shall have some merit in obedience Believe me sir the only instance in which I could disobey you would be to give an uneasy moment your case is desperate I never saw stronger marks of an unalterable resolution in any per son than appeared in her vehement declarations against receiving your addresses, for which, perhaps you can account better than myself" 'Oh, sir! I can account too well," answered Jones, "I have sinned against her beyond all hope of pardon; and guilty as I am, my guilt unfortunately appears to her in ten times blacker than the real colours O, my dear uncle! I find my follies are irretrievable, and all your goodness cannot save me from perdition"

A servant now acquainted them that Mr Western was below stairs, for his eagerness to see Jones could not wait till the afternoon Upon which Jones whose eyes were full of tears begged his uncle to entertain Western a few minutes, till he a little recovered himself; to which the good man consented and, having ordered Mr Western to be shown into a parlour went down to him

Mrs Miller no sooner heard that Jones was alone (for she had not yet seen him since his release from prison) than she came eagerly into the room and, advancing towards Jones, wished him heartily joy of his new found uncle and his happy reconciliation adding 'I wish I could give you joy on another account my dear child but anything so inexorable I never saw

Jones with some appearance of surprize asked her what she meant 'Why then,' says she I have been with the young lady, and have explained all matters to her as they were told to me by my son Nightingale She can have no longer any doubt about the letter of that I am certain for I told her my son Nightingale was ready to take his oath if she pleased, that it was all his own invention and the letter of his inditing I told her the very reason of sending the letter ought to recommend you to her the more as it was all upon her account and a plain proof that you was resolved to quit all your profligacy for the future, that you had never been guilty of a single instance of infidelity to her since your seeing her in town I am afraid I went too far there but Heaven forgive me! I hope your future behaviour will be my justification I am sure I have said all I can but all to no purpose She remains inflexible She says she had forgiven many faults on account of youth but expressed such detestation of the character of a libertine that she absolutely silenced me I often attempted to excuse you but the justness of her accusation flew in my face Upon my honour she is a lovely woman and one of the sweetest and most sensible creatures I ever saw I could have almost kissed her for one expression she made use of It was a sentiment worthy of Seneca, or of a bishop 'I once fancied, madam,' said she, 'I had discovered great goodness of heart in Mr. Jones, and for that I own I had a sincere esteem; but an entire profligacy of manners will corrupt the best heart in the world, and all which a good natured libertine can expect is, that we should mix some grains of pity with our contempt and abhorrence' She is an angelic creature, that is the truth on't" O, Mrs Miller!" answered Jones "can I bear to think I have lost such an angel?" "Lost! no," cries Mrs Miller, 'I hope you have not lost her yet Resolve to leave such vicious courses and you may yet have hopes, nay, if she should remain inexorable, there is another young lady, a sweet pretty young lady, and a swinging fortune, who is absolutely dying for love of you I heard of it this very morning and I told it to Miss Western, nay, I went a little beyond the truth again, for I told her you had refused her, but indeed I knew you would refuse her And here I must give you a little comfort, when I mentioned the young lady's name, who is no other than the pretty widow Hunt, I thought she turned pale, but when I said you had refused her, I will be sworn her face was all over scarlet in an instant and these were her very words 'I will not deny but that I believe he has some affection for me'"

Here the conversation was interrupted by the arrival of Western, who could no longer be kept out of the room even by the authority of Allworthy himself, though this as we have often seen had a wonderful power over him

Western immediately went up to Jones crying out, 'My old friend Tom, I am glad to see thee with all my heart! all past must be forgotten I could not intend any affront to thee, because, as Allworthy here knows, nay, dost know it thyself I took thee for another person and where a body means no harm, what signifies a hasty word or two? One Christian must forget and forgive another" "I hope, sir," said Jones, I shall never forget the many obligations I have had to you, but as for any offence towards me, I declare I am an utter stranger' 'A t,' says Western, 'then give me thy fist, a t as hearty an honest cock as any in the kingdom Come along with me, I'll carry thee to thy mistress this moment" Here Allworthy interposed and the squire being unable to prevail either with the uncle or nephew, was after some litigation obliged to consent to delay introducing Jones to Sophia till the afternoon at which time Allworthy as well in compassion to Jones as in compliance with the eager desires of Western was prevailed upon to promise to attend at the tea table

The conversation which now ensued was pleasant enough and with which had it happened earlier in our history we would have entertained our reader but as we have now leisure only to attend to what is very material it shall suffice to say that matters being entirely adjusted as to the afternoon visit Mr Western again returned home

Chapter 11

The history draws nearer to a conclusion

When Mr Western was departed Jones began to inform Mr Allworthy and Mrs Miller that his liberty had been procured by two noble lords who together with two surgeons and a

[illegible]

ded person was out of all manner of danger from his wound he was discharged

One only of these lords he said he had ever seen before and that no more than once but the other had greatly surprized him by asking his pardon for an offence he had been guilty of towards him occasioned he said entirely by his ignorance who he was

Now the reality of the case with which Jones was not acquainted till afterwards was this — The lieutenant whom Lord Fellamar had employed according to the advice of Lady Bellaston to press Jones as a vagabond into the sea service when he came to report to his lordship the event which we have before seen spoke very favourably of the behaviour of Mr Jones on all accounts and strongly assured that lord that he must have mistaken the person for that Jones was certainly a gentleman inso-

[illegible]

would have condemned began to be much concerned for the advice which he had taken

Within a day or two after this Lord Fellamar happened to dine with the Irish peer who in a conversation upon the duel acquainted his company with the character of Fitzpatrick to which indeed he did not do strict justice especially in what related to his lady He said she was the most innocent the most injured woman alive and that from compassion alone he had undertaken her cause He then declared an intention of going the next morning to Fitzpatrick s lodgings in order to prevail with him if possible to consent to a separation from his wife who the peer said was in apprehensions for her life if she should ever return to be under the power of her husband Lord Fellamar agreed to go with him that he might satisfy himself more concerning Jones and the circumstances of the duel for he was by no means easy concerning the part he had acted The moment his lordship gave a hint of his readiness to assist in the delivery of the lady it was eagerly embraced by the other nobleman who depended much on the authority of Lord Fellamar as he thought it would greatly contribute to awe Fitzpatrick into a compliance and perhaps he was in the right for the poor Irishman no sooner saw these noble peers had undertaken the cause of his wife than he submitted and articles of separation were soon drawn up and signed between the parties

Fitzpatrick who had been so well satisfied by Mrs Waters concerning the innocence of his wife with Jones at Upton or perhaps from

[illegible]

of honour and upon that lord s further inquiry concerning Mr Jones Fitzpatrick told him he was nephew to a gentleman of very great fashion and fortune which was the account he had just received from Mrs Waters after her interview with Dowling

Lord Fellamar now thought it behoved him to do everything in his power to make sat

[illegible]

liberty being satisfied as well from Fitzpatrick as his surgeon that the wound was not mortal He therefore prevailed with the Irish peer to accompany him to the place where Jones was confined to whom he behaved as we have already related

[illegible]

Dowling

Jones expressed great astonishment and no less concern at this account, but without mak-

he might wait upon him Allworthy started and turned pale, and then in a more passionate tone than I believe he had ever used before, bid the servant tell Blifil he knew him not Consider, dear sir," cries Jones, in a trembling voice "I have considered answered Allworthy, "and you yourself shall carry my message to the villain No one can carry him the sentence of his own ruin so properly, as the man whose ruin he hath so villanously contrived' 'Pardon me, dear sir," said Jones "a moment's reflection will I am sure convince you of the contrary What might perhaps be but justice from another tongue would from mine be insult and to whom?—my own brother and your nephew Nor did he use me so barbarously—indeed that would have been more inexcusable than anything he hath done Fortune may tempt men of no very bad dispositions to injustice but insults proceed only from black and rancorous minds and have no temptations to excuse them Let me beseech you sir to do nothing by him in the present height of your anger Consider, my dear uncle I was not myself condemned unheard Allworthy stood silent a moment and then embracing Jones, he said with tears gushing from his eyes O my child! to what goodness have I been so long blind!'

Mrs Miller entering the room at that moment after a gentle rap which was not perceived and seeing Jones in the arms of his uncle the poor woman in an agony of joy fell upon her knees and burst forth into the most ecstatic thanksgivings to heaven for what had happened then running to Jones she embraced him eagerly, crying My dearest friend I wish you joy a thousand and a thousand times of this blest day And next Mr Allworthy himself received the same congratulations To which he answered 'Indeed indeed, Mrs Miller I am beyond expression happy" Some few more raptures having passed on all sides Mrs Miller desired them both to walk and his bride, and his cousin Harriet with her bridegroom

Allworthy excused himself from dining with the company saying he had ordered some little thing for him and his nephew in his own apartment, for that they had much private business to discourse of, but would not resist promising the good woman that both he and Jones would make part of her society at supper

Mrs Miller then asked what was to be done with Blifil? "for indeed," says she, 'I cannot be easy while such a villain is in my house"—Allworthy answered, "He was as uneasy as herself on the same account" "Oh!" cries she, "if that be the case, leave the matter to me, I'll soon show him the outside out of my doors, I warrant you Here are two or three lusty fellows below stairs" "There will be no need of any violence, cries Allworthy "if you will carry him a message from me, he will, I am convinced depart of his own accord" "Will I?' said Mrs Miller, "I never did anything in my life with a better will" Here Jones interfered, and said "He had considered the matter better, and would if Mr Allworthy pleased be himself the messenger I know," says he, "already enough of your pleasure, sir, and I beg leave to acquaint him with it by my own words. Let me beseech you sir," added he "to reflect on the dreadful consequences of driving him to violent and sudden despair How unfit, alas! is this poor man to die in his present situation This suggestion had not the least effect on Mrs Miller She left the room crying You are too good Mr Jones, infinitely too good to live in this world" But it made a deeper impression on Allworthy "My good child' said he I am equally astonished at the goodness of your heart, and the quickness of your understanding Heaven indeed forbid that this wretch should be deprived of any means or time for repentance! That would be a shocking consideration indeed Go to him, therefore and use your own discretion yet do not flatter him with any hopes of my forgiveness for I shall never forgive villany farther than my religion obliges me, and that extends not either to our bounty or our conversation"

Jones went up to Blifil's room, whom he found in a situation which moved his pity, though it would have raised a less amiable passion in many beholders He had cast himself on his bed where he lay abandoning himself to despair and drowned in tears not in such tears as flow from contrition, and wash away guilt from minds which have been seduced or surprized into it unawares, against the bent of their natural dispositions, as will sometimes happen from human frailty even to the good no these tears were such as the frighted thief sheds in his cart and are indeed the effects of that concern which the most sav age natures are seldom deficient in feeling for themselves

It would be unpleasant and tedious to paint th s scene in full length Let it suffice to say that the behaviour of Jones was kind to excess He omitted nothing which his invention could supply to raise and comfort the drooping spirits of Blifil before he communicated to him the resolution of his uncle that he must quit the house that evening He offered to furnish him with any money he wanted as sured him of his hearty forgiveness of all he had done against him that he would endeav our to live with him hereafter as a brother and would leave nothing unattempted to effectuate a reconciliation with his uncle

Blifil was at first sullen and silent balancing in his mind whether he should yet deny all but finding at last the evidence too strong against him he betook himself at last to con fession He then asked pardon of his brother in the most vehement manner prostrated himself on the ground and kissed his feet in short he was now as remarkably mean as he had been before remarkably wicked

Jones could not so far check his disdain but that it a little discovered itself in his coun tenance at this extreme servility He raised his brother the moment he could from the ground and advised him to bear his afflic tions more like a man repeating at the same time his promises that he would do all in his power to lessen them for which Blifil mak ing many professions of his unworthiness poured forth a profusion of thanks and then he having declared he would immediately depart to another lodging Jones returned to his uncle

Among other matters Allworthy now ac quainted Jones with the discovery which he had made concerning the £500 banknotes I have said he already consulted a lawyer who tells me to my great astonishment that there is no punishment for a fraud of this kind Indeed when I consider the black in gratitude of this fellow toward you I think a highwayman compared to him is an innocent person

Good Heaven! says Jones is it possible?— I am shocked beyond measure at this news. I thought there was not an honester fellow in the world.—The temptation of such a sum was too great for him to withstand for smaller matters have come safe to me through his hand Indeed my dear uncle you must suffer me to call it weakness rather than ingratitude for I am convinced the poor fellow loves me and hath done me some kindnesses which I can never forget nay I believe he hath re pented of this very act for it is not above a day or two ago when my affairs seemed in the most desperate situation that he visited me in my confinement and offered me any money I wanted Consider sir what a temptation to a man who hath tasted such bitter distress it must be to have a sum in his possession which must put him and his family beyond any future possibility of suffering the like

Child cries Allworthy you carry this for giving temper too far Such mistaken mercy is not only weakness but borders on injustice and is very pernicious to society as it encour ages vice The dishonesty of this fellow I might perhaps have pardoned but never his ingrati tude And give me leave to say when we suffer any temptation to atone for dishonesty itself we are as cand d and merciful as we ought to be and so far I confess I have gone for I have often pitied the fate of a highwayman when I have been on the grand jury and have more than once applied to the judge on the behalf of such as have had any mitigating circumstances in their case but when dis honesty is attended with any blacker crime such as cruelty murder ingratitude or the like compassion and forgiveness then become faults I am convinced the fellow is a villain and he shall be punished at least as far as I can punish him

This was spoken with so stern a voice that Jones did not think proper to make any reply besides the hour appointed by Mr Western now drew so near that he had barely time left to dress himself Here therefore ended the pres ent dialogue and Jones retired to another room where Partridge attended according to order with his cloaths

Partridge had scarce seen his master since the happy discovery The poor fellow was un able to contain or express his transports He behaved like one frantic and made almost as many mistakes while he was dressing Jones as I have seen made by Harlequin in dressing himself on the stage

His memory however was not in the least deficient He recollected now many omens and presages of this happy event some of which he had remarked at the time but many mo mind that you would one time or other have it in your power to make my fortune." Jones assured him that this boding should as certainly be verified with regard to him as all the other omens had been to himself, which did not a little add to all the raptures which the poor fellow had already conceived on account of his master

[illegible]

Chapter 12

Approaching still nearer to the end

JONES, being now completely dressed, attended his uncle to Mr Western's He was, in deed, one of the finest figures ever beheld, and his person alone would have charmed the greater part of womankind, but we hope it hath already appeared in this history that Nature, when she formed him, did not totally rely, as she sometimes doth, on this merit only, to recommend her work

Sophia, who, angry as she was, was likewise set forth to the best advantage, for which I leave my female readers to account appeared so extremely beautiful that even Allworthy, when he saw her, could not forbear whispering Western that he believed she was the finest creature in the world To which Western answered in a whisper overheard by all present 'So much the better for Tom,—for d—n me if he shan't ha the tousling her" Sophia was all over scarlet at these words while Tom's countenance was altogether as pale and he was almost ready to sink from his chair

The tea table was scarce removed before Western lugged Allworthy out of the room telling him he had business of consequence to impart and must speak to him that instant in private, before he forgot it

The lovers were now alone and it will I question not appear strange to many readers that those who had so much to say to one another when danger and difficulty attended their conversation and who seemed so eager to rush into each other s arms when so many bars lay in their way now that with safety they were at liberty to say or do whatever they pleased should both remain for some time silent and motionless insomuch that a stranger of moderate sagacity might have well concluded they were mutually indifferent but so it was however strange it may seem both sat with their eyes cast downwards on the ground, and for some minutes continued in perfect silence

Mr Jones during this interval attempted once or twice to speak, but was absolutely incapable, muttering only, or rather sighing out, some broken words, when Sophia at length, partly out of pity to him, and partly to turn the discourse from the subject which she knew well enough he was endeavouring to open, said—

'Sure sir, you are the most fortunate man in the world in this discovery" "And can you really, madam, think me so fortunate," said Jones, sighing, "while I have incurred your displeasure?"—"Nay, sir," says she, "as to that you best know whether you have deserved it" 'Indeed, madam," answered he, "you yourself are as well apprized of all my demerits Mrs Miller hath acquainted you with the whole truth O! my Sophia, am I never to hope for forgiveness?'—"I think, Mr Jones," said she "I may almost depend on your own justice and leave it to yourself to pass sentence on your own conduct"—"Alas! madam," answered he, "it is mercy, and not justice, which I implore at your hands Justice, I know, must condemn me—Yet not for the letter I sent to Lady Bellaston Of that I most solemnly declare you have had a true account" He then insisted much on the security given him by Nightingale of a fair pretence for breaking off, if, contrary to their expectations, her ladyship should have accepted his offer, but confest that he had been guilty of a great indiscretion to put such a letter as that into her power, "which" said he "I have dearly paid for, in the effect it has upon you" "I do not, I cannot" says she, "believe otherwise of that letter than you would have me My conduct, I think, shows you clearly I do not believe there is much in that And yet, Mr Jones, have I not enough to resent? After what past at Upton, so soon to engage in a new amour with another woman, while I fancied, and you pretended, your heart was bleeding for me? Indeed, you have acted strangely Can I believe the passion you have profest to me to be sincere? Or, if I can, what happiness can I assure myself of with a man capable of so much inconstancy?" "O! my Sophia,' cries he, "do not doubt the sincerity of the purest passion that ever inflamed a human breast Think most adorable creature, of my unhappy situation of my despair Could I, my Sophia have flattered myself with the most distant hopes of being ever permitted to throw myself at your feet in the manner I do now, it would not have been in the power of any other woman to have inspired a thought which the severest chastity could have condemned In constancy to you! O Sophia! if you can have goodness enough to pardon what is past do not let any cruel future apprehensions shut your mercy against me No repentance was ever more sincere O! let it reconcile me to my heaven in this dear bosom Sincere repent ance Mr Jones answered she will obtain the pardon of a sinner but it is from one who is a perfect judge of that sincerity A human mind may be imposed on nor is there any in fallible method to prevent it You must expect how ever that if I can be prevailed on by your repentance to pardon you I will at least insist on the strongest proof of its sincerity Name any proof in my power answered Jones eagerly Time replied she time alone Mr Jon-pen

vici
if I imagined you capable of persevering in them Do not imagine it cries Jones On my knees I intreat I implore your confidence a confidence which it shall be the business of my life to deserve Let it then said she be the business of some part of your life to show me you deserve it I think I have been explicit enough in assuring you that when I see you merit my confidence you will obtain it After what is past sir can you expect I should take you upon your word?

He replied Dont believe me upon my word I have a better security a pledge for my constancy which it is impossible to see and to doubt What is that? said Sophia a little surprized I will show you my charming angel, cried Jones seizing her hand and car rying her to the glass There behold it there in that lovely figure in that face that shape those eyes that mind which shines through these eyes can the man who shall be in pos sess on of these be inconstant? Impossible my Sophia they would fix a Dorimant a Lord Rochester You could not doubt it if you could see yourself with any eyes but your own Sophia blushed and half smiled but forcing again her brow into a frown— If I am to judge said she of the future by the past my im ... heart when out of my heart The delicacy of your sex can not conceive the grossness of ours nor how little one sort of amour has to do with the heart I will never marry a man replied Sophia very gravely who shall not learn refine first moment of hope that my Sophia might be my wife taught it me at once and all the rest of her sex from that moment became as little the objects of desire to my sense as of passion to my heart Well says Sophia the proof of this must be from time Your situation Mr Jones is now altered and I as sure you I have great satisfaction in the altera tion You will now want no opportunity of be ing near me and convincing me that your mind is altered too O! my angel cries Jones how shall I thank thy goodness! And are you so good to own that you have a satis faction in my prosperity?——Believe me be lieve me madam it is you alone have given a relish to that prosperity since I owe to it the dear hope——O! my Sophia let it not be a distant one —I will be all obedience to your commands I will not dare to press anything further than you permit me Yet let me intreat

... O ... hen I at is vol
I ex
O!
cries
he I do not I dare not press you —Yet permit me at least once more to beg you would fix the period O! consider the impatience of love —— A twelvemonth perhaps said she O! my Sophia cries he you have named an eternity — Perhaps it may be something sooner says she I will not be teazed If your passion for me be what I would have it I think you may now be easy — Easy! Sophia be no more when I shall have that dear that vast that exquisite ecstatic delight of making my Sophia happy? —— Indeed sir said she that day is in your own power —— O my dear my divine angel cried he these words

At this instant Western who had stood some time listening burst into the room and with his hunting voice and phrase cried out To her boy to her go to her ——That s it little honeys O that s it! Well! what is it all over? Hath she appointed the day boy? What shall it be to morrow or next day? It shan t be put off a minute longer than next day I am re solved Let me beseech you sir says Jones don t let me be the occasion —— Beseech mine a —— cries Western I thought thou hadst been a lad of higher mettle than to give way to a parcel of maidenish tricks ——I tell thee tis all flim flam Zoodikers! she d have the wedding to night with all her heart Would st not Sophy? Come confess and be an honest g rl for once What art dumb? Why dost not speak? Why should I confess sir says Sophia since it seems you are so well acquainted with my thoughts? —— That s a good girl cries he and dost consent then? No indeed sir says Sophia I have g ven no such con sent —— And wunt not ha un then to morrow nor next day? says Western —— Indeed sir says she I have no such intention But I can tell thee replied he why hast nut only because thou dost love to be disobedient and was all nothing but sighing and whin ng and languishing and writing now I am vor thee she is against thee All the spirit of contrary that s all She is above being guided and gov erned by her father that is the whole truth on t It is only to disobl ge and contradict me What would my papa have me do? cries Sophia What would I ha thee do? says he why gi un thy hand this moment —— Well sir says Sophia I will obey you —There is my hand Mr Jones Well and will you consent to ha un to morrow morning? says Western —— I will be obedient to you sir cries she —— Why then to morrow morning be the day cries he Why then to morrow morning shall be the day papa since you will have it so says Sophia Jones then fell upon his knees and kissed her hand in an agony of joy while Western began to caper and dance about the room presently crying out— Where the devil is Allworthy? He is without now a

portunely left the lovers to enjoy a few tender minutes alone

But he soon returned with Allworthy saying If you won t believe me you may ask her yourself Hast nut gin thy consent Sophy to be married to morrow? Such are your com mands sir cries Sophia and I dare not be guilty of disobedience I hope madam cries Allworthy my nephew will merit so much goodness and will be always as sensible as myself of the great honour you have done my family An alliance with so charming and so excellent a young lady would indeed be an honour to the greatest in England Yes cries Western but if I had suffered her to stand shill I shall I dilly dally you might not have had that honour yet a while I was forced to use a little fatherly authority to bring her to I hope not sir cries Allworthy I hope there is not the least constraint Why there cries Western you may bid her unsay all again if you will Dost repent heartily of thy promise dost not Sophia? Indeed papa cries she I do not repent nor do I believe I ever shall of any promise in favour of Mr Jones Then nephew cries Allworthy I felicitate you most heartily for I think you are the happiest of men And madam you will give me leave to congratulate you on this joy ful occasion indeed I am convinced you have bestowed yourself on one who will be sensible of your great merit and who will at least use his best endeavours to deserve it His best endeavours! cries Western that he will I warrant un ——Harkee Allworthy I ll bet thee five pounds to a crown we have a boy to morrow nine months but prithee tell me what wut hal me both my nephew and I were engaged be any occas on Shalt sup here please the lord Harry You must pardon me my dear neigh bour! answered Allworthy I have given a solemn promise and that you know I never break Why prithee who art engaged to? cries the squire ——Allworthy then informed him as likewise of the company —— Od zookers! answered the squire I will go with thee and so shall Sophy! for I won t part with thee to-night and it would be barbarous to part Tom and the g rl This offer was pres ently embraced by Allworthy and Sophia con sented having first obtained a private prom ise from her father that he would not mention a syllable concerning her marriage

Chapter the Last

In which the history is concluded

YOUNG Nightingale had been that afternoon, by appointment, to wait on his father, who received him much more kindly than he expected There likewise he met his uncle, who was returned to town in quest of his new-married daughter

This marriage was the luckiest incident which could have happened to the young gentleman for these brothers lived in a constant state of contention about the government of their children, both heartily despising the method which each other took Each of them therefore now endeavoured, as much as he could, to palliate the offence which his own child had committed, and to aggravate the match of the other This desire of triumphing over his brother, added to the many arguments which Allworthy had used, so strongly

As for the other, who really loved his daughter with the most immoderate affection there was little difficulty in inclining him to a reconciliation He was no sooner informed by his nephew where his daughter and her husband were, than he declared he would instantly go to her And when he arrived there he scarce suffered her to fall upon her knees before he took her up, and embraced her with a tenderness which affected all who saw him, and in less than a quarter of an hour was as well reconciled to both her and her husband as if he had himself joined their hands

In this situation were affairs when Mr Allworthy and his company arrived to complete the happiness of Mrs Miller, who no sooner saw Sophia than she guessed everything that had happened and so great was her friendship to Jones that it added not a few transports to those she felt on the happiness of her own daughter

There have not, I believe, been many instances of a number of people met together, where every one was so perfectly happy as in this company Amongst whom the father of young Nightingale enjoyed the least perfect content, for, notwithstanding his affection for his son, notwithstanding the authority and the arguments of Allworthy, together with the other motive mentioned before he could not so entirely be satisfied with his son s choice, and perhaps the presence of Sophia herself tended a little to aggravate and heighten his concern, as a thought now and then suggested itself, that his son might have had that lady, or some other such Not that any of the charms which adorned either the person or mind of Sophia created the uneasiness, it was the contents of her father's coffers which set his heart a longing These were the charms which he could not bear to think his son had sacrificed to the daughter of Mrs Miller

The brides were both very pretty women but so totally were they eclipsed by the beauty of Sophia, that, had they not been two of the best tempered girls in the world, it would have raised some envy in their breasts for neither of their husbands could long keep his eyes from Sophia, who sat at the table like a queen receiving homage, or rather, like a superior being receiving adoration from all around her. But it was an adoration which they gave, not which she exacted for she was as much distinguished by her modesty and affability as by all her other perfections

The evening was spent in much true mirth

tion of circumstances, is apt to be silent, and dwells rather in the heart than on the tongue, Jones and Sophia appeared the least merry of the whole company, which Western observed with great impatience, often crying out to them Why dost not talk, boy? Why dost look lation to matrimony and the loss of a maidenhead Nay, he would have proceeded so far on that topic as to have driven her out of the room if Mr Allworthy had not checkt him sometimes by looks, and once or twice by a 'Fie! Mr Western!' He began, indeed once to debate the matter, and assert his right to talk to his own daughter as he thought fit, but, as nobody seconded him, he was soon reduced to order

Notwithstanding this little restraint, he was so pleased with the chearfulness and good humour of the company, that he insisted on their meeting the next day at his lodgings.

They all did so and the lovely Sophia who was now in private become a bride too offi ciated as the mistress of the ceremonies or in the polite phrase did the honours of the table

the only persons present

Sophia had earnestly desired her father that no others of the company who were that day to dine with him should be acquainted with her marriage The same secrecy was enjoined to Mrs Miller and Jones undertook for All worthy This somewhat reconciled the delicacy of Sophia to the public entertainment which in compliance with her father s will she was obliged to go to greatly against her own in clinations In confidence of this secrecy she went through the day pretty well till the squire who was now advanced into the second bottle could contain his joy no longer but filling out a bumper drank a health to the bride The health was immediately pledged by all present to the great confusion of our poor blushing Sophia and the great concern of Jones upon her account To say truth there was not a person present made wiser by this discovery for Mrs Miller had whispered it to her daughter her daughter to her husband her husband to his sister and she to all the rest

Sophia now took the first opportunity of withdrawing with the ladies and the squire sat in to his cups in which he was by degrees deserted by all the company except the uncle of young Nightingale who loved his bottle as well as Western himself These two therefore pleasure though contrary perhaps to thy ex pectation Mr Jones appears to be the hap piest of all humankind for what happiness this world affords equal to the possession of such a woman as Sophia I sincerely own I have never yet discovered

As to the other persons who have made any considerable figure in this history as some may desire to know a little more concerning them we will proceed in as few words as possible to satisfy their curiosity

Allworthy hath never yet been prevailed upon to see Blifil but he hath yielded to the importunity of Jones backed by Sophia to settle £200 a year upon him to which Jones hath privately added a third Upon this in come he lives in one of the northern counties about 200 miles distant from London and lays up £200 a year out of it in order to purchase a seat in the next parliament from a neigh bouring borough which he has bargained for with an attorney there He is also lately turned Methodist in hopes of marrying a very rich widow of that sect whose estate lies in that part of the kingdom

Square died soon after he writ the before-mentioned letter and as to Thwackum he both of whom he flatters to their faces and abuses behind their backs But in his stead Mr Allworthy hath lately taken Mr Abraham Adams into his house of whom Sophia is grown immoderately fond and declares he shall have the tuition of her children

Mrs Fitzpatrick is separated from her hus band and retains the little remains of her fortune She lives in reputation at the polite end of the town and is so good an economist that she spends three times the income of her fortune without running in debt She main tains a perfect intimacy with the lady of the Irish peer and in acts of friendship to her re pays all the obligations she owes to her hus band

Mrs Western was soon reconciled to her niece Sophia and hath spent two months to-gether with her in the country Lady Bellaston made the latter a formal visit at her return to town where she behaved to Jones as to a per fect stranger and with great civility wished him joy on his marriage

Mr Nightingale hath purchased an estate for his son in the neighbourhood of Jones where the young gentleman his lady Mrs Miller and her little daughter reside and the most agreeable intercourse subsists between the two families

As to those of lower account Mrs Waters returned into the country had a pension of £60 a year settled upon her by Mr Allworthy and is married to Parson Supple on whom at the instance of Sophia Western hath bestowed a considerable living

Black George hearing the discovery that had been made ran away and was never since heard of and Jones bestowed the money on his family but not in equal proportions for Molly had much the greatest share

As for Partridge, Jones hath settled £50 a year on him, and he hath again set up a school, in which he meets with much better encouragement than formerly, and there is now a treaty of marriage on foot between him and Miss Molly Seagrim which, through the mediation of Sophia, is likely to take effect

We now return to take leave of Mr Jones and Sophia, who, within two days after their marriage, attended Mr Western and Mr Allworthy into the country Western hath resigned his family seat, and the greater part of his estate, to his son in law, and hath retired to a lesser house of his in another part of the [illegible] such success that the old gentleman declares he was never happy in his life till now He hath here a parlour and ante chamber to himself, where he gets drunk with whom he pleases· and his daughter is still as ready as formerly to play to him whenever he desires it, for Jones hath assured her that, as, next to pleasing her, one of his highest satisfactions is to contribute to the happiness of the old man, so, the great duty which she expresses and performs to her father, renders her almost equally dear to him with the love which she bestows on himself.

Sophia hath already produced him two fine children, a boy and a girl, of whom the old [illegible]

above a year and a half old, is sweeter music [illegible]

his lady, who love him as a father Whatever in the nature of Jones had a tendency to vice, has been corrected by continual conversation with this good man and by his union with the lovely and virtuous Sophia He hath also, by reflection on his past follies acquired a discretion and prudence very uncommon in one of his lively parts

To conclude, as there are not to be found a worthier man and woman than this fond couple, so neither can any be imagined more happy They preserve the purest and tenderest affection for each other an affection daily encreased and confirmed by mutual endearments and mutual esteem Nor is their conduct towards their relations and friends less amiable than towards one another And such is their condescension their indulgence, and their beneficence to those below them that there is not a neighbour, a tenant or a servant, who doth not most gratefully bless the day when Mr. Jones was married to his Sophia

PRINTED IN THE U.S.A